The plaintiff Garcias, resident in France, had agreed through Ardoin, banker of Paris, to take a twentieth part of a loan which, in 1834, Messrs. Ricardo, of London, had contracted with the Spanish government. As the plaintiff alleged, the terms of the contract were that he should have a share of all commissions and profits resulting from the loan transaction; but the defendants had refused to account with him on that footing, contending that he merely became a sub-purchaser of a certain share of the loan, and did not become a co-contractor or partner in the speculation. The difference between the sum accounted for by the defendants and that claimed by the plaintiff amounted to 15,000*l*. In 1838, the plaintiff had instituted proceedings in the courts of law in France against Ardoin, the defendants' agent in that country, to enforce his claims to a share of the profits and commissions, and the suit had been carried through the Court of Commerce, and the Court Royal, and was finally referred to judicial arbitrators, who decided that the defendants had accounted to the plaintiff; that he was not entitled to a general account; and that he had been settled upon the footing to which he was entitled to an account. This decision was made in Dec. 1840, and except upon questions of law there was no higher court of appeal in the French judicature. The bill was filed in April 1844, and prayed a general account of the loan transactions, of the commissions received by the defendants in respect thereof, and of their profits thereupon, as well as the profits they had made by using the plaintiff's share of the profits and commissions on the loan. To this bill the defendants put in a plea, which was in substance that they had fully accounted to the plaintiff, and had been discharged by competent judicial authority in France. The Vice-Chancellor of England had overruled the plea, holding that it did not shew that the matters decided by the French courts were the same as those in respect of which the plaintiff claimed by the present bill. From that decision the defendants appealed to the House of Lords. A motion was then made before the Vice-Chancellor to stay the proceedings pending the appeal, alleging that the accounts required by the bill were voluminous and involved the whole of the defendants' financial transactions since the period of the loan, as the profits to which the plaintiff asserted, though defendants denied his right, formed part of their general business capital. That if they answered at all, they must answer fully, and so give the whole of the trading accounts of their great establishment. It was held, however, that in the event of the appeal failing, the delay which the plaintiff would sustain from suspending the answer during the two years the appeal would probably be pending, would be an injury incapable of reparation, whereas, if the appeal succeeded, the costs of the answer would be the only inconvenience the defendants would sustain. The balance of inconvenience from suspending proceedings would therefore fall upon the plaintiff. The application was refused, and was now made, by way of appeal, to the Lord Chancellor.

Wakefield and Heathfield, for the appeal, contended that all the authorities, except Walburn v. Ingilby (1 Myl. & Keen, 79) were in favour of suspending proceedings in such a case as this, and they cited Wood v. Milner (1 Jacob & Walker, 636); King of Spain v. Machado (4 Russ. 560); Gwynn v. Lethbridge (14 Vesey, 585); Huguenin v. Basely (15 Ves. 180).

Bethell and Lewis, for the plaintiff, opposed the appeal motion, and contended that, under the circumstances of this case, the plaintiff was entitled to an answer, notwithstanding the appeal. The defendants had partially accounted to the plaintiff, and what was sought was a full account. They cited, The Warden and Canons of St. Paul's v. Morris (9 Ves. 318); Suisse v. Lord Lowther (Lord Chancellor, 1843); Waldo v. Caley (16 Ves. 213); Willan v. Willan (16 Ves. 216); Gwynn v. Lethbridge (14 Ves. 585); Nerot v. Burnand (2 Russ. 56); Taylor v. Rundell, Bute v. Stuart.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Irremediable mischief seems to be the issue on these occasions. The plea would not be rendered useless by giving the account, and I think it comes to the mere inconvenience of giving the account. Now there is nothing to satisfy me of the great inconvenience the defendants suggest. The account may consist of money expended in the purchase of bonds, of the sale of the bonds, the sums paid to Garcias, and the balance due to Garcias. That would be the whole account. If there should be a balance due to Garcias, then there must be an account of the employment of that balance by Messrs. Ricardo. There would have been no inconvenience in respect of the account, if the balance had been handed over to Garcias.

Wakefield.—Though the defendants deny that the plaintiff is entitled to any profits, yet, if they are compelled to answer, they must set out their profits.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The account is in consequence of the defendants not denying the plaintiff's interest. They are put to a collateral inconvenience; but that does not affect the cause. The defendants have appealed to the House of Lords on the main question, and on this motion you come to another tribunal. If you had gone to the House of Lords on this motion also, you might have applied to advance the appeal, or the House might have made some other arrangement. Such separate appeals are very inconvenient. If both appeals had been before me, I should have known the merits of the question at issue. But I have heard nothing to satisfy me that the defendants will suffer any material inconvenience by answering; naturally, the account is very simple; the account already delivered to the plaintiff was a simple one, and the further account required is of the same nature. I shall affirm the Vice-Chancellor's order, unless on an application to the Appeal Committee of the House of Lords, the appeal should be advanced, so as to come on for hearing in a few weeks; and then I will stay the proceedings for a short time. Otherwise, the Vice-Chancellor's order must be affirmed.

Re GRIFFITH'S Patent.

Re SAMUDA'S Patent.

Petition against sealing a patent—Two patents for the same object in favour of which the Solicitor-General has reported—Reference back to the Solicitor-General—Practice.

There were cross-petitions in these matters, Griffith having petitioned the Lord Chancellor not to affix the great seal to Samuda's patent, and Samuda praying the same thing as to Griffith's patent. Griffith's patent is for improvements in the method of using atmospheric pressure as applicable to railways and canals. The difficulty had been to communicate motion to the carriages and at the same time to keep the tube perfectly air-tight. This patent avoided the difficulty in this way: a narrow opening at the top of the tube is covered with leather or some other flexible air-tight substance, and a cog-wheel on the inside of the tube communicates motion through the leather to a cog-wheel outside of the leather, and to which the carriage is connected. Samuda's patent is for exactly the same thing, in combination with several other things. The Solicitor-General had allowed both patents, though he said at the same time that the two inventions clash with each other.

J. Russell, for Griffith's patent.

J. Parker, for Samuda's patent.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If Samuda's patent includes this, the Solicitor-General should not and would not have allowed it. It is a matter of course in such cases to refer back to the Solicitor-General to ascertain which patent has priority. I can put any date into the patent which the justice of the case requires. The issue into which the Solicitor-General has to inquire is, whether the patents do clash, and, if they clash, who first invented, not who presented the first petition. Then the matter may be brought before me. It is the business of the Attorney or Solicitor General to investigate and decide in the first instance whether the two inventions interfere with each other, or which of the applicants was the first and true inventor. I shall reserve further directions and costs until the Solicitor-General has made his report. The order of reference will be in the usual form.

Re BROOME, a Lunatic.

West India estates—Consignees—Securities—Allowance—Income Tax—Practice in lunacy.

A petition was presented to confirm the report of the Commissioner. The lunatic's property consisted entirely of estates in Barbadoes, and the consignees to whom the produce had been sent were Messrs. Daniels of Bristol, and Messrs. Barton and Co. of Liverpool. It was proposed that the money should be paid into court by the consignees, and that the committee of the estate should not be required to give security.

Blunt, for the petition.—The Commissioner had reported that 500*l*. a year was a proper sum to be allowed for maintenance, and it was asked that it should be paid exclusive of the income-tax.

Lewin, for the co-heiresses of the lunatic, asked that they should be allowed their costs, charges, and expenses, and that they should be at liberty to attend the passing of the accounts.

Messrs. Barton and Co. to whom a small portion only of the produce has been consigned, declined to enter into any security.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The Commissioner must settle the security. The consignees are, in fact, receivers. The allowance must be a clear income of 500*l*. a year free of the income-tax.

Re WARD, a Lunatic.

Sale—Lunatic's estate—Private Act of Parliament.

Walker supported a petition praying the confirmation of the Commissioner's report authorizing a contract for the sale of the lunatic's real estate, which had been entered into, and also authorizing an application for a private Act of Parliament to carry such contract into effect. The estate had been devised to Ann Ward, the lunatic's mother, for life, with remainder to her children, as tenants in common. The lunatic is one of ten such children. The Commissioner found that it was beneficial to the lunatic's estate that the contract for sale should be carried into execution.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What is the expense of an application to Parliament? However, it seems proper that the order should be made. It should be seen that the draft bill is in the usual form, that is, that it contains a clause requiring my sanction on the behalf of the lunatic to the sale of the estate.

Re WALKER, a Lunatic.

Contract for purchase of real estate—Reservation of questions between next of kin and heir-at-law—Form of conveyance.

In this matter the petition prayed that the committee of the estate should complete the purchase of certain real estates; that he should be at liberty not to defend a suit for specific performance of the contract which had been instituted by the vendor, and that the purchase-money, 3,600*l*. might be paid out of money now in the hands of the committee, so far as it would extend, and the deficiency made up out of the surplus rents of the real estates of the lunatic. The contract, which was for the purchase of a contingent reversionary estate, had been made by the agent of Miss Walker, the lunatic, in October 1842, and the suit to enforce it had been commenced subsequently. The jury had, however, since found that Miss Walker had been insane from the year 1841, prior to the contract. The vendor had now filed a supplemental bill against Mr. Sutherland and his wife, the committees of the lunatic's person and estate, to enforce the contract against the lunatic. It was desirable not to defend the suit, and that the contract should be completed.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The contract having been entered into after the lunacy, was clearly voidable; but the commissioner having found that the contract is for the benefit of the lunatic's estate, and that the suit ought not to be defended, the purchase-money must be paid out of the personal estate. But then it becomes a consideration who is to have the benefit of the purchase, after the lunatic's death, should she not recover. That question must be left open. I understand only one solicitor is engaged for all parties; the conveyance must be settled by the Commissioner, and it must be in such a form as will not preclude the question as to whether the estate purchased will go to the real or personal representative. It must be conveyed upon the trusts of the lunatic's will, in case she should recover and make a valid will, then upon trust for such person as under the circumstances might be entitled to the estate. The conveyance must not be in such a form as will preclude the claim of the next of kin.

Re LEE, a Lunatic.

Allowance—Inquiry as to carrying on the trade—Sale of estate.

Glasse supported the petition of the committee of the person and estate to confirm the Commissioner's report approving of the application of the whole income, 179*l.* to the support of the lunatic. He had been kept at an asylum at an expense of 200*l.* and the difference had been paid by his son. It was asked also that an inquiry might be made whether it would be beneficial that the lunatic's trade of a farmer should be carried on, and that a contract for the sale of part of the estate might be sanctioned.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The contract has been entered into by the son, after the lunacy, and without any order of the Court. There is no power to order the sale of a lunatic's estate, except for the purpose of paying debts. The report may be confirmed, and there may be an order for inquiry upon the other parts of the petition.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Tuesday, April 8.

BURDETT v. RAWSON.

Practice—Creditor's bill dismissed before decree, under what circumstances.

The plaintiffs, in a creditor's suit, applied by petition, before a decree, to the Court that the bill which had been filed against the personal representative of an intestate, and which had, after some time, been revived against the present defendant, might be dismissed, and the money in court ordered to be paid out to the personal representative. Petition granted without costs.

The original bill in this suit was filed so far back as the year 1817, against the personal representative of Mr. Beckwith Smith, who had died intestate. The bill was a common creditor's bill on behalf of themselves and all other the creditors of B. Smith, and prayed that the usual accounts of the intestate's property might be taken; also for an injunction and a receiver. A receiver was accordingly appointed by an order of the Court, 25th June, 1817, and an injunction issued against Ann Smith, the personal representative of the intestate, to restrain her from receiving any part of the intestate's estate. The receiver had got in various sums of money, and paid them into court, and the same were then standing in the name of the Accountant-General, in trust in the cause. Several abatements had happened during the progress of the suit, which was ultimately revived in March last, against the present defendant, T. S. Rawson, as the administrator de bonis non of the intestate

The plaintiffs now presented their petition, setting forth the various proceedings therein, and that no decree had hitherto been made. It stated that the said T. S. Rawson had come to an arrangement with the petitioners for satisfying the debts of the intestate, which the petitioners were themselves desirous of carrying into effect, and of not proceeding any further with the suit, and that the Bank Annuities and cash standing to the credit of the cause should be transferred and paid to the said T. S. Rawson, and prayed that the same annuities and cash, together with all dividends to accrue due thereon, should be forthwith transferred and paid out of court to the said T. S. Rawson, and that the suit might thenceforth stand dismissed.

J. Parker and Robson, in support of the petition relied upon the following cases.—Handford v. Storie (2 Sim. & Stu. 196); Wood v. Westall (1 You. 305) Ley v. Duckett (6 Cr. & Ph. 505).

Elmsley, for the administrator, offered no objection.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR, upon the petitioner submitting to dismiss the bill without costs, granted the order as prayed.

RICHARDSON v. RICHARDSON.

Will, construction of—Statute of Distributions.

A testator gave all his copyhold hereditaments and premises, and all his leasehold premises not before bequeathed, unto trustees and their heirs (subject as therein mentioned), upon trust for his son W. B. R. for life, and after his decease upon trust, as to a moiety thereof, as he should appoint, and in default of such appointment, "unto and among the person or persons who at the time of his death would, under the statute for the distribution of intestate estates and effects, be entitled to his personal estate [illegible] died intestate." The son, W. B. R. died [illegible] executed the power of appointment, [illegible] ing A. H. R. his widow, and four children (the plaintiffs) surviving him: Held, that the statute had reference to the persons only, and not to the shares, and that A. H. R. and her four children took equally as tenants in common.

William Richardson, the testator, by his will, bearing date the 18th December, 1839, after making certain bequests, gave and bequeathed all his copyhold hereditaments and premises, and all his leasehold premises not before bequeathed, unto certain trustees, the survivors and survivor of them, and the heirs, executors, and administrators of such survivor, for all his estate, term, and interest therein, upon trust to receive the rents, issues, and profits, and pay all fines, &c. and should pay and apply one moiety or half part of the clear rent, issues, and profits arising out of his said copyhold and leasehold premises (after and subject to the payment aforesaid) unto his son Richard Beecham Richardson during the term of his natural life, and from time to time as the same should be received, but not by way of anticipation, and for his own use and benefit.

The testator then directed as follows: "And from and after the decease of my said son, William Beecham Richardson, then upon trust, that they, my said trustees, the survivors and survivor of them, &c. do and shall assign, convey, and surrender one moiety or half part of and in the said copyhold and leasehold premises, unto such person or persons, and in such parts, shares, and proportions, and to and for such ends, interests, and purposes, as he, the said William Beecham Richardson, shall in and by his last will and testament, or any writing purporting to be his last will and testament, to be by him duly signed and attested, direct, limit, appoint, give, or bequeath the same; and in default of any such direction, limitation, or appointment, gift or bequest, and as to such part or parts of the said moiety of the said copyhold and leasehold premises of which no direction, limitation, or appointment, gift, or bequest, shall be made, or shall take effect, then upon further trust to assign, convey, or surrender the same moiety, and every part thereof, unto and among the person or persons who at the time of his death would, under the statute for the distribution of intestate estates and effects, be entitled to his personal estate in case he had died intestate."

The testator appointed his wife Sarah Richardson, William Hodges, and Charles Field, executrix and executors of his will, and died on the 3rd of March, 1840, leaving his wife and son, also a daughter, him surviving. Sarah Richardson, the widow, alone proved the will, and acted in the trusts thereof, her co-trustees having declined to act. The widow received the rents and profits of the premises, and paid a moiety thereof to her son William B. Richardson, according to the terms of the will, up to the time of his death. William Beecham Richardson, the son, died in March 1844, without having executed the power of appointment given to him by his father's will as before mentioned, leaving the defendant Ann Harriet Richardson, his widow, and his four children, the plaintiffs, him surviving. William B. Richardson, the son, was neither a freeman of London nor an inhabitant of the province of York, and therefore was not within the exception of the Statute of Distributions (22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10, and 29 Car. 2, c. 30).

The bill was filed by the four children of W. B. Richardson [illegible] st Sarah Richardson and Ann Harriet Richardson, submitting that they and their mother, the defendant, Ann Harriet Richardson, being the only persons who at the death of the said W. B. Richardson were, under the statute for the distribution of intestates' estates and effects, entitled to the personal estate of the said Wm. B. Richardson, were entitled as tenants in common to four-fifths of the said moiety of the said copyhold and leasehold premises, praying, among other things, that it might be declared that they were [illegible] titled. The defendant Ann H. Richardson put in her answer to the said bill, insisting that she was entitled to one equal third-part of the said moiety of the copyhold and leasehold premises.

Bacon, for the plaintiffs, contended that the testator meant nothing more in referring to the Statute of Distributions than to designate the persons who were to take, not the shares in which they were to take. The words "unto and among" were sufficient to enable the parties to take as tenants in common in equal shares. (Lashbrook v. Cock, 2 Mer. 70; Casterton v. Sutherland, 9 Ves. 445.)

Rogers, for the defendant Ann H. Richardson, submitted that the true construction of the testator's will was, that recourse [illegible] had to the Statute of Distributions, not merely for the intent of pointing out the individuals who were to take, but also to ascertain the shares which they were to take. That a number of authorities concurred in this principle, that where the Statute of Distributions is made the criterion as to the parties who [illegible] take, it is not only to be applicable to [illegible] ho shall take, but also to the portions or sha[illegible] (Thomas v. Hole, Forrest. 251; Walrogs v. Hardy [illegible] Bea. 358.)

The VICE-CHANCELLOR conceived that the words of the will [illegible] indicated that the persons whom the testator intended to take should take as tenants in common, and that both the plaintiffs and the defendant Ann H. Richardson must be deemed to take equally as tenants in common.

ROLLS COURT.

Tuesday, April 8.

* WALROND v. WALROND.

Sale set aside—Opening biddings on an advance of price—Tenure of property.

The bidding on a sale by the Court will not be opened as of course upon a sufficient advance in price being offered, if the tenure of the property be precarious, as upon life, &c.

Mylne applied to open the bidding upon the sale of property held under the church for two lives. The sale had been under the direction of the Court, and the property had been purchased by Mr. Parkes for 4,700*l.* but by order of the 14th November, 1844, the sale was set aside because the purchaser was connected with the solicitor in the cause. It was then sold to Mr. Evans for 5,500*l.* and the present application was made on an advance of 350*l.* He cited Cochrane v. Cochrane (2 Russ. & M. 684), Lawrence v. Halliday (6 Sim. 296), Domville v. Barrington (2 Y. & C. 723), to shew that the offer was sufficient to have the biddings opened.

Turner, contrà.—The person applying is an agent of Mr. Parkes, and the property being only held for two lives, loss might accrue if the biddings were opened. The nature of the property is to be looked to (Williams v. Attenborough, 1 Turn. & Russ. 7) as well as the amount of advance.

Chapman, for a mortgagee.

Mylne, in reply.—As to the objection in reference to the possible loss at the sale. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Suppose your client won't consent to secure the estate against loss?] He is liable for the loss, if any. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Suppose some one outbids him, would he be liable?] No; there would be that risk.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I cannot grant the application without a security against loss to the estate at all events. There is no objection but that. The sum offered is sufficient.

Re CAREW.

Application to tax the costs of taxation of a bill of costs of which more than one-sixth had been taxed off.

In this case, which is reported 4 Law T. 231, & 310, application was now made for taxation of the costs of taxation of the bill of costs of Mr. Carew, of which more than one-sixth had been taxed off, on reference to the taxing Master.

Kindersley and Hallett for the petition.—The costs of the former petition were reserved till after the Master's report. He struck off more than one-sixth; we are therefore entitled to costs of all.

Turner opposed the application.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—There is no doubt about the case, and Mr. Carew must therefore pay the costs.

Wednesday, April 9.

CARLON v. FARLAR.

A judgment is made a charge on lands by the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, but to obtain the benefit of it, there must be an order for payment within a given time; and if not, then a sale, a foreclosure is not the course.

Chandless applied for an order for foreclosure or for a sale. A judgment was obtained on the 11th June, 1840, which being made a charge by the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, it was now sought to obtain the benefit of it. The property charged consisted of an equity of redemption of freehold and copyhold lands.

White, for another judgment creditor.—He cited Page v. Smith (2 M. & K. 417.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—It comes to a question of time. We must first ascertain the debt, then appoint a time for payment. I take it the remedy is not by foreclosure, but by an order to pay at a given time; and if not, then a sale.

Friday, April 11.

STOPFORD v. CHAWORTH.

Will, construction of—Whether the children of a second marriage take under the terms of the will as well as those of the first.

Lewis Montague by his will, bearing date 9th February, 1817, bequeathed certain sums of stock to trustees upon trust, as to one moiety, for his daughter Georgiana absolutely, and as to the other moiety upon trust to pay the dividends thereof to his other daughter, Julia Fanny, for her separate use for life, and should she survive her husband and children, when that took place, they were to transfer the principal sum to her, her heirs and assigns; but should she die leaving her children and husband surviving, then to pay the dividends to her husband, Captain Wilbraham, for life, and upon his decease to her child or children, as she should appoint; to sons, upon attaining twenty-one, and to daughters upon attaining that age or upon marriage, and in default of appointment to her children equally; but should his daughter Julia Fanny die without having children, then he bequeathed that moiety of the stock to his daughter Georgiana. The testator died in May 1827 his daughter Julia Fanny having then no children but subsequently having two by Captain Wilbraham who died in September 1824. On the 8th July 1826, Mrs. Wilbraham married Sir Henry Bouverie, and died in June 1836, leaving two children by her second husband, as well as the two by her first. The question was whether the latter alone, or they with the former, took under the will.

Tinney, Turner, and Prior, for the children of the first marriage, argued that the testator had the first husband and the children of the then marriage alone in contemplation. If she was to have a transfer as directed by the will, it must mean after the death of her first husband and the children by him; for she could not ever have a transfer, if she was to have it only after outliving all her children. They cited Batsford v. Kebbell (3 Ves. 363); Wilkinson v. Adam (1 V. & B. 422).

Rolt, for Wilbraham Stopford, a son of a child of the first marriage.

Lloyd, for the children of the second marriage.—There were four contingencies: first, the daughter's surviving both husband and children; second, the daughter's death, leaving a husband and no children; third, the daughter's death, leaving both; and, fourth, her death, leaving children and no husband. In the second only is it to be maintained that the husband intended by the testator is Captain Wilbraham only; therefore there is enough in all the other cases to justify the construction that all the children are to take. He cited Barrington v. Tristram (6 Ves. 345).

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—If I were at liberty to act upon conjecture as to what the testator would do were he now to dispose of the property, I might be disposed to decide in favour of the children; but I cannot so act. Unfortunately, there is no general description or statement to give effect to the intention. The question is, whether the testator has used words which comprise children of the second marriage. It is said that Captain Wilbraham being introduced in only one clause, that clause only is limited to him, and therefore the other clauses are not so limited. If there was any general expression, without reference to the husband, which the daughter had at the date of the will, I should have been glad to lay hold of it; but there is none, and therefore the children of the first marriage alone take.

Friday and Saturday, April 11 and 12.

SIVELL v. ABRAHAM.

A B purchases from C D certain lands devised to him for sale, and C D agrees to obtain the execution of the conveyance by the heir-at-law, which was supposed necessary, or at least desirable. The purchase money is invested, and A B is let into possession. C D having failed to procure the execution by the heir-at-law, a bill is filed to compel him; and after putting in his answer, he obtains the execution, but does not give notice thereof till A B has taken the depositions of witnesses. Upon C D's refusal to pay the costs, A B passes publication and sets down the cause for hearing.

Held that, as it was only a question of costs, it was an improper course to proceed to a hearing. The plaintiff should have made a motion to dismiss with costs against the defendant.

In April 1835, Benjamin Leys devised certain freeholds to the defendant Abraham, to sell for certain purposes. They were accordingly sold to one Bennett, who sold the benefit of his contract to the plaintiff Sivell, of which due notice was given to the vendor. The plaintiff having required the deed of conveyance to be executed by the testator's daughter and heir-at-law, Mrs. Willis, the defendant agreed to procure or acquiesced in the propriety of procuring it; but there being some difficulty in obtaining it, the purchase-money was invested in stock, and a distringas put upon it, and the purchaser was let into possession. The dividends were regularly paid to Mrs. Leys, under the will, till 1840, when she died. The money being now distributable, the solicitor of Abraham wrote to the plaintiff that he intended to apply for a transfer of the stock, and on the very same day the plaintiff obtained a notice from the bank that the transfer had been applied for, and would be made in the usual time, unless steps were taken to prevent it. Accordingly the plaintiff filed his bill on the 11th October, 1841, for the specific performance of the agreement and for an injunction, which was granted. The defendant put in his answer, and various proceedings were afterwards taken. The defendant, however, in March 1844, for 30*l.* obtained from Mrs. Willis and her husband the execution of the deed, but did not give notice of it to the plaintiff till the 4th of June following. In the meantime the plaintiff had proceeded to take depositions in the cause. Upon giving notice, the defendant stated that though he was not bound, yet he consented to get the execution, and asked the plaintiff to dismiss the bill without costs on either side, or if he did not, he would apply to have it dismissed, and for the plaintiff to pay the costs. The plaintiff refused, and having by his bill prayed for costs, he passed publication, and set down the cause for hearing, and it now came on.

Kindersley, Wood, and Whitbread, for the plaintiff, contended that the transaction having from the first proceeded upon the footing that the defendant was to procure the execution of the deed by the heir-at-law, he was bound to do so, and not having done so, he ought to pay the costs of the suit. [His LORDSHIP here intimated an opinion that the plaintiff should not have gone on to a hearing, but should have brought the matter on upon motion.] There being no precedent for proceeding upon motion in such a case by the plaintiff, it was thought too great a risk to do so, and it was conceived no other course was open to him but that which has been taken, especially as the bill prayed for costs. However, the defendant ought to pay the costs up to the 4th of June, and if not those after, at least let there be none on either side.

They cited Bentham v. Wiltshire (4 Mad. 44).

Turner and Kinglake, contrà, cited Tylden v. Hyde (2 S. & St. 133); Forbes v. Peacock (11 Sim. 152); Breedon v. Breedon (1 R. & Myl. 413); Sowersby v. Lacy (4 Mad. 142).

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—This is a case in which the demand of the plaintiff being acceded to, the question is, who is to pay the costs. The only question was as to the conveyance by the heir-at-law, a question amicably discussed and acquiesced in by the vendor, that the concurrence was at least proper, if not necessary. It was not material at the time of the sale to have this concurrence, and it only became so on the death of the tenant for life, when the fund was to be distributed. The application then at the bank for a transfer rendered it necessary to file the bill, and after various proceedings the defendant obtained the execution required, and gave notice thereof to the plaintiff on the 4th of June, 1844. The more I consider the case, the more I am satisfied the application could have been made as to the costs upon motion. I cannot therefore allow the costs subsequent to the notice; but considering the situation of the parties by the correspondence, and that the heir-at-law was therefore a necessary party to the conveyance, and that the defendant threw the risk on the other side, and countenanced the proceedings, I give the costs up to the date of the notice.

DAY v. DAY.

Infants' contingent interest.

Where an arrangement had been entered into as to a contingent interest which was subject to the trusts of a settlement in which infants were concerned, the Court refused to carry it out, though the arrangement was clearly beneficial for the infants.

In this case a settlement was executed by Mr. and Mrs. Day upon their marriage, and by it certain trusts were declared of personal property. The trusts were, for the husband for life, then for the wife for life, and after the decease of the husband and wife, amongst the children of the marriage, as the husband and wife should jointly appoint, and in default of appointment, among the children equally. By the same settlement, the husband covenanted that if any property should devolve upon himself or his wife, of the value at any one time of 300*l.*, the same should be settled upon similar trusts. By a will the residue of certain personal property was given to a person for life, and after his decease the same was directed to be divided among all the children of the tenant for life who should be living at his death. Mrs. Day was one of nine children of the person at whose death this property was divisible. This suit was instituted for the purpose of carrying into effect an arrangement by which the fund was agreed to be divided into nine parts, though the payment would be postponed until the death of the tenant for life. The effect of this arrangement as to Mrs. Day's share would of course be that her children would have an absolute interest in the ninth instead of a contingent interest dependent upon Mrs. Day's surviving the tenant for life.

Bacon, for the plaintiff.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR mentioned Peto v. Gardner (2 Y. & C. C. C. 312), and desired that it might be looked into with reference to this case.

Bacon afterwards cited several cases, but

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he had no hesitation in saying that it would be for the benefit of the infants that the proposed arrangements should be made, but he must come to the same conclusion that he did in Peto v. Gardner, that the Court had no jurisdiction.

Costs—Shorthand-writer's notes.

Upon the taxation of costs of a motion for a new trial of an issue, the Court would not allow the expenses of shorthand-writer's notes of the judge's charge and evidence: the judge's notes and counsel's notes being considered the legitimate sources of information.

This was an application with regard to the taxation of costs consequent upon a motion for a new trial of issues sent by the Court of Chancery to be tried before a jury. The principal subject of dispute was as to the shorthand-writer's notes of the judge's charge and of the evidence, which notes had been furnished to the counsel upon their motion in this Court for a new trial.

K. Parker, Russell, and J. H. Palmer, for the plaintiffs.

Temple and Heathfield, for the defendants.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Reserving myself as to an observation made by Mr. Russell, I consider that it is the general rule that, upon applications for new trial, the short-hand writer's notes of the judge's charge or of the evidence cannot be allowed. The legitimate sources of information are the judge's notes and the counsel's notes. There may be particular circumstances to take a case out of that general rule. The question is, whether there is here sufficient to take the case out of the general rule. I think that there is not; and I consider that the counsel's notes are sufficient. I am of opinion that the notes of Mr. Stutchbury's evidence, which, by consent given during the hearing of the motion, were used upon that motion, cannot be allowed. I am of opinion that the circumstance of the consent being given makes no difference. Mr. Russell made a remark which is entitled to considerable attention. Upon a motion for a new trial in this court, it is not exactly the same thing as a motion for a new trial at common law. Generally it is not. The counsel can have no notes of the evidence taken at the trial, though it may happen that there may be a stray brief of one of the counsel engaged on the trial. As each counsel, however, takes his witness in turn, there cannot be complete notes of the evidence on any one brief. For that reason I think that counsel should be furnished with a copy of the evidence; and I think, therefore, that one copy of Mr. Justice Patteson's notes should be allowed.

SERVICE v. CASTANEDA.

Jurisdiction—Agent of foreign government—7 Anne, c. 12.

A person sent by the Spanish government to pay certain claims of the British Auxiliary Legion of Spain, and entirely bound by the directions of the Spanish ambassador here, is not subject to the jurisdiction of the Court.

The plaintiff in this case had been an officer in the British Auxiliary Legion of Spain; his claim upon the Spanish government for his services having been settled by the commissioners appointed by the British and Spanish governments, he received a certificate that his claim amounted to 598*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* which certificate was therein stated to be transferable by indorsement. One half of this sum having been paid in several instalments, the plaintiff, in October 1841, sold his certificate to the defendant, George Field, for 180*l.* and an indorsement to that effect was made by the plaintiff upon the certificate. Field received the whole of the sum remaining due upon the certificate, and upon the payment of the last instalment a memorandum was given to him stating that the certificate was cancelled, &c. and the certificate itself was given up by Field. The Spanish government having determined to grant a compensation of 5 per cent. upon the claims, on account of the delay which had occurred in their payment, advertisements were issued by the defendant Senor Castaneda, stating that on particular days he would pay the compensation upon the production of the memorandum given upon the payment of the last instalment of the claim. The plaintiff's solicitor accordingly demanded of the defendant Field the delivery of the memorandum, alleging that the compensation had not been sold to him; Field, however, insisting upon his title to the compensation, this suit was instituted against Field and Castaneda, and an ex parte injunction was obtained to restrain Castaneda from paying, and Field from receiving the amount of the compensation.

Wigram and H. Stevens, on behalf of the defendant Castaneda, moved to dissolve the injunction as it regarded him, insisting that the Court had no jurisdiction over him.

Heathfield, for the defendant Field, applied for his costs.

Russell and L. Mackeson, for the plaintiff, argued that the defendant Castaneda was not within the terms of the statute of 7 Anne, c. 12.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The simple question at present before me is whether, without reference to the merits of the plaintiff's claim, this injunction ought to stand against a gentleman who, in an affidavit not replied to, states that he is the "agent of her Catholic Majesty the Queen of Spain's Government"—and the Government here must be taken to mean the Queen of Spain—"for the discharge of certain claims, &c. and that he is engaged in no other profession, business, or capacity in this country whatever;—that as such agent he is attached to the Spanish Embassy, and is under the control and direction of her Catholic Majesty's ambassador from the Court of Spain to this country, and that he has no power, authority, or discretion of his own in regard to the payment or application of the said compensation, but is bound to act therein entirely in obedience to the directions he may from time to time receive from such ambassador." It is therefore very much the case of an inferior servant bound to obey the orders of an upper servant, both being servants of the same ʻtress' The affidavit then proceeds; that he has been informed and believes that he is a public minister of her Catholic Majesty in this country within the intent and meaning of an Act of Parliament made and passed in the seventh year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Anne, &c." There is no doubt that these claims have been a subject of public discussion between the two governments. But that at the same time might be perfectly consistent with some private right which a party might have against an ambassador. The question is as to the mode of enforcing it. In such a case the mode to be adopted is, for the party to apply to his own sovereign, and ask that sovereign to do him justice by making representations to the sovereign of the ambassador who is in this country. It is to be assumed that all sovereigns will do justice; but if one sovereign refuse it, there are proper modes of settling the dispute. The question here is only whether the ordinary courts are to interfere in a particular way. The statute of Anne, which has been referred to, is only declaratory of the law of the country. By the third section of that Act it is enacted, that "all writs and processes that shall at any time hereafter be sued forth or prosecuted, whereby the person of any ambassador or other public minister of any foreign prince or state authorized and received as such by her Majesty, her heirs or successors, or the domestic or domestic servant of any such ambassador or other public minister, may be arrested or imprisoned, or his or their goods or chattels may be distrained, seized, or attached, shall be deemed or adjudged to be utterly null and void to all intents, constructions, and purposes whatsoever." This injunction is wholly fruitless, unless obedience to it can be compelled by the arrest of the defendant or the seizure of his property. Can it be so against the defendant Senor Castaneda? If he cannot bring himself within the terms of the statute of Anne, as to which I give no opinion, he brings himself within the common law, part of which is the law of nations, which exists equally with the statute law, and which protects him from that proceeding which he now seeks to dissolve. I shall therefore dissolve this injunction, without giving any opinion upon the merits of the case. There is no application before me to dismiss the bill as against this defendant, and therefore I can do no more than dissolve the injunction against him. The injunction as to Mr. Field will of course remain.

Voluntary assignment—Bankrupt.

A deed which professed to be a voluntary assignment of part of a bankrupt's property in favour of his wife and children, and which was made a short time before the bankruptcy, was sustained, under the circumstances which were proved, dehors the deed.

This suit was instituted by the assignees of a bankrupt named Holyland, for the purpose of setting aside a deed dated the 8th of June, 1841, by which a sum of 3,310*l.* stock was assigned to trustees for the benefit of the bankrupt's wife and children. The circumstances of the case, as they appeared from the defendant's answers and the evidence entered into on both sides, are sufficiently stated in the Vice-Chancellor's judgment.

Wigram and Elmsley, for the plaintiffs.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR (without hearing the counsel for the defendants).—That the transaction in question was fairly and honestly designed, cannot, I think, be disputed. Still, as Holyland, who is represented as the author of it, has become bankrupt, the fairness and honesty of intention may be insufficient to support it. It is said that the settlement was a mere voluntary appropriation by him of his own property. To bring this case within the rule by which the settlement would be void, it must be an appropriation of his own property, and it must be voluntary: and plainly, ex facie the instrument, it was his own property, and it was a voluntary conveyance. If there were nothing more than the deed, the assignees would be entitled to set aside the settlement. Supposing them so entitled, I should upon the question of insolvency have no doubt. It is not necessary for me to decide whether the insolvency is proved or not. I come to the conclusion that at any period in 1840 or 1841 was solvency or insolvency material. It appears that Sam, a bachelor, who had many brothers and nephews and nieces, had brought up a young lady as his child, but who had no legal claim upon him. Upon his death, an unattested instrument was found, clearly not affecting real estate, but which, as the law was then constituted, it was supposed might affect personal estate. One of his brothers was his heir-at-law, and, upon the assumption and belief that the will was valid as to personal estate, this gentleman, with great generosity, and acting in a manner highly creditable to himself, devotes a certain portion of the real estate to the purpose declared by this will, and conveys some part of the real estate to secure an annuity of 100*l.* a year in favour of the young lady. All this was done upon the presumption that the will affected personal estate, and with a view to its taking full effect on the personal estate. They were afterwards advised by most competent authority, and, if I may say so, most properly advised, that the will was ineffectual even as to the personal estate From the moment of that discovery the heir-at-law acquired a right to be delivered from the appropriation of his property except upon the condition of having the will completed. It appears he did not insist upon this. Mr. Todhunter, one of the gentlemen who were to have acted as executors, appears to have been a friend of the family, an active and good-natured man, and he appears to have desired to secure the performance of the will. Under circumstances of some difficulty, he effects an arrangement with all the persons entitled to the distribution of the personal estate, of whom the heir-at-law was one, in such a way as, with the assistance of the heir-at-law, to leave this property clear for the young lady, allowing her husband, who was entitled to one-forty-eighth share, to become administrator, but not to retain to his own use what the family had agreed to confer upon the adopted child of the testator. The evidence proves to my mind that Todhunter executed the task he had imposed upon himself; and it was understood, with regard to so much of the personal estate as should be preserved after the arrangement with the next of kin, he should have the control of the application of it, with a view, no doubt, to enable him to make a settlement in favour of this young lady and her children. That, under these circumstances, this agreement was for valuable consideration, no reasonable man can doubt. A reversionary interest mentioned in the will falls into possession. The money is received by Todhunter's solicitor, and as early as August 1840, 3,000*l.* was invested. The settlement was not then executed; but in the month of June 1841, it was executed, the bankruptcy not taking place until 1842. If Mr. Todhunter had not before the bankruptcy concurred in the settlement, there might have been difficulty—difficulty, however, rather in the mode of proceeding, though the difficulty would not, perhaps, have been substantial. Though Todhunter did not execute the settlement, he, no doubt, was a party to the arrangement. This does not resemble a transaction not for valuable consideration. The mere circumstance that the deed represents it to be voluntary, is not of importance. The valuable consideration may be shewn by matter dehors the deed. As to the costs after the answer was put in, bearing in mind that assignees have more facility than other persons to examine into such matters, they have the less excuse for instituting a suit than others. If the assignees had doubted after the answer had been put in, they might have had a summons, or some process, to examine witnesses before the Commissioner. They must, therefore, pay their costs after the answer; but as to the costs up to and inclusive of the answer, the defendants must pay them.

Common Law Courts.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

HOWARD v. GOSSETT.

House of Commons—Privilege.

This Court will look into a warrant of arrest issued by the Speaker of the House of Commons against a party on a charge of contempt, for the purpose of ascertaining its legality in form and substance.

A warrant of arrest issued by the Speaker of the House of Commons is bad, if it does not distinctly specify the offence with which the party to be arrested is charged, and for which such warrant is issued.

This was an action for an assault and false imprisonment. The declaration was in the common form, for assaulting and laying hold of the plaintiff, and forcing and compelling him to go along a certain passage to a certain room, &c. &c., and then and there imprisoning him for a long space of time, without reasonable and probable cause, contrary to law, and against the will of the plaintiff, whereby he was much injured in his credit and circumstances. To this the defendant pleaded four pleas in justification. First, that before the time when, &c. there was a Parliament sitting at Westminster and that just before the time when, &c. to wit, on the 27th of Jan. 1840, certain matters were under discussion in the House of Commons, in respect of which it was considered to be necessary by the said House of Commons that the plaintiff should be questioned and examined by the said House of Commons, to wit, at the Bar thereof, in consequence whereof and in order to procure the attendance of the plaintiff at the Bar of the said House, to be examined as aforesaid, it was ordered by the House in pursuance of and in conformity with the ancient usages and privileges of the said House, and the law and custom of Parliament, that the plaintiff should attend the bar of the said House forthwith, of which said order the plaintiff then had notice; but that the plaintiff did not nor would attend at the bar of the said House, in obedience to the said order so made as aforesaid; but, on the contrary thereof, wilfully and contemptuously, and without reasonable cause or excuse, wholly neglected and refused so to do. Whereupon, it was ordered and resolved by the said House, in pursuance of and according to the ancient usages and privileges of the said House, and the law and custom of Parliament, that the plaintiff should be sent for and brought before the said House in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the said House; and that the Speaker should issue his warrant accordingly.

Averment.—That the Speaker did issue his said warrant in pursuance of and according to the said order of the House, and in pursuance of and according to the ancient usage and privileges of the House, and the law and custom of Parliament; and thereby required and authorized the Sergeant-at-Arms of the said House to take into his custody the said plaintiff, and bring him before the House; which said warrant was delivered by the said Speaker to the defendant, as such Sergeant-at-Arms, to be executed in due form of law; whereupon the defendant, as such Sergeant, and in pursuance and execution of the said warrant, did arrest the plaintiff, and did necessarily compel him to go in and along the said passages, and into the said rooms, &c. &c. in the declaration mentioned, using no unnecessary violence, and did imprison him for a short time, which was the assault and imprisonment complained of by the plaintiff in his declaration. The second plea was a similar one in substance, but alleged the arrest to have taken place in a lobby of the said House of Commons. The third and fourth were also similar, merely varying the statement of the order of the House for the attendance of the plaintiff; one plea stating that the order was to attend to answer a charge of having committed a breach of privilege, but both justified under the warrant. To these pleas there were special demurrers, alleging that it nowhere appeared in the said pleas that the defendant, in making the said arrest, was acting under any authority or process recognized by law; that the pleas did not shew why it was necessary for the plaintiff to attend the House, or what was the nature of the things for which he was to be examined, so as to enable this Court to judge of the necessity thereof; nor did they shew that the plaintiff had done any thing which rendered it compulsory on him to attend the House, or which gave the House any power to compel him to do so; nor did they shew that the warrant contained any charge of any offence committed by him, or shew why he was to be apprehended, nor how, under such circumstances, the House possessed any legal power to make the order in the pleas mentioned; further, that it was nowhere shewn for how long a time the plaintiff was to be kept in custody.

Kelly, Q.C. (S. W. Smith and Petersdorf with him) appeared to support the demurrer; and contended that the plea was ill on many grounds: First, the defendant must stand or fall by the warrant, which cannot be aided by any averment in the plea. Now the warrant is bad, as it does not set forth any offence alleged to be committed by the plaintiff, or any object for his arrest; further, it does not state for how long he was to be imprisoned; in one of the pleas mention is made of a supposed contempt—but it is nowhere shewn that the plaintiff was ever adjudged guilty of a contempt;—and it is submitted that the House have no power to commit a person on a charge of contempt, but only on a contempt found and adjudged; and further, that they have no power whatever to arrest a party to bring him before the House to answer a contempt; but only on a contempt found. Then as to the warrant; the defendant, it is contended, must stand or fall by it, as it is pleaded, and cannot take advantage of any other fact, although set forth in the plea; now, suppose, for instance, the warrant contained a false charge, the plaintiff, it is submitted, would be justified in resisting the officer, and might have killed him in so doing: then the question would be, was the warrant legal? and on that would depend the question, whether or not it was murder; for it is clear the House have only power to issue their warrant in certain cases; and it would be to answer to an action against their officer, for him to say that the House had issued their warrant for an offence over which they have no jurisdiction, as murder, for instance; now here no cause is shewn for the arrest; the warrant merely desires the Sergeant "to take into custody the body of the plaintiff, and bring him before the House," and this is the same in all the pleas. Now, it is contended, that even this Court has no power to arrest without specifying the cause for which the party is arrested. Then take the case of a conviction: the warrant must state the conviction and the cause thereof; the present warrant, however it is submited, is destitute of every requisite which a warrant should have; no offence is stated; it is not even stated that he is charged, or even suspected of any contempt, or any other offence whatever. How then is the party to know, from this warrant, whether he was right or no to resist it? If the House had an absolute power to arrest under all circumstances, this might be well enough as their simple mandate to arrest; but that cannot be contended for by the other side. Again, it is submitted, that if the House chose to commit a party under a warrant of this kind, and he brought himself up upon habeas corpus, if this warrant is to be held good he might be imprisoned for life. Then, can the defendant fall back on the other averments? On these pleadings it is submitted, that, as he has alleged that he arrested the plaintiff by virtue of a "certain warrant," he cannot, after that, rely on any other distinct alleged causes set out in the pleas. Suppose the case of a sheriff who justifies arresting a party under a writ of capias. He must stand by the writ, and, if that is bad, he cannot fall back on the judgment and justify under that. [COLERIDGE, J.—Suppose the case of an action against a magistrate, and the plea to be the general issue, and it turned out that he had issued a bad warrant, would not a good conviction be an answer?] Here we sue the officer, not the magistrate, and it is contended, that if this warrant is bad, the defendant cannot fall back on the proceedings of the House of Commons; but even if he can, still there is nothing shewn on the face of these pleas authorizing the House to arrest the plaintiff. They have no right to arrest by a writ of mesne process. They should have proceeded to adjudge him guilty of a contempt for not attending, and then issued their warrant to arrest and punish. This Court has never recognized the power of the House of Commons, or any other tribunal, to arrest on a mesne process to bring before the Court. Then, again, it is nowhere alleged that the House has any right to arrest, but merely that it is done by custom and usage; but it is submitted that the right ought to have been distinctly averred.

(R. v. Jones, 1 Saun. 197, n. 1; Coke Lit. 233, a; 3 Mod. 137; Steph. on Plea. 365, 5th edit.; Candle v. Seymour, 1 Q. B. 889; Coke, 2nd Ins. 52; 1 Black. The Solicitor-General (Waddington with him), contra.—By the demurrer there is a distinct admission that all that was done was done in conformity with the usual customs and usages of the House, as it is distinctly averred by the plea, and not traversed. This averment was wanting in the case of Stockdale v. Hansard, and distinguishes that case from the present. Then it is contended that the House has power to compel the attendance of witnesses; it is a court of original inquiry, which distinguishes it from other courts—such as the Queen's Bench, for instance: as that court can only proceed when set in motion by the complaint of some party by motion, information, or writ. Now, it is contended that the very power claimed by the House here was admitted by all the judges in the case of Stockdale v. Hansard. In early times the House never issued its warrant at all, but merely sent the officer of the House with the Speaker's mace, and brought any one before the House whom they required to attend there. Now, the Court, it is contended, is bound to make any favourable presumption in favour of the House; and if it is called on to make any presumption at all as to the warrant, it must presume that it is good. [COLERIDGE, J.—You read the plea as if it stated that this warrant was issued according to the privileges and customs of the House, which is not so.] It is not alleged on the other side that it is not in conformity with those privileges, and it is submitted that this Court has no right to question the validity of the warrant at all. The House of Commons is a court of judicature of equal power to the superior courts at Westminster, and no one of the superior courts can, it is submitted, inquire into the validity of a warrant issued by the other, but would suppose every thing to be done correctly. Then, it is submitted, this Court has no power to inquire into the formal mode by which the House exercises the privileges claimed by it, and have no right to look at the warrant; but even if you hold that you have, still the warrant is sufficient, as it is much more certain than the old modes by which the House exercised its privileges.

JUDGMENT.

The Court now delivered judgment as follows:—

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment upon this demurrer to the pleas; and I come to this conclusion for reasons which involve no question as to the privileges of the House of Commons, but depend entirely upon the form of the warrant and the mode in which it is pleaded as a justification. The declaration charges the defendant with seizing the plaintiff and compelling him to go along a passage to a room, and afterwards along another passage to another room, and then imprisoning the plaintiff, and then compelling him to return to the first-mentioned room, and there keeping him in prison. To this primâ facie trespass the defendant pleaded four pleas, each setting up in substance the same justification—that the House of Commons, in order to compel the attendance of the plaintiff before them, made an order that the plaintiff should be sent for, and brought before them in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and that the Speaker should issue his warrant accordingly, and that the Speaker did, in pursuance of such order, and according to the usage and privileges of the House of Commons, order that the plaintiff might be brought into custody before the House by his warrant, reciting that the House had ordered that he should be sent up in the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms, requiring and authorizing the defendant, being such Serjeant-at-Arms, to take into custody the body of the plaintiff, and that by virtue of this warrant the defendant did arrest the plaintiff, and did, in order to bring him before the House in obedience to the warrant, force the plaintiff to go along the passages and into the rooms and imprison him there, as mentioned in the declaration. To each of these pleas there is a demurrer, stating, among other causes, that the warrant does not shew why or wherefore the plaintiff was to be apprehended. It is to be observed, that the defendant justifies under the warrant of the Speaker, and under nothing else. He does not justify under the order of the House, nor under the order and the warrant taken together, but under the warrant solely. What he did he says was in execution of and in obedience to the warrant. Admitting then the privileges of the House and the validity of their order to the fullest extent, will the warrant, as stated in the plea, justify the defendant in doing that which, upon the face of the plea, he admits that he did? The warrant, reciting an order of the House of Commons that the plaintiff should be brought before them in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, directs the defendant to take the plaintiff into custody, and there it stops; it does not direct the defendant to bring him before the House, or to take him into custody in pursuance of the order, or that he may be dealt with according to the order, but simply directs the defendant to take the plaintiff into custody. Under this warrant the defendant justified not only the taking the plaintiff into custody, but the taking him first to one place and then to another place, and keeping him there in order to take him before the House of Commons, which he was not directed by the warrant to do. The plea states the order of the House to have been made according to the usages and privileges of Parliament, and that the Speaker was, according to such usage and privilege, directed to issue his warrant accordingly; and that the Speaker did, according to such usage and privilege, in order that the plaintiff might be brought before the House, direct by his warrant that the defendant should take him into custody; but the plea does not state that, by the usage or privilege of Parliament, a warrant to take the plaintiff into custody merely was a warrant not only to take him into custody, but to bring him before the House and to do all that was necessary for that purpose. Was the defendant then at liberty to do more than he was expressly directed by the warrant to do, because he would see by the recital of the order that it would require more to be done to fulfil it than was authorized or required by the warrant itself? or is the warrant to be construed as directing the defendant, not merely to take the plaintiff into custody, but to bring him before the House, and to do all that might be necessary for that purpose? The terms of the warrant are precise as to the duty of the defendant; and, independently of some usage or privilege, the existence of which is not shewn, there is no authority of which I am aware to warrant the addition, by implication or intendment, of a much greater power of disposing of the person of the plaintiff than is contained in the directions given in unambiguous terms to the defendant. Several cases were cited, in which the warrant of the Speaker, issued in pursuance of the order of the House of Commons, was set out at length; and, in all of them, the warrant was in terms fulfilling the order of the House. In Sir Francis Burdett's case (14 East, 11) the warrant of the Speaker recited the order of the House,—that Sir Francis Burdett should be committed to the Tower of London; and required the Serjeant-at-Arms to take into custody the body of the said Sir Francis Burdett, and forthwith deliver him into the custody of the Lieutenant of the Tower of London. These latter words would have been quite superfluous, if a direction and authority to the Serjeant-at-Arms to take Sir Francis into custody, without more, would have warranted him, not only in taking him into custody, but carrying him to the Tower of London. In the case of the Sheriff of Middlesex, which arose out of that of Stockdale v. Hansard (11 A. & E. 273), the warrant of the Speaker, after reciting the order of the House of Commons, required the Serjeant-at-Arms "to take the sheriff into his custody, and to keep them during the pleasure of the house." In both these cases, as well as in all others of which I am aware, the warrant of the Speaker gave to the Sergeant-at-Arms express authority to do all that he did in obedience to it. Golb's case (3 M. & S. 203) was cited for the defendant, to shew that the express authority given by the warrant might be extended by the recital of the order; but that case is very distinguishable from the present. That was a commitment to the gaoler to keep the prisoner "until he should be discharged by due cause of law;" and it was objected that as the commitment was not for a crime, some period for which he was to be detained should have been inserted. The commitment recited an adjudication that he should be committed "until he had rendered an account," and it was held that, coupling the conclusion of the warrant with the recital, the time for which he was to be kept sufficiently appeared; and the conclusion, "until discharged by due course of law," was explained by the recital. It is besides to be observed, that the express terms of the warrant authorized the gaoler to do all that he actually did, namely, to keep the prisoner in his custody; but here the express terms of the warrant do not authorize the defendant to take the plaintiff before the House, or to any particular place; and it is proposed to use the recital not to explain, but to give an additional authority to the defendant beyond that which is given in express and definite terms by the direction of the warrant. It was also contended for the defendant, that any defect in the warrant was supplied by the averment in the plea that the warrant was made in pursuance of, and according to, the usages and privileges of the House of Commons. This may be so, and the warrant, as far as it goes, may be in accordance with the usages and privileges of the House of Commons, and may warrant the taking of the plaintiff into custody; but the averment does not include that which the defendant did beyond the authority given by the warrant expressly, and will not remove the objection taken to the justification. It is quite unnecessary to consider whether the defendant could or could not have justified under the order and warrant together, by the introduction of other averments in his plea; for he has justified under the warrant only—whether it was by mistake or intentionally that the warrant was drawn in the form in which it is, it is not now very material to inquire. The form is unusual, and, as it seems to me, imperfect, and, without at all questioning the privileges of the House of Commons, I am of opinion the warrant will not support the justification; and although the objection upon which I form my opinion may perhaps appear technical and formal, it is in truth important, as it is founded upon the principle that an authority giving the right to seize or restrain the person of another must be strictly pursued, and the defect in the express authority given to the ministerial officer to arrest cannot, where the terms are clear and precise, be supplied by intendment. I therefore think the plaintiff is entitled to judgment.

COLERIDGE, J.—It is unnecessary for me, after the judgment of my brother Wightman, to repeat the whole of the record. It appears to me that the questions which arise on this demurrer are five:—First, is the warrant stated in the pleas sufficient, if examined on ordinary principles and without reference to its having been issued by the Speaker in obedience to the order of the House of Commons? Secondly, if not, does that circumstance vary the principles on which it is to be tried, so as to make it sufficient? Thirdly, if not, are its defects such as to prevent it from being a justification to the defendant as an officer of the House, bound, it may be said, to obey? Fourthly, if so, may these defects be helped by facts stated in the pleas, showing under what circumstances the warrant issued? And fifthly, if so, are those facts, as stated in any one of the pleas, sufficient for the purpose? The statement of the warrant, which is the same in all the pleas, is this:—After reciting that the said House of Commons required the attendance of the plaintiff, it ordered that the plaintiff should be sent for and brought before the said House in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and that the Speaker should issue his warrant accordingly; whereupon the Speaker, in pursuance of the order and resolution, and in pursuance of and according to the ancient usages and privileges of the House, and the law and custom of Parliament, by his warrant in that behalf duly made (which warrant recited the order of the House), did require and authorize the Sergeant-at-Arms to take into custody the body of the plaintiff." The warrant, therefore, discloses that the Speaker issued the warrant in pursuance of an order of the House to send for the plaintiff in custody, and commanded the defendant to take him into custody, but it does not shew that the party was charged with any offence or had been convicted of any: still less does it shew the nature of the offence; neither does it expressly direct the Sergeant-at-Arms where to take the body of his prisoner, nor how long to detain him. If for the House of Commons in this warrant you substitute any other authority known to the constitution, it is quite clear that the warrant would be bad; the party sought to be arrested under it might resist lawfully, and if arrested would be discharged upon the return of such a warrant to a writ of habeas corpus. It would be a waste of time to enlarge upon this point. I would only refer to the Petition of Right, 3 Chas. 1, sec. 5; and 10 Lord Coke's Commentaries on Magna Charta, chap. 29, pp. 52, 53; and 2 Lord Hale's Pleas of the Crown; this last the rather because, although he is inclined in some measure to qualify the strong language of Lord Coke, yet the utmost latitude that he will allow is, that there must be a tolerable certainty in the body of the warrant for what it is, as for felony generally, although the particulars are best to be expressed. But, secondly, as this warrant is issued by the authority of the House of Commons, it may be answered, first, that the cause of arrest is sufficiently stated in the order of the house, and the order of the House is sufficient cause; secondly, that if that were not so, still the warrants of the House are not to be dealt with as the warrants of ordinary magistrates, and that the form here adopted is sufficient; thirdly, that the plea avers and the demurrer admits this warrant to be issued in the form authorized by the law and usage of Parliament, which would conclude against all objections. The [illegible] of these answers, which applies only to the omission of the statement of the cause of arrest, is founded upon the supposed authority of the House, and involves this proposition, —that the House may order its officers to arrest any man and bring him in custody before them at its mere will and pleasure, without previous summons; without any offence charged, or adjudication of guilt; without any purpose to be answered; in a word, without any cause but their mere will and pleasure. If this proposition be true, the cause of arrest is undoubtedly stated, and that objection to the form of the warrant fails. But is the proposition true? It is, I believe, the first time that it ever was asserted, and, as it distinctly places the personal liberty of every commoner in the land within the irresponsible power of the House—as it asserts that, whether charged or uncharged, guilty or innocent, contemptuous and disobedient, or submissive and obedient, the House may imprison any one, it should surely have been shewn by those who maintain it on what foundation it rests, what authority can be cited for it, whether it has been uniformly claimed, or whether it grows as a necessary consequence from the great duties which the House has to perform, or the general acknowledged authority with which it is armed by the constitution. Nothing of this kind was attempted in this argument: it was not necessary for the argument in Stockdale v. Hansard (9 A. & E.), but neither does it follow from any thing there maintained. That the Commons are, in the words of Lord Coke, "the general inquisitors of the realm," I fully admit. It would be difficult to define any limit by which the subject-matter of their inquiries can be bounded: it is unnecessary to attempt to do so now; and I may be content to state that they may inquire into everything which it concerns the public weal for them to know; and they themselves, I think, are intrusted with determining what falls within that category. Coextensive with the jurisdiction to inquire must be their authority to call for the attendance of witnesses —to enforce it by arrest when disobedience makes that necessary, and when attendance is required and refused. There may be a cause of arrest though there may be no specific disclosure of the subject-matter of inquiry, because that might often defeat the purpose of the examination. All this, however, which I will not merely admit, but maintain, falls immensely short of the proposition now in hand. It is to be observed that the pleas themselves, so far from resting on this contain a full statement of circumstances, shewing that in the particular instance the Commons were fully justified in requiring a warrant to be issued Had the Solicitor-General conceived that there was by the constitution of Parliament such an authority as is now contended for, it is inconceivable that much shorter and more proveable plea would not have been put upon the record, as the mere issuing of a warrant by the order of the House of Commons would be sufficient. In truth, common learning in the constitution, common justice, and common sense, equally revolt against it. If such a limitation on the birthright of Englishmen existed, so important, so remarkable in its cause and consequences, it must have been stated, although it would have been recorded with regret, and I must think with something like shame, in some one of those many definitions of our most valuable right—the right of personal liberty, with which our text writers abound. I pass on to the second answer—that, with regard to the transcendent power of the House, and its identity with the people at large, and with respect to its great dignity, the warrants which it issues are not to be dealt with as those which proceed from tribunals co-ordinate with ourselves or inferior. I cannot admit that the degree of strictness in which formal accuracy is to be required in warrants is to be measured, or ought to be, by the dignity of the courts from which they issue. Experience has shewn that the liberty of the subject, with which we are intrusted, is involved in the accuracy, in point of form, of legal proceedings. For that reason accuracy is required, and, in that view of it, it is not a paradox to say, that form becomes substance, and the higher and more important the authority, the more strict ought its proceedings to be; and more accuracy may reasonably be expected from a wider extent of jurisdiction in one case than is expected in the other. There is a difference in the method of procedure, but with this qualification the rule is as I have stated; and as it is no breach of respect to suppose that the highest functionary of the most exalted court may improvidently err in point of form, however honest his intention—as the most mischievous results might follow to individuals or to posterity if the inaccuracy were allowed to pass into a precedent, and the more mischievous in proportion to the greater power of the Court,—it is no breach of respect, but the bounden duty of the Court, respectfully to set such erroneous proceedings aside. It is trifling with language to speak of the present warrant as defective in form only. If the House cannot arrest at its own mere pleasure and without cause, to omit to state any cause, and to rely on its mere pleasure, is to proceed with one essential of the jurisdiction absent. If the only objection to the warrant had been, that it omitted to state expressly for what time the plaintiff was to be in custody, in whose custody to be kept, or where to be carried by the Sergeant, I think it might be answered, that all this might be collected with reasonable certainty enough from the recital, at least sufficiently so for the purpose of protecting the officer in his obedience; but there is nothing from which the cause for issuing the warrant can in the most remote degree be gathered. Lastly, it is said, from the language of the pleas, we are bound to take it that the form of the warrant is according to the ancient usages and privileges of the House, and the law and custom of Parliament. If the effect of the language of the record is that the plaintiff has admitted this, then I also distinctly admit that he is answered; as against him the law of Parliament must be taken to be as he admits it;—and whenever a court of law finds the law of Parliament applicable to the case before it, it is as much bound to govern its decisions by it as in another case by the common or statute law of the realm. The law of Parliament is parcel of the law of England, of the same authority as any other parcel. This, therefore, is merely a question of construction. The first plea states an order by the House in pursuance of, and according to, its ancient usages and privileges, and also the custom of Parliament as follows, that is to say, that the plaintiff should be sent for and brought before the said House in custody of the Sergeant, and that the Speaker should issue his warrant accordingly. There can be no doubt that these last words import merely that the Speaker should issue the warrant in such legal and accustomed form as would legally effectuate the order of the House; but nothing can be collected from them as to what is the legal and accustomed form, and they will not give validity to a warrant in any but the legal and accustomed forms. The plea recites that the Right Honourable George Shaw Lefevre, Speaker of the House of Commons, in pursuance of and according to the ancient usages and privileges of the House of Commons, did order that the plaintiff should be sent for, and brought before the said House, in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and that the Speaker, in pursuance of the order and resolution last-mentioned, by his warrant in that behalf duly made, after reciting that the House ordered the plaintiff should be taken into the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms attending the said House; did require and authorize the Sergeant-at-Arms to take into custody the body of the plaintiff. It is a maxim in the construction of pleading, that every thing shall be taken most strongly against the pleader; but I prefer to consider it without reference to any such principle. It appears to me clear, that, construed candidly and by the light of common sense, all that relates to the usages of the House and the law of Parliament relates only to the jurisdiction of the Speaker and his act in issuing the warrant to effectuate the resolution of the House. All that relates to the quality of the warrant itself is summed up in the words, "in that behalf duly made." But it is now settled law that the word "duly" will not supply the place of a specific allegation of any material requisite in the validity of the act. If it were necessary that this warrant should be under the seal of the Speaker, to allege that it was duly made would not cure the want of an averment that it was under his seal (Everard v. Paterson, 6 Taunt. 62, 65); à fortiori it will not cure the want of an averment that it was made according to the form and with all the incidents required by the usages of the House and the law of Parliament. It was said that we must presume the warrant to be in form and according to the usages of the House; but if upon that its validity will depend, and that would have been a traversable fact, how upon demurrer, can we presume it? We might thereby bar the plaintiff, when he might be in a condition to dispute the fact, upon a false assumption. Surely this would not be equal justice. I conclude, therefore, thirdly, that the warrant, as it appears upon these pleas, is defective. But it may reasonably be contended, [illegible] its defects, it is [illegible] in a warrant that ought to deprive him of protection for obedience to it. I think the law justifies the argument thus stated, and common sense and justice entirely sanction it; but it was also carried in the defendant's "points," and by the Solicitor-General in argument, to an extreme which one reads or hears with regret, and which ought never to be heard in a court of justice without provoking a direct denial. The defendant's first point states that he, being an officer of the House, is protected by an order of the House, directing him to do to the plaintiff the identical act complained of, and such an order is of itself, and without more, an answer to the action. In argument this point (although stated to be unnecessary for the defence) was insisted upon; no exception was admitted to its truth—no limit imposed upon the generality of the proposition. "What the quality of the act commanded may be is not to be inquired into; it is enough that the House has ordered it, and, as the House is irresponsible, so must its officer be." I do not wish to misrepresent the language used; but I think I am bound so to understand it as resting the defence of the officer, not on the quality of the thing commanded, but on the unlimited extent of the authority from which the command proceeds. If this were not so, language the most alarming has been wantonly or carelessly used by those whom I, with reason, respect too much to believe them capable to be wanton or careless in any matter, least of all in such a matter as this; but, so understood, I venture to say, the proposition is not only untenable, but monstrous. Extreme as it is, it might not be unreasonably met by extreme suppositions; a proposition universally affirmative cannot be true if the negative of it be true in any one particular; and it is no answer to say that such extreme exercise of power in our representative body cannot be respectfully, or even decently presumed. I presume nothing. We ought to have, I admit, the fullest confidence in the humanity, justice, honour, and integrity of the House, as it is entitled to our most sincere veneration; but we have a right to consider our liberties as independent of any such qualities in those who are in authority, and resting upon the law, as a thing not precarious, but which we hold by right. When Lord Camden delivered his memorable judgment in the case best reported in the State Trials, under the title of "Seizure of Papers," he thought it a legitimate mode of proving the illegality of the warrant to shew the consequences of its being legal—that it would place at the discretion of the Crown the secret papers, cabinets, and bureaus, of every Englishman in the land, however innocent. If time allowed, and I were so disposed, how much more strong a picture, without the slightest exaggeration, might be drawn of the state we should be in by law as to the security of property, liberty of person, safety of character, or life itself, if the proposition contended for on the part of the defendant were really sanctioned by that law! But it is needless, and I gladly forbear— it is enough to say that the law is supreme over the House of Commons, as over the Crown itself. If the limits of the law be passed by either (though for the most satisfactory reasons they are themselves irresponsible) the law requires a strict account of their acts in the persons of their agents, and these acts, according to the nature of their illegality, will be to be answered for civilly or criminally. The question, however, recurs, whether those defects in the warrant are of such a nature that it is not a protection to the officer; and this must be considered as at common law. At common law I take the test to be, whether the defect in the warrant goes to the jurisdiction of the authority issuing it. If the magistrates had no jurisdiction, or if a want of jurisdiction appears on the face of the warrant, the officer is not bound to obey it, and it is void. That principle I find thus stated, or illustrated, by Willes, Chief Justice, in delivering the judgment of the Court in Morse v. James (Willes, 122). "It has always been held (says he) that a constable may justify under a justice's warrant in a matter wherein the justice had a jurisdiction, although the warrant be never so faulty; but that if a justice of the peace make a warrant to a constable to arrest a man upon an action of debt, such warrant will not justify the constable, because he was not obliged to obey, and must take any step at his peril, as it was in a matter concerning which the justice had no jurisdiction." The expression, "though the warrant be never so faulty," is too strong and general to be quite accurate. A justice of the peace has jurisdiction to cause the apprehension of a party charged on oath with the commission of a misdemeanour; yet, if either the Christian name of the party be left a blank, and no reason stated for the omission, or only an imperfect description of the individual, as "—— Hedge, son of George Hedge," it has been decided by all the judges that resistance would be lawful, and the killing of the constable no murder. Now it could not be contended that the constable was bound to execute what the party might lawfully resist even to the death, and the ground on which the constable's justification can alone be put, the act itself being primâ facie illegal, is, that a lawful authority commanded him, and therefore made it his duty to obey. I have examined many parts of Lord Coke and Lord Hale upon this point, but it is not easy to extract a certain rule from them, nor to reconcile them with each other. The law, with regard both to the form of warrants and the authority of magistrates to issue them was not so accurately settled when they wrote as it has since been. Even Hawkins, at a later date, leans to this opinion. He says "The constable may and ought to execute a general warrant to bring a person before the justice of the peace, to answer such matters as shall be objected against him on the part of the king, for that the officer ought to presume the justice has jurisdiction, unless the contrary appear and it may often endanger the escape of the party to make known the crime which he is accused of." Neither this opinion nor the reasons could be maintained at this day. In 2nd Instit. Lord Coke considers this matter of the requisites to a good warrant in two places—the commentary on Magna Charta, and that of the statute De frangentibus prisonam. What he says in the latter case would be more unfavourable to the defendant, but ought not to be relied upon, because it is said with particular reference to the statute. In the former he is treating expressly of imprisonment, lawful or unlawful, as that will depend on the goodness or badness of the warrant. One of the requisites to make it good, as he asserts, is the statement of the cause on its face. Among his reasons is the impossibility of the Court dealing with the case on the return to the habeas corpus, unless the cause of the imprisonment appears as he states. "The petition of right has now made an end of the question." That statute, it will be remembered, recites the grievance that "divers subjects had been lately imprisoned without cause shewn," and provided against it for the future. Having shewn what is unlawful imprisonment in this, as in other respects, he comes to the remedies, and among them enumerates this action of false imprisonment, not making any distinction, it should seem, between the magistrate who issues and the officer who executes the warrant. Lord Hale, in the Pleas of the Crown, 111 and 573, states his opinion, "that a warrant not containing the cause especially, but being only general, to answer such matters as shall be objected, is not void, but only erroneous, and will be a justification for the officer acting under it." At 460, he says, "Although the warrant of a justice be not in strictness lawful, as if it express not the cause particularly enough, yet if the matter be within his jurisdiction as justice of the peace, the killing of such officer in execution of his warrant is murder, for in such case the officer cannot dispute the validity of the warrant if it be under seal of the justice." For this he cites the year-book of the 14th of Henry VIII., page 16, which is not a satisfactory authority in reference to it. All the judges seemed to think that a justice could not arrest for felony, but the majority thought, as he was a judge of record, and had a seal of office, a warrant under his seal would protect the officer, although the matter was out of his jurisdiction. Again, Lord Hale (page 518) states, that a general warrant, upon a complaint of robbery, to apprehend all persons suspected, and to bring them before, &c. (leaving it with, &c.), was ruled void, and false imprisonment lie against the officer. Understood in one, and that the most reasonable sense, the test of jurisdiction is the safest and most generally applicable that can be suggested—the jurisdiction, namely, to arrest upon the fact stated in the warrant. If the warrant in the shape in which it is given to the officer is such that the party may lawfully resist it; or, if taken upon it, may be released on habeas corpus, it is a warrant which in that shape the magistrate has no jurisdiction to issue, which therefore the officer need not have obeyed, and which at common law, on the principle laid down, will not protect him against the action of the party injured. Where the cause is expressed but imperfectly, the officer may not be expected to judge as to the sufficiency of the statement, and therefore, if the subject-matter be within the jurisdiction of the magistrate, he may be bound to execute it, and, as a consequence, be entitled to protection: when no cause is expressed, there is no question as to the want of jurisdiction. That is this case, and I am therefore of opinion that the obedience of the defendant was voluntary, and not protected by the warrant. I come, therefore, to the fourth question, whether we may look to the facts alleged in the pleas to supply that which is wanting in the warrant itself? and I have necessarily anticipated much of what I should have said on this point in considering the last preceding question. Upon principle, this seems a question very easy of answer. Why is it necessary to state at all the cause on the face of the warrant? Several reasons are given in the text-books; not the least important is, that the party called upon to submit to the process of law may know what it is that is charged against him, and for what it is that he is called upon to deliver himself up a prisoner. If no cause, or an insufficient cause appear, he takes his measures accordingly; should he resist and kill or injure the officer in resistance, and be brought to trial, it could not be contended that any fact could be added to the statement in the warrant to his prejudice. The act with which he is charged must take its character from the circumstances as they then stood; he was resisting a wrongful imprisonment—wrongful because the officer was not armed with a legal authority for arresting him, and that is the act for which he is to answer. This reasoning equally applies if he submits and brings his action for damages. Whatever cause for imprisoning he may have, the action lies, because the imprisonment of which he complained as unauthorized and wrongful. As well might a new warrant be subsequently granted to the officer and relied upon by him as a defence, as facts he added in a plea to help out a defective. These facts only shew that he might have been well arrested, not that he was, which is the question at issue. We may come nearer to the point, and suppose not only a good cause, but a good warrant; and supposing the constable has left it at home and arrests him without any, the imprisonment would be clearly illegal; it could not have been said to be effected under and by virtue of the warrant. Surely no averment in pleading could be allowed to cure the defect. Nor is this a mere form. We are bound to look, beyond the mere instance, to evils which the precedent would let in if any laxity were allowed in these proceedings, by which our property, or our liberty, or lives are to be affected. The case thus standing upon principle, I do not find any authority cited which looks the other way. The cases most nearly in analogy are those of commitments by magistrates after conviction, and these all maintain the argument for the plaintiff. The conviction will not defend the magistrates unless the commitment agree with it and the execution be regular. The legislature has interposed by the 7 & 8 Geo 4, c. 30, s. 39, to protect defective commitments, if they allege conviction, and there be a good and valid conviction to sustain it. Our own practice on returns to habeas corpus, with a certiorari bringing up the depositions in felony, proceeds upon the same principle. I think, therefore, that we are not at liberty to look to the facts stated in the plea for the purpose of curing the defects in the warrant. It is unnecessary, therefore, for me to consider their effect; they are very properly pleaded, for they shew that the Speaker had jurisdiction to issue a warrant, but they do not shew that the warrant he did issue was a lawful one. Rogers v. Jones (3 B. & C. 409), Wilkes v. Clutterbuck (2 Bing. 483), are in accordance with this. I come to this conclusion with the most sincere regret, as I cannot but see, on the admitted facts, that the House was pursuing an inquiry strictly within its province; and it is to be lamented that its course should be obstructed by inadvertence in the language used in the proceedings necessary to enforce due obedience to its commands, or that this Court, or any member of it, should even appear to be in conflict with it. It is a consolation that the difference is only apparent; no question of privilege or jurisdiction is really at issue: one or two propositions undoubtedly have been put forward, which I have been compelled to notice and dissent from, but this has not been with reference to any privilege of the House. We were indeed told, to the journals of the House we must refer for the law of Parliament. I agree with the remark, that the of Parliament must govern us in this case. The usage of Parliament, meaning thereby the clear, ancient, and uniform usage, is the law of Parliament; but on reference to the journals, no warrant was produced in this form, or open to these objections. It was said, in earlier times the House arrested without written warrant, and no doubt that appears to be so, but this avails nothing in the argument unless it can be shewn that the Sergeant did not orally communicate to the party the cause for which he was summoned or arrested. It is perfectly consistent with what appears that he did so, and we ought to conclude that he did; for we must presume that the House of Commons would proceed in the manner most consistent to reason and justice, and in analogy to the common law. The conclusion, on the whole, to which I have come is, that our judgment ought to be for the plaintiff.

WILLIAMS, J.—I have the misfortune to differ from the rest of the Court in this case. It is some satisfaction, however, to think that this difference does not take place on any question affecting the existence or extent of the privileges of the House of Commons. No doubt was attempted to be raised on this point in the argument of the learned counsel for the plaintiff; the objection made to the plea, and the right of the plaintiff to the judgment of the Court, were made to rest exclusively on the form of the Speaker's warrant, as set forth in those pleadings. A few additional words, as I understand that argument, would have removed all doubt and difficulty from the case. If in the warrant of the Speaker the direction to the defendant had been, not merely to take the plaintiff into custody, but him safely to keep during the pleasure of the House—and I do not understand what validity the warrant could receive from that addition—then I should have been unable to distinguish this case from that of the Sheriff of Middlesex (11 A. & E.); because, although in the present there is not, as in that case there was, a direct resolution or adjudication of a contempt, yet a contempt of the House of Commons and of its undoubted privileges plainly appears from the undisputed facts of this case. It may be convenient, therefore, thus early in the course of the remarks I am about to offer, to deal at once with that question, and to consider what were the circumstances and what the occasion upon which the plaintiff was taken into custody by the defendant, the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons, and in so doing I shall not deem it needful to travel out of the first plea, and the allegations therein contained. It appears then from that plea that certain matters were under discussion in the House of Commons in respect of which it was considered by the House to be necessary that the plaintiff should be questioned and examined at the bar of the House, and it was thereupon ordered by the House that the plaintiff should attend the said House forthwith; of which order the plaintiff had notice; that the plaintiff, however, did not nor would attend in obedience to the said order, but wilfully and contemptuously, without any reasonable or probable cause or excuse, wholly neglected and refused to do so, and concealed and absented himself for the purpose of avoiding attending the House; that thereupon it was ordered and resolved by the House that the plaintiff should be sent for, and brought before the said House in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and that the Speaker should issue his warrant accordingly. Then follows the warrant, which it is unnecessary to notice more particularly as at present. I am only considering whether a contempt was in fact committed; and upon this part of the case no doubt, as I believe, has been, or, as I think, can be raised. In the consideration of it I perfectly agree to what was said by Lord Denman in the case of the Sheriff of Middlesex. "It is unnecessary," said his lordship, "to discuss the question (the strong opinion of Lord Coke, however, is well known) whether each house of Parliament be or be not a court; it is clear that they cannot exercise their proper functions without the power of protecting themselves against interference." Equally clear is it, in my opinion, that in the exercise of their inquisitorial functions they must have the power of enforcing the attendance of witnesses, or their authority would be nothing, as a House of Commons, but the shadow of a name. The House, therefore, had an undoubted right, in my opinion, to order the attendance of the plaintiff, and upon his contemptuous refusal to commit him for the contempt, or, as I think, to order him to be brought in custody before them, to shew cause, if he had any, why he refused to attend or give evidence if required. Up to this point, therefore, there is, I apprehend, no doubt about the matter in dispute. The question is, as already stated, upon the form and manner in which the authority of the House of Commons has been vindicated on the present occasion. The plea states the Speaker's warrant, issued in pursuance of the said last-mentioned order, and according to the ancient usages and privilege of the House and the law and custom of Parliament, by his warrant in that behalf duly made (which warrant recited the order of the House), did require and authorize the Sergeant-at-Arms to take into custody the body of the plaintiff; then follows the justification of the defendant, that he took the plaintiff, by virtue of the warrant, in order to bring him before the House; and the question is, whether the said warrant be or be not a justification to the defendant in the execution of his duty. And before I proceed to examine that more minutely, I think it right to premise, that all cases of warrants of commitment by inferior jurisdictions are, in my opinion, wholly inapplicable to the present. It seems to me clear, that the warrant of the Speaker of the House of Commons, if brought before this Court, is judged of upon principles entirely different from those which govern the decision of the cases last referred to. The warrant in the case of the Sheriff of Middlesex was in the following form:—"Whereas the House of Commons has this day resolved, that William Evans, Esq., and John Wheelton, Esq., Sheriff of Middlesex, having been guilty of contempt and breach of privileges of this House, be committed to the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms attending this House. These are, therefore, to require you to take into your custody the bodies of the said William Evans and John Wheelton, and them safely to keep during the pleasure of this House; for which this shall be your sufficient warrant."—Signed by the Speaker. Now this, if examined according to the rules which prevail in the cases above mentioned, is, I apprehend, manifestly defective. If a person be convicted of being a rogue and vagabond, and be committed accordingly, and on the conviction facts are stated not sufficient to justify the legal detention, he is entitled to his discharge. The King v. Brown (8 T. R. 76) is an authority upon that point. Equally defective, I presume, would it have been if the warrant had stated a conviction of the party as being a rogue and vagabond without more. If a commissioner commit a bankrupt for contempt in not answering questions, this Court would discharge him, if the questions were not specified, so that the Court might judge of their legality. (Ex parte Leake, 9 B. & C. 239.) In Goff's case (3 M. & S. 203), hereafter more fully noticed, a warrant of commitment for not accounting and paying over money, directing the party to be kept until discharged by due course of law, would, it seems, have been held bad, if it had not been supported by a previous part of the warrant. If, as contended for in the argument of the plaintiff, convenient certainty as to the place where, and time during which the custody is to take place are required, in order to make a warrant legal, that object seems to be imperfectly fulfilled by the statement that the party shall be kept during the pleasure of the House. What would be thought of a magistrate's warrant however in all other respects unexceptionable, which should direct the commitment during the pleasure of any man or set of men whatever? Yet the Speaker's warrant, in the form above set forth, was sustained by this Court, and the party applying for liberation remanded; and that, too, under circumstances which, if any case ever could exist, would have led to an examination with the greatest anxiety and jealousy; and not only was such the decision of this Court, but all doubt would be at an end by the questions proposed and answers given to the House of Lords in Burdett v. Abbott. I come now to the allegation of the plea above set forth, and I believe it was contended that the words "The Speaker, in pursuance of the said last-mentioned order, and according to the ancient usages and privileges of the said House of Commons and the law and custom of Parliament, by his warrant, duly made, did require and authorize the sergeant to take into custody the body of the plaintiff," simply meant that the Speaker did, in fact, make his warrant. I confess, however, I entertain some doubt whether the allegation ought to be so restricted, or whether it is not also descriptive of the nature and quality of that warrant—that is, whether it is not to be understood from the allegation that the warrant was in such form as, according to the usage of the House and the law of Parliament, had been, in like cases, issued by the Speaker to bring a party in custody before the House. And, if so, I should also doubt whether such an allegation, so understood, would not at once have closed the question, upon the ground that the House of Commons is competent to regulate the forms of its own proceedings, and be the sole judge of them. In the case of Ex parte Smith (3 A. & E. 719; and 2 C. M. & R. 748), it appeared that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had made an order which Smith complained of, and this Court, as well as the Court of Exchequer, refused to interfere. It is unnecessary, however, to pursue this part of the subject further, or to pronounce any decisive opinion upon it; because, in another view, the warrant may, in my opinion, be sustained, and that, even if it ought to be examined in the manner contended for by the plaintiff, it is good and sufficient in law. Upon this part of the case two questions, as it seems to me, arise; first, whether the recital in the warrant may be resorted to in order to explain and support the mandatory part; and secondly, if it may, whether such recital be sufficient for that purpose. Now, upon the first question, Goff's case, above referred to, generally has a strong bearing. It is, indeed, decisive to shew that previous matter may have the effect of explaining or rectifying in a warrant what would otherwise be imperfect and erroneous. Goff was committed by a warrant of two justices, for that he, being collector of the rates for the parish of W——, under the 23rd of George 3, c. 41, refused to pay over moneys collected by virtue of the Act to one W. S.; the justices adjudged that he should be committed to gaol, there to remain until he should account and pay over the moneys to the said W. S.; they then required the keeper of the gaol to receive and keep him until he should be discharged by due course of law. For this form, and the uncertainty of the latter part of it, the warrant was objected to, and the cases of commitments by Commissioners of Bankrupt, which have therefore been held ill, were cited. And those cases were not questioned in the argument, but reliance was placed on the previous part of the warrant, and the special adjudication that Goff should be committed until he accounted and paid; and it was contended that the conclusion ought to be construed with reference to that which precedes it, and so was sustained; and Lord Ellenborough said, "By coupling the premises with the conclusion, is it not in effect the same as if the warrant had directed the gaoler to detain the party until he had accounted? We must read the warrant as if the magistrates had, in the conclusion, recited over again the adjudication." The prisoner was remanded. The principle of this case has since been recognised by the Court of Exchequer. It cannot, indeed, be said the previous matter in Goff's case is entirely the same as that which I am about to notice in the present; but the principle of reference for the purpose of sustaining the warrant is, I think, thereby established. Upon the second question proposed, a few remarks will suffice. The warrant recites an order that the plaintiff shall be sent for in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. Now, what is the meaning of "sent for in custody," or rather what else can it mean than that the plaintiff was to be brought before the House in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms? And if so, coupling the premises with the conclusion, acording to Lord Ellenborough, what can be a more reasonable intendment than that the warrant being to take the plaintiff into custody, it ought to be understood by the aid of the recited order in that warrant, as directing to take him into custody for the purpose of bringing him before the House? and if so, the warrant, in my opinion, is perfectly legal. In the case of a warrant of commitment by the Speaker of the House of Commons, a resolution that the party had been guilty of contempt was requisite, but not any specification of the nature of that contempt; and, as we have already seen, neither the time during which, nor the place where, the imprisonment is to be need be stated. Moreover, a contempt in fact may have been committed or it may not—nothing appears; but credit is given, which in the case of an inferior jurisdiction would not be, to the House of Commons, that they would not commit without sufficient cause. At all events, this Court cannot inquire in such a case, and why should not the intendment also be made in the present instance, that the House of Commons ordered that the plaintiff should be sent for in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, or, as I think, it must be understood, brought before the House in that custody, for some good and sufficient cause, for surely there may be many such? That seems to me scarcely a more forced supposition than that the contempt had been in fact committed, although none appears. It remains that I should add a few words upon a point connected with this part of the case briefly touched upon already, but requiring perhaps some further notice. It was contended in argument that the only unobjectionable course for the House of Commons to pursue was to adjudge the party guilty of tempt, and to commit him accordingly. I cannot accede to this argument. I think that, having ordered the attendance of the plaintiff as a witness, of the fitness of which the House of Commons alone had the competency to judge, they might upon his wilful default compel his attendance to answer for that default, and upon that attendance make such order respecting him as to the House might seem meet. If a witness having notice that the House has ordered his attendance disobeys, no further order in the shape of a second notice is necessary. Even in the case of a Commissioner of Bankrupt, if the bankrupt refuses to attend, no second summons is necessary before the warrant of commitment issues; but such warrant may go at once. (Ex parte Linkwaith, 16 Ves. 235; Battye v. Gresley, 8 East, 319.) Then what is the difference, so far as the party affected is concerned, between the two modes of proceeding? If the party be committed for contempt during the pleasure of the House, his chance of liberation depends upon his appearing and submitting to do what is required. If the course be pursued, as here, of ordering him to be brought in custody before the House his opportunity of making such amends as may lead to his deliverance is more immediate, and so far this mode may be more beneficial to him. If, upon any given state of facts, a person may be sent to prison for contempt, surely he may be brought before the House, whereby he may avoid being sent to prison at all. The power in such cases seems to me to be precisely similar, and to depend upon the same principle,—the necessity of vesting such power in the House of Commons for the sake of the public interests. Upon the whole, my opinion is, that judgment should be for the defendant.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—This case, notwithstanding the length of argument and the weight of matters discussed, appears to me to lie in a very narrow compass. The defendant justified the imprisonment of the plaintiff under the warrant of the Speaker of the House of Commons, which directed the defendant to take the plaintiff into custody, after reciting that his presence had been required in the house by an order of the House, of which order the plaintiff had notice, and to avoid obedience to which he contemptuously concealed himself. There was no necessity for authority to shew the power of either House of Parliament to commit for contempt—that power, which they possess in common with all superior courts, is fully recognised in Stockdale v. Hansard, and was acted upon in a proceeding which grew out of that case (Sheriff of Middlesex's case, 11 A. & E. 273). That power undoubtedly was neither directly nor indirectly questioned by the learned counsel for the plaintiff upon the present occasion. The privilege of Parliament to prosecute all inquiries which they may deem necessary for the discharge of their high duty is also admitted without dispute, and the power consequently which they have to compel the attendance of all persons whom they may require for such purpose. Some doubt has been strongly and eloquently stated on the power to order a person to be brought in custody before the House in the first instance without any adjudication, or at least without apprising him of the reason for requiring his attendance. But I confess it would rather appear to me, although sensible of the weight of these considerations, that as the exercise of their privileges of inquiry may obviously be wholly defeated by notice to the party, it must be necessary to have the power to secure such attendance by coercive measures and without explanation, and of that necessity the House alone can judge. But the defendant rests his justification upon higher grounds, and puts foremost in the points to be argued a much more extensive privilege. The defendant, he says, being an officer of the House of Commons, is protected by the order of the House directing him to do to the plaintiff the identical act complained of. Such an order of itself, and without more, is an answer to the action. Now this is the leading proposition maintained by the defendant in the case of Stockdale v. Hansard, and it was upon examination deliberately denied by the unanimous judgment of this Court. To the doctrine established by that judgment I fully adhere, unquestioned as it has been in any court of error; strictly conformable, as I am firmly convinced, to the principles of our law, and essential to the existence of a free constitution. Holding, therefore, that the mere order of the House of Commons does not of itself legalize whatever it may require, whether executed by its own officer or by any other person, I must reject this ground of defence. On the contrary, I hold that this Court is not at liberty to decline the jurisdiction of examining the grounds upon which the imprisonment of any one of our fellow-subjects may be justified, whatever the dignity or power of those who may have caused his imprisonment—whether it be a question in an action for damages, or on a return to a habeas corpus, or in the more solemn inquest that may be conducted in a criminal court, or in a case of life and death, where homicide may have resulted from enforcing or opposing an order, and the judge may be compelled to decide upon its legality. If, in the performance of this duty, I find the defendant justified by an order of the House of Commons, either convicting or punishing for a contempt, or made for the purpose of bringing the plaintiff before them for the necessary exercise of their privilege, the defendant will be of course entitled to our judgment. Here, however, it is unfortunate that serious objections are urged against the warrant set forth in the plea. It recites that the plaintiff's presence had been required in the House of Commons, and that he had notice of their resolution to that effect, and the order thereupon made, but that he contemptuously concealed himself to avoid obedience to it; and then the resolution that he should be sent for and brought before the House of Commons, and that Mr. Speaker do issue his warrant accordingly; whereupon the Speaker did order that he might be brought before the House in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, according to the order and resolution aforesaid, by his warrant, reciting that the House had ordered the plaintiff to be sent for in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, did require and authorize the officer to take into custody the body of the plaintiff. Here the warrant ends, and under it the arrest and detention of the plaintiff, and the carrying him to certain places, are justified. This instrument must be considered as a committal for contempt, or as a means of compelling the plaintiff's attendance in the House of Commons, or perhaps for both. In both points of view it is said to be essentially defective, for omitting to state the object and end for which it was issued. If it was to enforce the sentence of contempt, the plaintiff's learned counsel insisted that some limit to that imprisonment ought to appear in it; if the intention were only to bring him before the House, that intention, it was said, ought to be disclosed. The officer, it was contended, is bound to look no further than the directions in the warrant, and that places him in the officer's custody, without any intimation how long or for what purpose the prisoner is to be detained. The prisoner, it was also contended, has the right to see the warrant, that he may submit to it if lawful; but, however sensible of the obligation to submit to the authority of the House, he would not be bound to undergo an imprisonment at the discretion of the officer to whom the House had not delegated such discretion; for the Speaker's warrant was likewise impeached, as not pursuing the resolution on which it professes to be founded, but which only directed that the plaintiff should be brought before the House of Commons. The objections were met in various ways: first, it was said that the resolution set forth in the plea, that the plaintiff should be brought before the House of Commons, may be incorporated into the warrant which requires the sergeant to take him into custody; but at common law every warrant must speak for itself, and must shew two things,—a good cause for depriving the party named of his liberty, and some lawful period for his confinement. "The warrant," says Lord Coke, "containing a lawful course, ought to have a lawful conclusion." This is repeated by Lord Hale and all the text writers, and it is well established by numerous authorities. Lord Chief Justice Holt asserted this principle in Brace's case; so did Lord Ellenborough in Goff's case; and the whole Court in Lord Tenterden's time in Groom v. Forrester; and the Court of Exchequer recently in the case of Daniel v. Phillips (5 M. & S. 314); in the last-mentioned case, Baron Parke expressed himself in the words of Chief Justice Holt:—"The cause of commitment ought to be certain, to the end that the party may know for what he suffers, and how he may reclaim his liberty." The learned Baron proceeds:—'And if it be not, it is not only a ground for discharging the party, but the warrant is void, and no justification in an action of false imprisonment." He adds the following sentence, after citing Groom v. Forrester, contrary to the dictum of Lord Holt in Brace's case:—"I must, however, here remark, that Groom v. Forrester, far from professing to overrule the dictum of Holt, proceeds on the authority of his decision in Brace's case, taking no notice of the supposed dictum, or of the inaccurate reporter upon whose single statement it rests—a dictum unnecessary to the decision, and plainly repugnant to it in principle, as well as to Holt's known opinion. It is mentioned by Comberbach, that an action had been talked of, and we may well suppose that Holt would be desirous of discouraging so vexatious a proceeding for a mere slip in the officer, and that his judgment was misconstrued by that reporter, into the opinion that no action could be maintained; and from this ancient and indisputable principle it follows that a bad warrant cannot be eked out by the most regular and formal conviction, or rather, indeed, it is the same principle; it required no authority, but there is a decision on that very point (Wickes v. Clutterbuck, 2 Bing. 483). Goff's case does not appear to me inconsistent; for there Lord Ellenborough distinctly lays it down,—'If there had been any uncertainty on the face of the warrant, I should have agreed with the argument; but coupling the premises with the conclusion, is it not in effect the same as if the warrant had directed the gaoler to detain the party until he had accounted?'" We must read the warrant, he says, as if the magistrate had in the conclusion recited again the adjudication. Le Blanc, Justice, observes,—"When the party has paid over the money, he will be entitled to be discharged in due course of law; that is, the warrant itself both indicates a conclusion of the imprisonment, and the party's discharge by due course of law, which, although vicious and too general if it stood alone, receives an explanation from the other words in the same warrant, shewing that his accounting, in conformity to his duty, is the means of such discharge." But the warrant before us has no conclusion whatever; and even if it justified the arrest, which is questionable on another ground, it could not justify any of the ulterior proceedings against the plaintiff. I apprehend that the goodness of the warrant in respect of its contents is wholly independent of the authority from which it proceeds. However dignified and powerful the body which sends forth a process, that process must be consistent with itself and with the law, in order to defend the officer who acts upon it. There is no disrespect to the high assembly with which this matter originated in applying the same rules of construction to instruments by which it acts as to those that may be issued by an ordinary justice of the peace. It is impossible to make the distinction—the magistrate is as absolute while exercising his jurisdiction as the Act of Parliament can make him. A recent Act has in certain cases permitted him to avail himself of a good conviction when a committal would otherwise have been imperfect; but this proves what the common law was, and has no application to the present case. There is a general averment in the plea that the acts complained of were done in accordance with the ancient usages and privileges of the House and the law and custom of Parliament, and the plaintiff is said to have admitted this as a fact by demurring to it; but I am of opinion that this would give too extensive an effect to admissions by demurrer, which ought to be rigidly confined to what the rules of construction require, especially when the averment is ambiguous, and the fact is not peculiarly within the knowledge of the party. The averment here may be satisfied by being interpreted with reference to the mere issuing of the warrant. We cannot suppose, either that the defendant claims for the House of Commons the privilege of issuing a bad warrant, or that the party questioning the conduct of its officer admits such privilege. The point lastly stated for argument on behalf of the defendant is, that the Speaker's warrant issuing in cases where the House of Commons had jurisdiction, the courts of common law have no right or power to inquire into the form and mode in which the House has proceeded: but the answer is, that we are not inquiring merely how the House of Commons has proceeded, but how the officer has acted. The view that I take steers clear of all collision with any privilege of the House except that large and general one to which I first adverted, and renders it unnecessary to consider the other objections to the plea; and, although the objections to this warrant may at first sight appear to be technical in their nature, they will be found on consideration to involve principles of vital importance to the liberty of the subject. For the reasons that I have given, I think the plaintiff is entitled to our judgment.

REG. v. GREGORY.

Recognizances to prosecute may be entered into after the session has commenced at the Central Criminal Court; and the indictment is good, though it does not shew that this has been done.

Central Criminal Court in the venue sufficiently shews the jurisdiction, if the place stated in the body of the indictment be within it.

Indictment.—At the sessions of the Central Criminal Court, which commenced November 28, 1842, an indictment was preferred by the Duke of Brunswick against Mr. Gregory for a libel, which was afterwards removed by certiorari to the Queen's Bench. The 13th section of the Central Criminal Court Act, 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 36, enacts, "that no bill of indictment for any misdemeanor (other than perjury and subornation of perjury), which can or may be presented to the grand jury at any session of the peace for the said city of Westminster, and borough of Southwark, and counties of Middlesex, &c. respectively, in which such misdemeanor was committed or alleged to have been committed, shall be presented to the grand jury to be summoned under the authority of this Act, unless the prosecutor, or other person presenting such indictment, shall have been bound by recognizance to prosecute, or give evidence at the sessions to be held under the authority of this Act, against the person or persons accused of such misdemeanor, or unless such person or persons accused shall have been committed to or detained in custody, or shall be bound by recognizance to appear at the said sessions to be held under the authority of this Act."

The indictment contained no statement that the recognizance had been entered into. In point of fact, the recognizance had been entered into on the 2nd of December, and the sessions commenced on the 28th November, 1842. The indictment was preferred after the recognizance was entered into. The venue was Central Criminal Court, the offence being stated in the body of the indictment, in the parish of St. Mary in the Strand. On these grounds a rule nisi had been obtained to arrest judgment.

Talfourd, Serjt. (with whom was Wordsworth) now shewed cause.—The indictment is good; there is a good common law venue in the body. (Rex v. Connop, 4 Ad. & Ell. 942; Rex v. Minter Hart, 6 Ca. & Pay. 123; Reg. v. Stowell, 12 Law Jour. M.C. 111.) The caption is immaterial. (Rex v. Marsh, 6 Ad. & Ell. 236.) The recognizance may be entered into any time during the session. (Rex v. Carlton, 6 Car. & Pay. 651.)

Crowder, Q.C. (with whom was Peacock, contrà). —The caption sets forth that the indictment was found on the 28th of November: this was not so. No recognizance whatever appears on the face of the indictment, which is essential according to the terms of the Act. (Hawk. P.C. c. 25, book 2.)

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—In this case a doubt was raised whether the action could not be arrested, in consequence of the indictment not stating that the party had been bound over by recognizances to prosecute before the sessions at which the bill of indictment was found; but the Court is clearly of opinion that it is not necessary that should appear in the caption, and therefore there is no ground for arresting the judgment. That is our opinion on the point; and if there is error, of course it will be subject to another tribunal. With regard to the other matter, upon the affidavit that there had been no such previous recognizances, we are required to quash the indictment. We have considered that matter, and we think we ought not to take that step. A power is given to the grand jury of the Central Criminal Court in the largest terms possible, and then one of the succeeding clauses of the Act says that no bill shall be presented before the grand jury at the Central Criminal Court unless the party shall have been bound over by recognizances to appear at the sessions. There is some future sessions no doubt intended, and on one occasion the Lord Chief Justice was applied to to permit a party to be examined at the session in order to comply with that clause. We think he was perfectly right in refusing to permit it, because it would clearly have been too late for the purpose of removing the objection; and we consider that all he was bound to do was to decline to act, and that he was not bound to give any opinion at all on the due construction of the statute. But finding a general power given to the grand jury, and finding that it is directed by the statute that no bills shall be presented before the grand jury, yet no consequences attached to its being so presented without recognizances being entered into, we think those general words must have that effect, and the particular words without the bill, whatever may have been the object for introducing them, do not remove the power of the grand jury to find a bill on the matter before them, or of the petit jury from proceeding upon it, or of the Court in pronouncing judgment. Therefore we are bound to discharge the rule. Of course, the question about whether one libel or more libels make a variance, does not arise. The point we decide upon make it quite immaterial to inquire into that, because we consider no recognizances are previously required. Rule discharged.

TEECK v. BROWN.

Replevin—Copyhold—Rent-charge.

Declaration in replevin.

Avowry—That defendant distrained for arrears of a rent-charge, charged by will upon certain copyhold tenements, but omitting to state that the testator died six months before, when, &c.

Demurrer, on the ground of that objection, as well as that an annuity or rent-charge could not issue out of a copyhold tenement, and that the power of distress could not be given by will.

Peacock, for the defendant, at the suggestion of the Court, elected to amend, as to the first objection, upon payment of costs.

Butt, Q.C. for the plaintiff.

Defendant to amend.

SIMONS v. LOYD.

In an action upon an attorney's bill, de injuriâ is a bad replication to a plea of the non-delivery of a signed bill.

Assumpsit for work and labour.

Pleas—That the plaintiff was an attorney; that the action was brought for work done as an attorney; and that no signed bill had been delivered.

Replication—De injuriâ.

Special demurrer.

E. V. Williams, in support of the demurrer.—De injuriâ is wholly inapplicable to this plea, which shews no cause for the breach of the promise mentioned in the declaration. The plea admits the right of action and the breach; but sets up some facts posterior to the breach, which shew that the plaintiff has not taken certain steps necessary to enable him to enforce his remedy. In trespass and false imprisonment against magistrates, and no notice of action pleaded, or to a plea of the Statute of Limitations, de injuriâ would be improper, and they are analogous cases.

G. Pollock.—This is a plea in excuse; it shews that the plaintiff is under a present statutable disability; and that affords the defendant an excuse for the non-performance of his contract. The breach complained of in the declaration is the non-payment on demand, and that is excused. Of course it admits the contract and the breach, otherwise there could be no excuse. The replication de injuriâ is therefore applicable.

Cases cited: Salter v. Purchell (1 Q. B. 209); Basan v. Arnold (6 M. & W. 559).

By the COURT.—The defendant is right; the plea shews no cause for breaking the promise mentioned in the declaration; it merely raises a question as to the right to sue. Then the replication says that the defendant had not the cause for breaking his promise which he alleges in his plea; though the plea alleges no cause. Good sense requires that the party should take issue on such a plea and say that the bill was delivered. Judgment for the defendant.

LAWRIE v. BOAST.

Assumpsit on bills of exchange.

Plea—Defendant's discharge under Lord Brougham's Act.

Replication—That the defendant's debts exceed 300*l*.

Demurrer.

Bovill admitted that he could not support the demurrer, and applied for leave to amend his plea. The plaintiff had amended his replication under a judge's order, which also gave the defendant liberty to amend his plea, which, however, he had not as yet done.

Peacock, contrà.

By the COURT.—You may amend your plea within a week on payment of costs.

Defendant to amend his plea on payment of costs.

Thursday, May 22.

REG. v. MORTLOCK and OTHERS.

An order of sessions ordered the appellants to pay a certain sum of money as costs, on service of the order, or a true copy thereof.

Held, that the service of the copy sufficed, and that it was not necessary that the costs should have been named by the justices, but that it is to be understood that the clerk of the peace should settle them.

An adjourned sessions may make an order when a previous sessions have heard the case—Coleridge, J. dubitante.

It is not necessary to give notice to the defendants to produce an order of sessions or notice thereof on the trial of an indictment against them for disobeying the order.

Indictment against the defendants as occupiers of land in the county of Cambridge, for disobeying the following order of the Court of Quarter Sessions, made on the 6th of January, 1843.

This day an appeal was entered by Robert Mortlock, Luke Staples, James Wing Dennis, and John Dennis, against a rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor of the parish of Wicken, in the county of Cambridge, and bearing date the thirty-first day of October last. And now, upon hearing counsel and allegations on both sides, and the evidence produced, this Court doth dismiss the said appeal and doth confirm the said rate or assessment so made as aforesaid, and doth order that the said Robert Mortlock, Luke Staples, James Wing Dennis, and John Dennis, immediately upon service of this order or a true copy thereof, do pay unto the said churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the said parish of Wicken, the sum of 91*l.* 9s. 10d. for their costs and charges by reason of the said appeal.

By the Court,

CHRISTOPHER PEMBERTON,
Clerk of the Peace.

The indictment stated, "That a true copy of the said order was afterwards (to wit) on the 29th of May, 1843, personally served upon each of the said defendants, and they had notice of the contents thereof, and were requested to pay the costs, which they refused to do (the same being a reasonable sum)." The appeal having been dismissed, the costs were not taxed by the clerk of the peace during the sessions. In February 1843, a bill of costs was sent to the defendants' solicitor, and on the 29th of May, 1843, the order was served, and again, on the 26th of June, 1843, a personal demand was made on the defendants. The appeal had been previously entered and respited; it was subsequently dismissed, on the ground that no sufficient notice had been given to the churchwardens and overseers. At the trial, a verdict of guilty was found against the defendants, with leave to move.

Byles, Serjt. now shewed cause.—The first objection made is, that the Sessions ought to have ordered the money to have been paid upon service of the order itself, and that a copy is not service of the order. But the original order is entered in the minute-book of the sessions. No record is kept, and the original order cannot be served. In Reg. v. Yeoveley (8 Ad. & Ell. 806) the minute-book of the sessions was held to be itself the order, and to be proper eviden f the order. It is also objected that there should hav been proof of notice to the defendants to produce th original order to let in secondary evidence of it. Thi is clearly unnecessary. A copy of an attorney's bil' is admissible in evidence the original of which ha been delivered to the defendant, without notice to produce the original. (Collins v. Treweek, 6 B. & Cr. 394; Anderson v. May, 2 B. & Pul. 237.) Parol evidence is also admissible to support a general de scription of an instrument, in the declaration in an action of trover, without giving previous notice to produce, and this on the ground that the nature of the action prevents the defendant from being taken by surprise. (How and Another, executors, v. Hall, 14 East, 274.) The order itself is a notice, and it is not necessary to give notice to produce a notice. This case is similar to where an indictment is preferred for stealing a bill of exchange, which it is not requisite to give notice to the prisoner to produce in order to let in parol evidence. (Aickle's case, 1 Leach, Cro. Cas. 330.) Evidence may clearly be given, as here, of the contents of written instruments, or entries, or orders, which have been already shewn to be in the possession of the defendant. (Jolley v. Taylor, 1 Camp. 143.) This indictment distinctly charges the defendants with having received a copy of the order.

Worlledge, on the same side.—A paper was delivered by the clerk of the peace to the solicitor for the prosecution. Either that paper was the original or the book was. The case of R. v. Yeoveley shews that an order of sessions may be on paper, and that parchment is not necessary. The solicitor for the prosecution could not compel the clerk of the peace to give him what he liked. If the paper is not original, the book of the sessions is; but the Quarter Sessions is a court of record, and records do not travel (Ahbez v. Farnerall, 1 C. M. & R. 277), and an order for costs is part of the judgment, and therefore matter of record. (R. v. Stoke Bliss, 1 New Sess. C. 287) It cannot, then, be contended that a copy of the paper delivered by the clerk of the peace, and which, it is not denied, does not vary from the minute-book, will not satisfy every object for which an order should be shewn to those whose duty it is to obey it. Then, it is said that we should have alleged in the indictment that the original was shewn; but there is not in any of the reported cases a precedent for such an allegation. (R. v. Wade, 1 B. & Ad. 861; R. v. Gilkes, 8 B. & C. 439; R. v. Gash, Stark. N. P. 441; R. v. Soper, 3 B. & C. 357.) The objection to the form of the order of sessions is not to be sustained. It is true that the original rules of this court must be shewn, but the reason is, that the original rule is always delivered out to the party at whose instance it is obtained; and this meets the objection that will be founded on R. v. Smythies (3 T.R. 351); R. v. Alnwick (5 B. & A.)· Garden v. Cresswell (2 M. & W. 319); R. v. Kingston and Others (8 East, 41). Then as to the notice to produce, none was necessary. (Hammond v. Plank, Peake, N. P. 166, n.) It is contended that at the adjourned sessions, when the order was made, there were four or five justices who were not at the first sessions when the appeal was heard. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We cannot look to that if it was the same sessions adjourned.] No objection can be taken which is not apparent on the face of the order; here it appears to be made by the same justices. Lord Mansfield has said that the foundation of an indictment such as this is the order of sessions; and that where "nothing appears to shew that they had no jurisdiction, and till the order is reversed, it ought to be obeyed. We cannot hear objections to the order which do not appear on the face of it." (Rex v. Milton, 3 Esp. 200, n.) Here the order is good on the face of it, and the order itself was notice of the taxation by the clerk. It is no objection that the amount was specified in the order. The 17 Geo. 3, c. 38, enables the justices generally to award costs when the appeal has been determined. The original order gives costs, and the clerk of the peace then ascertains what shall be the amount; the justices then confirm the order. (Ex parte Holloway, 1 Dowl. 26.) Selwood v. Mount (1 Q. B. 726) shews that the amount must be specified in the order, and cannot be enforced without; it is the act of the Court, through its officer.

Prendergast, contrà.—There was nothing like notice given; but this Court will not interfere. If magistrates thought they did right, this Court will not interfere; it being a matter within their jurisdiction. Here the right given to the magistrates was properly exercised. The magistrates are the fit persons to determine what costs are properly incurred. It is a fleeting jurisdiction, and they only who hear the appeal can duly decide the amount. The Court here has only a particular jurisdiction delegated to it. [Lord DENMAN, C.J.—It is well known that the Court always awards that the order be confirmed with costs; and it is perfectly understood that these costs are to be ascertained by some officer of the Court, and the adjourned Court or the other Court has only to confirm that which has been so ascertained.] The 17 Geo. 3, c. 38, only gives power to give costs where the appeal has been determined, but here the Court dismissed the appeal for insufficient notice. Every count in the indictment says that a copy of the order was served on the defendants; but there is no statement of a valid service of the order itself. [PATTESON, J.—Pray, what is the order?] There was the greatest difficulty in ascertaining what the order was. In order to be bound by a subpœna, the person must have the order shewn to him. [PATTESON, J.—Suppose it necessary to serve a judgment on a person, can he serve the original judgment? How is it to be done?] A man would not be liable to a contempt who had only a copy shewn to him. [PATTESON, J.—What is the order? I really cannot understand.] One of them is the parchment order. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It is stated that the copy was served, and the original was read over to him.

Gunning, on the same side.—It is only upon service of the order that the defendants became liable to pay the costs. In all the cases cited (except that in Leach) it was not necessary to give notice to produce the document to support the general description in the declaration; but a notice to produce was necessary here. (R. v. Hayworth, 4 Car. & Pay. 451; R. v. Ellicombe, 5 C. & P. 522; Rex v. Allen, 5 B. & Ad. 984.) The case of Reg. v. Yeoveley is against the prosecutors, for there the original order was produced. (R. v. Hughes, 3 A. & Ell. 425; Reg. v. Painter, 3 A. & Ell. 433.)

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—The question for our decision is, ought the judgment to be arrested? The allegation on the record is, that the payment "is to be made immediately upon service of the notice or a true copy thereof." It is therefore clear that service of either would be sufficient, and that the service of the notice, which is distinctly stated to have been made, was all that was requisite whether that notice was given by means of the parchment order or by shewing the book itself in which the order was entered. As to the notice to produce to let in secondary evidence of the order at the trial, we think that there was no occasion for it. The service of the copy or of the order sufficiently brought the facts to the knowledge of the defendants, and was itself a notice: therefore calling for a notice to produce such order or copy, would be calling for notice of production of notice. We are of opinion that the order of sessions is good. It was made in the presence of the parties and the attorney, and they had sufficient notice to tax costs. If the officer had done this behind their backs, it would be bad, but many things pass in court without objection, and unless objections be made and noted at the time, it is scarcely competent to the parties to take exception to them after the time when they had notice and opportunity of making it. How natural it would have been for Mr. Pemberton to say, "I recollect giving the notice;" and unless the matter is noted at the time, these objections made afterwards must go for nothing. There was no objection taken to the jurisdiction. Neither does the objection prevail with us, that the appeal is said to have been dismissed with costs generally; the real effect is, your appeal is dismissed with such costs as shall be settled by the clerk of the peace or other officer. If, indeed, any assertion of impure or improper conduct had been made, it would have been bad; but without some imputation on the conduct of the officer, the amount found by him to be due must be taken to be the amount found by the Sessions.

PATTESON, J.—I am quite of the same opinion on the first point. The indictment states that the order was shewn to the defendants. I think it is clearly sufficient to say that a party shall pay on service of the order, or a true copy thereof. I do not know what the order is; but certainly there is nothing to shew that the minute-book is not the order. No notice to produce could be required. The copy served is nothing but a notice after all. It is not a case of secondary evidence; and it is new to me that you must give a notice of every thing. This is nothing but a notice to produce a notice, and is not needed.

WILLIAMS, J.—In any case it is quite clear that the notice they say ought to have been given was quite unnecessary. They could not carry about the minute-book of the sessions, and therefore the copy was the order. It is contrary to all principle that a notice is necessary to produce a notice, and to that it comes. Upon service of order, or a true copy thereof, was the condition on which the money was to be paid; and that condition was complied with.

COLERIDGE, J.—I entirely concur as to the service of the notice. You are not bound to carry about the book itself, and the copy clearly suffices. I have had most doubt as to the jurisdiction of the justices to make the order at the adjourned sessions. We must take the order strictly to be made at the adjourned session, and I think that at an adjourned session they cannot properly make an order for costs on what passed at prior sessions, but that this Court should inquire whether there were the same justice composing it. But looking to the notes of the trial, we must, I think, suppose that all was done without any objection; and after a sufficient notice had been given. All that was done at the adjourned sessions must be taken to have been a confirmation of what was done at the preceding sessions.

CROWN CASES RESERVED.

Saturday, April 26.

(Before all the Judges, except PARKE, B. and MAULE, J.)

REG. v. PERRY.

On an indictment for stealing a banker's cheque, described in another count as "a piece of paper, value [illegible] may be [illegible] latter count, although, as a cheque, the instrument could not be received in evidence, for want of a stamp.

The prisoner was tried before Mr. Justice Coleridge, and convicted, at the last Taunton Assizes, on an indictment which charged him, as servant of the Great Western Railway Company, with stealing a cheque for 13*l.* 9s. 7d. and a piece of paper, value one penny; in other counts the instrument was described as a warrant and order for the payment of the sum above mentioned, and the property was laid in several different ways.

The Great Western Railway Company being indebted for the rates to the overseers of the parish of Taunton St. James, in the sum of 13*l.* 9s. 7d. a cheque for that amount was by the proper authority drawn at Paddington, on their London bankers, and then transmitted through the hands of various officers of the company, to the superintendent at the Taunton station; he received it on Saturday, the 1st of March, and at the hour when the prisoner, the chief clerk there, was going into the town to his dinner, placed it in his hands, ordering him to pay it to the overseer, and to bring him a stamped receipt upon his return.

On his return, the superintendent asked prisoner if he had paid the overseer; he answered "Yes," and being asked for the receipt, said that the overseer, not having one by him, had promised to send it to a certain inn in the town for him. In truth, the prisoner had not paid it, and on Monday morning got it cashed by a tradesman in the town, and applied the proceeds to his own use. It was objected at the trial, that the cheque being issued at Taunton, though made within fifteen miles of the banking-house, could not be read for want of a stamp, and was not a valuable security.

It appeared to the learned judge, that the cheque was either issued at Paddington when put in a course of transmission to the party who was to receive the money named in it, or not until the cashing of it on the Monday morning, at Taunton. In the first case, it was clearly within the exemption of the Stamp Act, in the second, it was stolen before the issuing, and he thought an unstamped cheque, made within distance, but not issued, was a valuable security within the statute. He thought the cheque might be considered as stolen when the prisoner, instead of applying it as he was ordered, in payment to the overseer, had appropriated it to himself, of which the false statement to the superintendent was evidence, and that the cashing it on Monday was only further evidence of an appropriation complete on the Saturday.

He therefore directed the cheque to be read, and the prisoner was convicted.

The prisoner's counsel referred to section 13 of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, and Ex parte Bignold (1 Deacon's Reports, 735), for the distinction between making and issuing a banker's cheque.

Assuming this distinction to be sound, and to apply to the present case, the learned judge entertained doubts whether the view he took of the case was correct, considering that the cheque was never intended to be issued within the distance of fifteen miles from the banking-house, and so an evasion of the Stamp Act contemplated from the beginning; and he therefore desired the opinion of the judges upon the case.

Rowe, for the prisoner.—The cheque was inadmissible for want of a stamp. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—But what do you say to the charge of stealing a piece of paper of the value of 1d.?] That piece of paper derived its whole value from what was written on it; after being converted into a security for money, it was valueless altogether, except for the purpose to which it had been devoted. As a piece of blank paper, it might be the subject of larceny; but the writing upon it has entirely altered its character, and destroyed its value as a piece of paper. If it could have been made valuable as a security by the imposition of a stamp and the payment of the penalty, then it might have fallen within Clark's case (R. &. R. 181); but that is not so, and its value is altogether gone.

Authorities cited: R. v. Clark (R. & R. 181, : Leach, 1036); R. v. Bingley (5 Car. & P. 602); R v. Phipoe (2 Leach, 673); 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 22.

Phinn, contrà, was not called upon.

The judges, upon consideration, held the conviction right.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Wednesday, April 30.

ABBOT v. DOUGLAS.

Where part of the consideration for an annuity consisted of money by a draft on a banker, the statement in the memorial of the annuity-deed that it was "by a draft of even date with the aforesaid recited indenture of assignment, drawn by the said W. A. on Messrs. B. & Co." was held not to be a compliance with the stat. 53 Geo. 3, c. 141, inasmuch as it did not state when the draft was payable.

This was a rule calling on the executor of the plaintiff to shew cause why the warrant of attorney in this case, and the judgment signed thereon, and an annuity-deed, and a memorial, mentioned in the defendant's affidavit, should not be respectively set aside, on several grounds, of which the following need only be now noticed; viz. that the consideration was not properly stated in the memorial, as to the time of payment of the draft therein mentioned.

The memorial stated the consideration for the annuity, under the heading "Consideration, and how paid," in these words:—"450*l.* paid by the said William Abbot to the said James Moreton Douglas, in his own proper person in manner following; that is to say, 23*l.* by a draft of even date with the aforesaid recited indenture of assignment, drawn by the said William Abbot on Messrs. Barnett, Hoare, & Co.; 17*l.* in sovereigns, and the residue of the aforesaid sum of 450*l.* being 410*l.* in notes of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, payable to the bearer on demand, and which said three several sums make the aforesaid consideration of 450*l.*" The deed had been given in July 1828, for securing an annuity of 50*l.* a year for the life of Douglas, secured by a judgment on a warrant of attorney, together with an assignment of the fees of the office held by Douglas, of registrar and actuary of the Archdeacon of Norfolk. As the judgment of the Court was given only on the above-mentioned objection, the argument on the others is here omitted.

Manning, Serjt. in Hilary Term last, shewed cause against the rule.—The Act of 53 Geo. 3, c. 141, does not require the same particularity in the statement of the consideration as that of 17 Geo. 3, c. 26. Drake v. Rogers (2 Brod. & B. 19), and the other cases which may be cited in support of the rule, were decided under the statute 17 Geo. 3, c. 26. In Crowther v. Wentworth (6 B. & C. 371), Bayley, J. referring to 53 Geo. 3, says, "That statute was passed to remedy the inconveniences resulting from several decisions which had taken place on the construction of the former Annuity Act." The following cases were also cited: Faircloth v. Gurney (9 Bing. 622), and Case v. Lovelace (2 B. & Ad. 767), and it was contended that a draft, in its popular sense, meant payable on demand, and was a sufficient statement to convey the information required by the Act.

Talfourd and Byles, Serjts. contrà.—Supposing the statute the same as that of 17 Geo. 3, c. 26, there could be no doubt but that the present description would be insufficient. (Berry v. Bentley, 6 T. R. 690; Poole v. Cabanes, 8 T. R. 328; and Drake v. Rogers, 2 Brod. & B. 19.) It is submitted that the decisions on the 17 Geo. 3, c. 26, are authorities for determining the construction to be put on the 53 Geo. 3, c. 141, the schedule to which, giving the form of the memorial, requires to be stated "consideration, and how paid;" the manner therefore in which the consideration is paid must be stated, if consisting of notes or drafts, with the time of payment, as was formerly required under the 17 Geo. 3, c. 26. The object of both Acts was the same, namely, to have a true statement of the payment of the consideration for the annuity. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered judgment.—This was a rule calling on the executor of William Abbot to shew cause why the warrant of attorney in this case, and the judgment signed thereon, and an annuity-deed and a memorial in the defendant's affidavit mentioned, should not be respectively set aside on the following grounds:—First, that the consideration is not properly stated in the memorial of the said deed as to the time of payment of the draft therein mentioned; secondly, that the consideration for the said annuity was an illegal assignment of an office; thirdly, that a part of the consideration money was retained; fourthly, that the deed contained a covenant to pay an additional premium of insurance in a certain event; fifthly, that it contained a covenant to allow the grantee to take one shilling in the pound out of what he should collect from the fees of the said office. The affidavit on which the rule was obtained stated that the consideration money for the deed of annuity was 450*l.* and was paid in manner following: 410*l.* in Bank of England notes; 17*l.* in gold coin; 23*l.* by a draft of even date with the annuity-deed, drawn by the said William Abbot on Barnett, Hoare, and Company, bankers, in London. A copy of the memorial was annexed to the affidavit; and such memorial, under the heading "Consideration, how paid," was in these words: "The sum of 450*l.* paid by the said William Abbot to the said James Moreton Douglas, in his own proper person, in manner following; that is to say, 23*l.* by a draft of even date with the aforesaid recited indenture of assignment, drawn by the said William Abbot on Barnett, Hoare, and Co.; 17*l.* in sovereigns; and the residue of the aforesaid sum of 450*l.*, being 410*l.*, in notes of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, payable to the bearer on demand; and which said three several sums make the aforesaid consideration of 450*l.*" In answer to the rule, an affidavit was used, to which the said draft for 23*l.* was annexed, and that appeared to be a draft payable on demand. It will be unnecessary to express any opinion on the other objection stated, because it appears to us that the first must prevail, the memorial not being such as the statute 53 Geo. 3, c. 141, requires to be enrolled. In order to determine this question, it is necessary to look at the statute 17 Geo. 3, sec. 1, and the decisions which took place under it. By that section it was enacted that a memorial of every deed, &c. whereby any annuity or rent-charge shall from and after the passing of this Act be granted for one or more life or lives, &c. shall within twenty days of the execution of such deed be enrolled in the High Court of Chancery; and that every such memorial shall contain the date, &c., and shall set forth the annual sum or sums to be paid, and the name or names of the person or persons on whose life or lives the annuity is granted, and the consideration or considerations for granting the same. Under this section it was held that all considerations, whether pecuniary or otherwise, must be stated, and that where the pecuniary consideration, or part of it, is paid by drafts on bankers or promissory notes, it was necessary to set them out, and mention the time when they were payable. The cases of Rumbull v. Murray, Berry v. Bentley, and Poole v. Cabanes may be referred to, in which last case the memorial stated part of the consideration money, 199*l.* 10*s.* was paid by a draft of J. Harvey on Messrs. Lockhart, bankers in Pall-mall, which said draft was duly honoured; and though it was urged by Gibbs that a banker's cheque is always considered as money, the Court held the memorial to be insufficient. In Morris v. Wall (1 Bos. & P.) the memorial stated that the consideration money was paid in Bank of England and country bank-notes, without specifying the dates or times of payment of the latter; and on the ground that it was necessary to state the time of payment, the Court reluctantly made absolute the rule for setting aside the judgment, considering themselves bound by the former decision respecting bankers' cheques; and this decision was confirmed by this Court in Drake v. Rogers (2 Brod. & B. 19). By the 53 Geo. 3, c. 141, the former Act was repealed, except as to annuities and rent-charges theretofore granted; and by the second section it was enacted that within thirty days after the execution of every deed, &c. whereby any annuity or rent-charge shall, from and after the framing of this Act, be granted for one or more life or lives, &c. a memorial of the date of every such deed, the pecuniary consideration or considerations of granting the same, and the annual sum or sums to be paid, shall be enrolled in the High Court of Chancery, in the form or to the effect following, with such alterations therein as the nature and circumstances of any particular case may require. By this enactment it is not made necessary to mention in the memorial any but pecuniary considerations; but they must be stated in the form prescribed by the Act, which contains a column, headed "Consideration, and how paid;" and under these words, "100*l.* paid in money," "300*l.* paid in notes of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or other notes or bills of exchange, as the case may be." If in the present case part of the consideration had been paid by a bill of exchange, it could not have been contended that the time when it would become payable need not have been stated, it being necessary to shew the real nature and value of the consideration. The same necessity exists for stating the time when a draft is payable; and the only question is, whether the memorial now under consideration states the time when the draft on Barnett, Hoare, and Company was payable. It does not do so unless the word "draft" means "draft payable on demand." In several of the cases cited, the Courts have refused so to construe it, and those decisions are equally applicable to memorials enrolled in pursuance of the 53 Geo. 3, as to those under the 17 Geo. 3. We feel we are bound by them, and we must say that the memorial in question is insufficient. The consequence is, that the deed, bond, instrument, or other assignment by which the annuity was granted, is null and void. The rule asks that it may be set aside. The Court will only interfere so far as to set aside the judgment which has been signed on the warrant of attorney; to that extent the rule must be made absolute. Rule absolute accordingly.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Wednesday, May 7.

WALMSLEY v. LOWE.

Where there are cross rules for a new trial before the sheriff, the Court will hear both rules, if the sheriff's notes have been verified in moving for one of them. The Court will examine the record, if produced before them, though not verified by affidavit.

Quære, who entitled to the record, where defendant pleads a plea of tender, and also other pleas to the whole cause of action, and fails on the plea of tender, but succeeds on the others?

Quære, meaning of the term "and for a further plea as to the said sum of, &c."

In this case, which was an action of debt, the declaration contained common counts for 8*l.* 4s. 6d. for work, labour, and materials; for a similar sum for goods sold; and for a like sum upon an account stated. The sum demanded was 24*l.* 13s. 6d. The defendant pleaded, first, "except as to the sum of 18s. parcel of the said sum above demanded," never indebted; secondly, as to 7*l.* 6s. 6d. a set-off. This plea commenced thus: "And for a further plea in this behalf as to the sum of 7*l.* 6s. 6d. parcel of the sum above demanded, and the damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the detention thereof." Thirdly, as to 2*l.* 1s. payment before action brought. This plea commenced by stating, "And for a further plea as to the said debts and causes of action, so far as the same relate to the sum of 2*l.* 1s. parcel of the sum above demanded." Fourthly, as to the said sum of 18s. a tender. This plea commenced, "And as to the said sum of 18s. parcel of the said sum above demanded." Upon the first plea issue was joined. Nil debet was replied to the second plea. A nolle prosequi was entered to the premises to which the third plea was pleaded. To the fourth plea the plaintiff replied denying the tender, upon which issue was joined.

The action was tried before the sheriff of Middlesex, when a verdict was found for the defendant on the issues raised upon the pleas of never indebted and of set-off. The defendant only proved that about 2*l.* was due to him on account of the set-off. Upon the issue raised upon the plea of tender, the jury found for the plaintiff, but did not expressly find any damages for him. Upon the production of the postea, however, it appeared that the under-sheriff had indorsed nominal damages. The plaintiff's attorneys obtained the writ of trial and return from the under-sheriff's office.

Prentice, in the beginning of the present Term, obtained a rule upon the part of the defendant calling upon the plaintiff and his attorneys to shew cause why the writ of trial and sheriff's return thereto should not be delivered to the defendant or his attorney, upon the ground that the defendant was entitled to the same, and the general costs of the cause. Upon the above rule being moved for, Thomas obtained a cross-rule calling upon the defendant to shew cause why the verdict found for the defendant upon the first and second issues should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the plaintiff on the same.

These rules came on to be argued together, Prentice in the first instance was heard, and took a preliminary objection to the rule obtained by Thomas, on the ground that the rule was not drawn up upon any affidavit verifying the sheriff's notes. The Court however, overruled this objection, upon the ground that the sheriff's notes were before the Court on the other rule. It was then contended that Thomas's rule must be discharged, as there was nothing upon the sheriff's notes to enable the Court to alter the verdict. [The Court expressed themselves of this opinion as to the first issue.] Then the verdict was correctly found and entered for the defendant on the second issue, although as large a sum as the sum to which the plea of set-off was pleaded, was not proved to be due to the defendant, the defendant having proved a sufficient sum to cover any cause of action established against him by the plaintiff. (Tuck v. Tuck, 5 M. & W.; and Kilver v. Bailey, ib.)

The first question as to the first-mentioned rule was, whether there was any plea to the sum of 18s excluded from the first plea, but the plea of tender. It was contended on the part of the defendant, that the second and third pleas were pleaded to this sum of 18s. as well as to any other sum in the declaration; that the word further at the commencement of the second and third pleas did not confine such pleas to the moneys to which the first plea was pleaded (Com. Dig. Pleader, E. 27, F. 4; Hughes v. Poole, 6 Scott's N. R. 959; Verre v. Goldsborough, 1 Scott 265, 1 B. N. C. 353; Putney v. Swann, 2 M. & W. 72; Grills v. Manuel, Willes, 380, and cases cited in Chit. on Pl. 578, 589.) [POLLOCK, C. B.- If the pleas are to be read as you would read a letter, the second and third pleas are only pleaded to the moneys to which the first plea is pleaded.] It was submitted that they could not be so read, but that they must be construed according to the known rules of pleading, and that the one plea could not be made use of to put a construction on another. Assuming that the second and third pleas apply to the sum of 18s. it was argued that though the plaintiff succeeded on the plea of tender, the defendant was entitled to the record and the general costs of the cause, as the defendant had succeeded on the plea of set-off, and as a nolle prosequi had been entered on the plea of payment, and therefore the defendant had establishe a defence to any cause of action that the plaintiff had proved. (Fischer v. Aide, 3 M. & W. 486; Turmlow v. Askey, 3 M. & W. 495; Amor v. Cuthbert, 3 Scott's N. R. 325, 3 McG. 1; 2 Dowl. N. S. 160.) It was also urged, that as no damages were found for the plaintiff, and as he was only entitled to costs, if he recovered damages, he could not be entitled to retain the postea. (Grout v. Glazier, 1 Dowl. N. S. 58.) [PARKE, B.—By the return to the writ of trial, it appears that the jury have assessed 1s. damages.] It was submitted, that as the return was not verified by affidavit, the Court could not notice it. [PARKE, B.—The Court will take notice of the return; if that is incorrect, the undersheriff should be applied to to amend it.]

Thomas was stopped shortly after he had commenced his argument by a suggestion from the Court, that there would be some difficulty in entering up judgment upon the record as it stood.

Prentice suggested that the jury had found that the tender was not made, and submitted that a judgment might be given, though he admitted the pleadings were very informal.

By reason of the difficulties in the case, the Court directed the rule to be enlarged till next Term, in the hope that in the interim the parties might enter into some compromise.

NEW TRIAL PAPER.

HAYWARD v. HAYWARD.

New Trial.

Kinglake, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule of M. Smith's for a new trial in this case. The rule was obtained on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence, and no other question arose.

M. Smith, in support of his rule, was stopped by the Court, who said that, as the learned judge who had tried the cause was dissatisfied with the verdict, the rule for a new trial would be made absolute.

Rule absolute accordingly.

SUTCLIFFE v. BROOK.

Action on an award.

This was an action on an award, and there demurrer to the declaration, on the ground that the declaration did not state a good mutual submission to arbitration by the parties, or their attorneys, on the face of it.

Atherson, in support of the demurrer, was stopped by the Court.

Bramwell proceeded to argue in support of the declaration, but the Court intimating a very strong opinion that he had better amend, he consented to do so.

Leave to amend, otherwise judgment for the defendant.

JAMES v. BOSTON.

Where a clergyman had been accused by letter to the bishop of being party to a DISGRACEFUL scene, by which means he had brought scandal on religion in the parish:

Held, on an action for libel, that a plea of justification should justify the assertion that the act was a DISGRACEFUL one.

Held also, that it was not necessary to lay special damage; such an accusation would be quite sufficient to maintain an action of libel whether the plaintiff was a clergyman or not.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff (who is a clergyman) against the defendant for a libel. The libel complained of was contained in a letter written by the defendant to the Bishop of London, wherein he stated "That a report was current in Bethnal-green that a disgraceful scene had taken place in the school-room there some short time before; for that, upon the schoolmaster asking the Rev. Mr. James (the plaintiff) in the school-room, for his wages, the rev. gentleman had collared the schoolmaster, and a regular stand-up fight had taken place, and persons who were passing at the time, hearing a cry of murder, came in and parted the combatants, whereby great scandal was brought on religion in that parish by the bad example of the clergyman." The defendant pleaded first, the general issue; and, secondly, a plea of justification, on the ground that there was a report current in the said parish that an assault had been committed by the plaintiff on the schoolmaster; but the words "disgraceful" and "stand-up fight" were left out in the plea, which was demurred to on the ground that it did not sufficiently justify the libel.

Baddeley, in support of the demurrer, was stopped by the Court.

Stammers, in support of the plea, contended that there was a sufficient justification set out in the plea. [PARKE, B.—It is perfectly clear that the libel imputes disgraceful conduct to the clergyman by the alleged assault. Now, the plea only justifies the libel, on the ground that there is a report current of an assault having been committed by the plaintiff, but not that there had been a disgraceful one; and the plea may be true, and yet no justification of the libel; for it may be that the clergyman committed the assault in self-defence, which of course would not be disgraceful in him.] Then the declaration is bad, as it should have laid special damage, and the libel should have been alleged to be of and concerning the office of the plaintiff as a clergyman. (Lumby v. Aldy, 1 Cro. Jac. 301; Craven v. Ayre, 2 A. & E. 2.)

PARKE, B.—Those were cases on actions for words, but this is for a libel. It is not necessary to lay special damage, if the libel imputes disgraceful conduct to the plaintiff; such an accusation would be quite enough to maintain this action, whether the plaintiff was a clergyman or not.

BAIL COURT.

TRINITY TERM, 1845.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

Thursday, May 22.

HALL v. BAINBRIDGE and OTHERS.

Where the defendants were alleged to have been in possession of a letter sent to them by another party, which letter the plaintiff suggested operated as an agreement, which it would be necessary for him to prove as a part of his case at the trial, though no party to it himself, the Court made absolute a rule calling upon the defendants to produce it at the Stamp Office, in order that it might be stamped as an agreement, at the expense of the plaintiff.

Martin, Q.C. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Cowling, calling on the defendants to shew cause why they should not, within four days, produce a certain letter, dated the 28th of May, 1838, addressed by Messrs. Fawcett and Co. of Liverpool, to Mr. MacGregor Laird, as secretary to the British and American Steam Navigation Company, of which the said defendants were directors, at the Stamp Office, at Somerset House, Middlesex, for the purpose of being stamped as an agreement, at the expense of the plaintiff. It appeared that the plaintiff, being the patentee of several improvements in steam navigation, the defendants, who were the directors of the above-mentioned company, agreed with him to use his patents upon certain terms; and it was stipulated, that for any other vessels which they might afterwards have constructed upon his principles, they should pay a certain sum per horse-power, the money to be paid on the making of the engines. In 1838, a correspondence took place between the company and Messrs. Fawcett and Co. engineers, relative to some engines to be made, as it was suggested, on Mr. Hall's principle; and a letter was sent by Messrs. Fawcett and Co. to Mr. Laird, the secretary of the company, upon the subject. This action had been brought upon the original deed, to recover a sum of money due, as it was alleged, in respect of the horse-power manufactured; and this rule was obtained to compel the production of the letter from Messrs. Fawcett and Co. to the company's secretary, in order that it might be stamped with an agreement stamp, with the view of being used on the trial by the plaintiff, or of enabling him to give secondary evidence of its contents. Against this rule it was contended, that the Court had no power to make such a rule as that asked for; that the Court only interferes in such cases where the party in possession of a document holds it in the character of trustee for the party claiming under it. (Lawrence v. Hooper, 5 Bing. 6, 2 Moore & P. 9; Neale v. Swind, 1 Dowl. 314, 2 Cro. & Jer. 278; Bateman v. Phillips, 4 Taunt. 157.)

Cowling, contrà, argued that the cases upon the subject supported the application; that he was only seeking to have the document stamped, and was not asking for a copy. That although the plaintiff was not actually a party to the letter, he had a sufficient interest in it to support this motion.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am of opinion that this rule should be made absolute. It is suggested that the defendants are in possession of a document to which they are parties, and which, it is alleged, is evidence for the plaintiff, and which, for the purposes of the present motion, must be assumed to be evidence, but for the want of a stamp. It is not proposed by this motion to obtain a copy of the document, but merely that it may be produced, in order that it may have a stamp put upon it, to make it receivable in evidence. The plaintiff, who wants this instrument, may fairly be said to have an interest in it. The case of Lawrence v. Hooper seems to have been decided on the ground that the rights of third parties were involved, and that therefore the application ought to have been made to the Court of Chancery; but it is not suggested here that any such objection can arise; besides, the application is merely to stamp, and is very different from that of taking copies. This distinction does not occur in Neale v. Swind and Bateman v. Phillips, both of which were subsequent to that of Lawrence v. Hooper, and I think, therefore, that, in accordance with the rules of practice, I ought to make the rule absolute. Rule absolute.

Friday, May 23.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF THE WEST RIDING OF YORKSHIRE, in the matter of the appeal between ST. PANCRAS, MIDDLESEX, appellants, and BRADFORD, YORKSHIRE, respondents.

Where an application is made for a mandamus to justices to hear an appeal, all the material facts should be stated in the affidavits on which the motion is made.

A notice of appeal given by a majority of the churchwardens and overseers is good; and notwithstanding the act of appealing is legally the act of all the parish officers, a statement that the notice is by "a majority" is sufficient, and it is for the other side to shew that the majority had no authority to act for the whole.

This was a rule obtained in Michaelmas Term last, calling upon the justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue commanding them to enter continuances and hear an appeal between the above parishes. It appeared that an order of removal had been made for the removal of a pauper from Bradford, Yorkshire, to St. Pancras, Middlesex; that no notice of appeal was given within the 21 days; but before the pauper was actually removed, notice of appeal, together with the grounds, were served, the commencement of which was as follows:—"Take notice that we, the undersigned, being a majority of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of St. Pancras, in the county of Middlesex, do intend," &c. This was signed by five persons, one as churchwarden, and the four others as overseers. On the case coming on at the last October sessions, the appellants were required to prove their notice of appeal; and on cross-examination it appeared that there were six churchwardens and overseers of the appellant parish; and it was then objected on the part of the respondents, first, that as the appellants had given no notice of appeal within the twenty-one days, they had no power to give it until the pauper was actually removed; secondly, that a notice of appeal purporting to be given by a majority only, and there being nothing to shew how, where, or when the signatures took place, was bad, for that a notice of appeal, in contemplation of law, is the act of the whole body of churchwardens and overseers, and a majority have no right to appeal merely as a majority. The sessions being of this opinion on both points, refused to hear the appeal. On obtaining this rule the first of these objections only was mentioned as the ground for the application.

R. Hall and Pashley now shewed cause, and contended, 1st, that in moving for this rule, upon the first ground only, which, after the decision in Reg. v. The Justices of the West Riding (reported in 4 Law T. 160), was a perfectly obvious objection, and in omitting to inform the Court of the second objection, which was the substantial one, and which justified the justices in the decision they had come to, a material fact had been kept from the Court, which would justify its dismissing this application. 2nd. That the objection upon which the justices acted—that the notice of appeal was bad, in having been upon the face of it given by a majority, as a majority, and not for the whole body, was a perfectly good one; for that, although a majority is competent to act in such a matter, it can only be as and for the whole body, who ought to have an opportunity of exercising a judgment on the subject of appealing; that the document should purport to be the act of the whole, and not of a part, notwithstanding the notice may be given by a majority only. (Reg. v. The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 2 Q. B. 705; 3 B. & Ald. 382; 1 B. & P. 136; 7 B. & C. 314; 9 B. & C. 648; Ex parte Harnley, 13 L. J. 39.)

Pickering, contrà, was not called on.

WILLIAMS, J.—This rule must be made absolute. I perfectly agree that if the Court is applied to for a mandamus on an affidavit which imperfectly states what occurred at the sessions, and it is shewn that what is omitted is material, the Court, considering it as a delusion which is attempted to be practised upon it, will discharge the rule with costs; but in order to make this rule applicable, such points ought not to be impalpable and mathematical points, but real and substantial ones. Now it appears to me that the objections taken at the sessions were purely ideal, and the counsel for the respondents has given up the first. Then as to the second, it is said that it ought to appear that the act of appealing was the act of the whole, and not merely of a majority of the parish officers, and that the notice upon its face is the act of a part of that body only. But it appears to me that the presumption is the other way, and that it lies on the other side to shew that the majority had no authority to act, and were not acting for the whole. Except you introduce a presumption and a supposition for which there is really no foundation, this statement must be taken to be sufficient.

Rule absolute without costs.

Where an insolvent had defended an action and thereby caused the plaintiff to incur costs in obtaining judgment, such costs must be added to the plaintiff's debt in the schedule.

Cooke opposed the insolvent, who was a builder, on behalf of a creditor for 59*l.* for money lent. An action had been commenced against the insolvent for the amount of some checks, to which he had pleaded the general issue. Plaintiff obtained judgment, and his costs were taxed at 27*l.* These costs were not inserted in the schedule of the insolvent. The debts set out in the schedule amounted to 293*l.* 6s. 3d. and if these costs were to be added, the whole amount of the insolvent's debts would exceed 300*l.*, and being a trader, his petition was consequently dismissed.

Petition dismissed accordingly.

Ex parte REA, re RANGECROFT.

Where a trader is summoned under sect. 11 of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, and makes a deposition that he has a good defence to a part only of the demand, he must admit the remainder of the demand.

John Rangecroft, a trader, appeared to a summons under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 11, granted on an affidavit by Rea, that he was indebted to him in 70*l.* and requiring Rangecroft to appear and make a deposition as to whether he owed the said debt, or any part thereof. Rangecroft having appeared, and filed a deposition in the form given in Schedule B. 2, which alleged that he had a good defence to a part of the demand, application was made to the Court to dismiss the summons under the 32nd of the General Rules and Orders, and in pursuance of the notice endorsed on the summons under that rule. The 32nd rule directs that if the defendant shall appear at the time appointed, and shall refuse to admit such demand, but "shall, as to the whole of the said demand, or a part of it, make a deposition on oath that he believes he has a good defence to the same, he shall be entitled to his discharge from the summons."

The solicitor for Mr. Rea objected that the deposition was not sufficient to discharge Rangecroft from the summons, for that under the 12th section of the Act he was bound to admit, in his deposition, that portion of the demand to which he had not deposed that he had a good defence.

Mr. Commissioner EVANS.—He must make the admission. The object of the Act is to afford the plaintiff conclusive evidence of his debt.

Re CLOVER.

Where the last examination of a bankrupt has been adjourned sine die, and a considerable time has since elapsed, the Court will take the last-mentioned fact into its consideration, and not withhold the bankrupt's certificate for life.

Where the bankrupt's accounts have been passed under the above circumstances, the Court will direct the expense of the meeting for passing the accounts to be paid out of the bankrupt's estate.

This was a meeting called at the expense of the bankrupt, to pass his last examination. The fiat was issued in the early part of the year 1832. In the month of November of the same year, the meeting for the last examination of the bankrupt was held, when the Commissioner adjourned the examination sine die, not considering the accounts of the bankrupt satisfactory. A dividend of sixpence in the pound was paid shortly after out of the bankrupt's estate, and a reversion in some property of the value of 300*l.* to which the bankrupt was entitled, had just now fallen in, and a further dividend had been declared thereout. The bankrupt had not made out any fresh accounts since the adjournment sine die.

Duncan appeared for the bankrupt.

The bankrupt was opposed by a solicitor on behalf Mr. Hadland, one of the assignees, on the ground that the accounts upon which the bankrupt now sought to pass were the same accounts which the Commissioner in 1832 considered unsatisfactory. He was not prepared at the present time to go into any specific objection to the accounts, but rested his opposition on the opinion of the Commissioner respecting the accounts in 1832.

Mr. Commissioner FANE.—The question is whether the postponement of the certificate for twelve years is not sufficient. I think the bankrupt ought not to be punished for life. I shall pass the bankrupt's accounts, and name a day for granting the bankrupt's certificate.

His Honour then directed, on the motion of the counsel for the bankrupt, that the costs of this meeting should be paid out of the bankrupt's estate, and that the money paid into court by the bankrupt for this meeting should be applied for the costs of the the meeting for the bankrupt's certificate.

Ex parte JEREMIAH CLARK.

An affidavit of debt, under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8, must be made by the creditor himself, and cannot be filed if made by any other person.

An affidavit of debt against a trader, under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8, was tendered on behalf of Clark, the creditor, to the Registrar of the Court, to be filed. That officer refused, on the ground that it was not made by the creditor, but by his clerk. An appeal was now made to the Commissioner, and it was contended that the Act of Parliament said nothing about the affidavit of debt being made by the creditor himself. The words of the Act being, "If any creditor, whose debts shall amount to 100*l.* or upwards, shall file an affidavit, that such debt is justly due," &c. The Act only requires the affidavit to be filed by a creditor. In the case of Ex parte Hall (Mont. & Chitty, 365), in the Court of Review, it was held, that an affidavit of debt under the above Act of Parliament might be properly made by the registering officer of a public company. In the course of the argument in that case, it was stated by one of the judges, "that an affidavit of debt under the said Act was to be looked upon as strictly analogous to an affidavit to hold to bail, and as a substitute for it, and not as a process tending to a fiat."

Mr. Commissioner FANE.—I think the Act requires that the creditor himself should make the affidavit. This affidavit cannot, therefore, be filed.

Ex parte SERLE.

The particulars of demand required to be delivered to a trader previous to his being summoned under the 11th sect. of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, need not set out all the items of the account separately, with dates to each item.

A trader appeared by his attorney upon a summons taken out by Serle, under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, sec. 11, and prayed that it be dismissed, on the ground that the particulars of demand delivered were not expressed with reasonable and convenient certainty as to dates, &c. as is required by the 22nd of the General Rules and Orders in Bankruptcy. The particulars of demand were in the following form:

April. To goods delivered as per monthly account . . . . .
May. To goods . . . . .
June. To goods . . . . .

Such particulars of demand would not be sufficient in an action at law. The judges at chambers invariably order the particulars of demand to be delivered with dates and items. The particulars delivered under this Act ought to be at least as precise as would be required in an action at law.

His HONOUR, after consulting with one of the other commissioners, said,—These particulars are sufficient. The account states, "To goods delivered as per monthly account." You have had that account, and must know what the goods were.

Re FORD.

A mortgagee, with ample security for his mortgage, must nevertheless be inserted in an insolvent's schedule, and the insertion of such a debt will cause the dismissal of the petition, where the mortgage debt exceeds 300*l. and the insolvent mortgagor is a trader.*

This was the day named for the final order, when Stone appeared to shew cause. He stated that a mortgage debt, which, when added to insolvent's other debts, increased them to an amount exceeding 300*l.* had been omitted from his schedule. Under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 6, no trader was entitled to petition whose debts amounted to more than 300*l.*

Gray, attorney for the insolvent, suggested that trade debts only were intended to be included in the 300*l.* and that mortgage debts, where the mortgage creditor had full security, were not required to be entered in the list of debts in the schedule.

His HONOUR.—The insolvent's schedule must include all his debts. A mortgage debt is as much a debt as any other. It appears that the insolvent is a trader owing more than 300*l.*; his petition, therefore, must be dismissed.

Petition dismissed, and insolvent remanded.

Re EVERSLEY.

Where insolvent has contracted debts, relying only on his wife paying them out of her settlement, the Court will not grant an unconditional final order, but will compel insolvent to gradually satisfy the debts as his wife receives her settled income.

In this case the insolvent, on his coming up for his final order, was opposed by a creditor, on the ground that he had contracted his debts without reasonable assurance of ability to pay them.

Homes, for insolvent, said that insolvent's wife was entitled under her marriage settlement (a copy of which had been filed) to an income of about 400*l.* per annum, and he relied on his wife's paying all his debts out of this income.

His HONOUR.—I shall not in this case grant the final order at once. The insolvent must set apart 100*l.* every six months for the payment of his debts, until the whole are paid or satisfied. I shall adjourn this hearing for six months, when, if any creditor satisfies me that he has not been paid a rateable proportion of the sum of 100*l.* the protection shall be refused. If no creditor appears at the hearing six months hence, or any future hearing, the insolvent will have his protection renewed from six months to six months, until the whole of his debts are satisfied.

CLOWES v. CLOWES.

Divorce.

Circumstances under which a divorce will be allowed.
Misrepresentation by the wife of her name and circumstances is no ground for annulling a marriage.
Malicious desertion does not of itself bar the husband's suit for a divorce by reason of the adultery of his wife.

The facts of this case, which was argued some time since, sufficiently appear in the judgment which was pronounced by

Sir H. JENNER FUST.—This was originally a suit of nullity of marriage by reason of fraud in obtaining the license, promoted by Mr. Edward Clowes against Harriet Jones, falsely calling herself Clowes, who had been married in the name of Emily Harriet Geraldine Terry, and represented herself as the daughter of Admiral Terry. Mr. Clowes, a young man, had become acquainted with this person in Nov. 1840, when she was only 16 years of age, at a certain house in George-street, Adelphi, where she went by the name of Harwood, and she agreed to reside with him as his mistress. On the 11th of December, 1841, they were married, she having previously imposed upon Mr. Clowes, in June, 1841, a child, of which she alleged she had been prematurely delivered, during his temporary absence, as their own. After their marriage, Mr. Clowes disclosed the fact to his father, and, in order to make him believe that the child was born in wedlock, by postdating, concurred in altering the certificate of its birth. The deceptions which had been practised by Mrs. Clowes having been discovered by the father of Mr. Clowes, a suit was commenced to avoid the marriage, on the ground of fraud and deception; but the Court held that there was no error de personâ, and that the misrepresentation of name and circumstances was no ground for annulling the marriage. The wife engrafted upon the suit a prayer for restitution of conjugal rights, which was met on the part of the husband by a plea of adultery, and this plea was in its turn met on the part of the wife by a charge of malicious desertion by the husband (who had gone to reside abroad) and of persecution on his part and that of his family and agents, which had left her in penury and destitution, and driven her, or rather entrapped her, into the commission of adultery with a person who went by the names of Cooper, Pardy, and Godfrey, and who kept, or was connected with, a place for the sale of dogs, called the Canine Repository, in Bury-street, Bloomsbury-square. The learned judge was of opinion, the fact of adultery being thus admitted, that the articles in the wife's allegation, which pleaded circumstances whence malicious desertion and persecution were sought to be inferred, were left without proof, or were disproved. These Courts had never decided that malicious desertion per se was a bar to a husband's suit for a divorce by reason of the adultery of his wife; the dicta went the other way; but in this case the point was not raised, as there had been no malicious desertion, the husband having been rather desirous (as appeared from his concurrence in the fraud practised upon his father and by his letters) of sustaining the connection with his wife. It was certainly, the learned judge observed, a strange and inexplicable thing that Mr. Edward Clowes, the husband, should have been imposed upon by the improbable representations of Mrs. Clowes respecting the child—which it was clearly proved had been procured by her from Wales, she having never been delivered of a child—and that he should not have made inquiries into the matter. But this had no effect as a bar to his remedy. With regard to Mr. Clowes, senior, and his family, no imputation whatever rested upon them; they had had recourse to no other measures than were perfectly justifiable, though the Court might regret that the allowance made by Mr. Clowes, senior, to the wife, of 30s. a week, had been withdrawn, since its continuance might have prevented this suit. But it had been withdrawn for very sufficient reasons, namely, the suspicious conduct of Mrs. Clowes, in receiving the visits of an elderly gentleman, who made her presents, and was once admitted into her bedroom. There was no evidence to shew that Mrs. Clowes had ever suffered from penury or distress; on the contrary, she seemed to have had the command of money from some source. Upon the whole, he had no doubt in pronouncing that the wife had entirely failed in the proof of her allegation, and that Mr. Clowes was entitled to the sentence of divorce he prayed.

BLOUNT v. FIFE.

Church rate—Costs.

A parish permitting a long accumulation of arrears of church-rates and then suing, will for such neglect be left to payment of its own costs.

Sir H. JENNER FUST gave sentence in this case, which was a suit for subtraction of church-rate by the churchwardens of Streatham against Mr. Henry Fife, an inhabitant of the parish. The rates sued for were due for four years, 1838, 1839, 1840, and 1841, and amounted to 26*l.* 17s. 4d. no proceedings having been instituted for their recovery, either by summoning the party before a magistrate, or by proceeding, in an ecclesiastical court, till March, 1843, when this suit commenced, and no reason was assigned for not enforcing these rates at the time. The party proceeded against appeared and defended himself in person, but, having brought in his responsive allegation, he abandoned the conduct of the case, having examined no witnesses, nor appeared at the later stage of the suit. The learned judge was of opinion that the churchwardens had sufficiently proved their libel, and that the party proceeded against had failed to shew any tenable ground of objection to the rates. He, however, censured the delay which had taken place in enforcing the rates, and then proceeding for four rates at once, which was an improper practice and productive of unnecessary expense, as well as unjust to the party and to the other parishioners. In condemning Mr. Fife in the rates sued for, he should not, as in ordinary cases, saddle him with all the costs, but condemn him in only a moiety of the costs, leaving the parish to pay the remainder, and he hoped it would be a lesson to the parishioners, not to allow rates to accumulate in this manner.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

IT will be seen that Lord BROUGHAM has laid upon the table of the House of Lords a pile of Bills introducing a variety of law reforms, the greater portion of which emanate, we believe, from the Society for the Amendment of the Law. Some of them are undoubted improvements; others are of questionable character; all will require careful examination by the practical men of the Profession before they can be adopted by the Legislature. It is not intended to press them during the present session. They are brought in that they may be discussed during the recess; and to that more leisurable period shall we postpone the consideration of them.

The retrospective sketch of the progress of law reform with which the noble lord prefaced his budget of Bills, was interesting, but much too long to be transferred to our columns.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

LAW REFORMS.

MONDAY, May 19.—Lord BROUGHAM brought forward his Bills for the amendment of the jurisdiction of the country. In the early part of his speech his lordship paid a high compliment to the members of the two law commissions, which, seventeen years back, had taken the lead in promoting law reform, and to those who had followed in their steps. But though much had been done, he said, much still remained to do, and he proceeded to state a few cases in which the law was still defective. The noble lord began by commenting at great length on the state of the law of real property, and proposed a Bill for facilitating its conveyance, one for facilitating the granting of leases, and one to render the assignment of satisfied terms unnecessary. His lordship next passed to the law of evidence, in which great and salutary reforms might be made; and proposed a Bill to enable parties to be examined on the trial of civil actions, and another to facilitate the admission in evidence of certain official and other documents. The noble lord also proposed a Bill to give a remedy by way of declaratory suits, and one to further the administration of criminal justice. His lordship proceeded to point out that the law of marriage was in a most confused state; that an Act consisting of three lines, passed last session, only rendered this confusion worse confounded; and proposed to bring in a Bill for amending and declaring this part of the law. His lordship concluded by calling the attention of the House to the state of the law of debtor and creditor. Now that imprisonment for debt was abolished, he thought the Houses of Parliament should give up the privilege of not paying their debts. Why should members of Parliament be the only persons in the empire exempted from satisfying the just demands of their creditors. He should bring in a Bill making them liable to pay their debts out of their property, and subjecting them to punishment if they fraudulently made away with it. He should call this bill an Act for securing the real independence of Parliament. He trusted he should see these measures pass, along with the General Registry Act, that for amending the criminal, and that for digesting the civil, code. Could he see all this effected, he should rest happy and contented from his labours.—After a few remarks from Lord CAMPBELL, the following Bills were severally read the first time, and ordered to be printed:—An Act for securing the real Independence of Parliament; An Act for amending and declaring the Law of Marriage; An Act to give a Remedy by way of Declaratory Suits; An Act to facilitate the Granting of Leases; An Act to facilitate the Conveyance of Real Property; An Act to render the Assignment of satisfied Terms unnecessary; An Act to facilitate the Admission in Evidence of certain Official and other Documents; An Act to enable Parties to be examined on the Trial of Civil Actions; and An Act for furthering the Administration of Criminal Justice.

ROYAL COMMISSION.

TUESDAY, May 20.—The royal assent was given by commission to the Exchequer Bills Bill, and six private Bills. The lords commissioners were—Lord Lyndhurst, Lord Wharncliffe, and the Earl of Shaftesbury.

CHARITABLE BEQUESTS.

THURSDAY, May 22.—The LORD CHANCELLOR moved the second reading of the Charitable Bequests Bill. In 1818 a commission had been appointed to inquire into the charitable trusts in England and Wales, which had been renewed at various times till the year 1837. It had discharged its duties with the utmost ability, and its reports contained a digest of all information that could be brought to bear on the subject; but, having only powers of inquiry, no practical result had as yet followed from its labours. The present measure was intended to remedy the abuses which had been detected in the superintendence over charitable trusts. At present the Court of Chancery was the only tribunal which took cognizance of breaches of trust, but, though eminently fitted for fulfilling this office in the case of large endowments, the machinery of the court was inapplicable to small charities. The noble lord then proved the truth of this by several cases taken from the report, and proceeded to state that his measure would consist in the appointment by the Crown of commissioners who should have the power of filling up vacant trusteeships. It might be objected that considerable political influence was attached to these offices, and that the commissioners would use it in favour of the minister for the time being; but every precaution should be taken to make them independent, and to raise them above the temptation of perverting their influence for political purposes. He suggested that the funds for the support of these officers should be raised by 1 per cent. levied on the charities, or, if this were insufficient, the deficiency should be charged on the Consolidated Fund.—Lord BROUGHAM fully concurred in the praise bestowed by the noble lord on the Charitable Commission, and said he would support the second reading of the bill, but thought it had better be referred to a committee upstairs.—After a conversation in which Lords COTTENHAM and CAMPBELL and the LORD CHANCELLOR took part, the bill was read a second time, on the understanding that it should be referred to a select committee, to be nominated by the LORD CHANCELLOR.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

PRIVILEGE.

MONDAY, May 19.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL made a report to the House of Commons of the various steps which had been taken in the case of Howard v. Gossett, and of the decision which the Court of Queen's Bench had given upon the demurrer which had been entered to the plea, which he had filed in answer to the plaintiff's declaration. The judges of that court had one and all expressed an opinion that none of the privileges of that House were involved in their decision, which, they stated, proceeded entirely on the fact that the sergeant had exceeded the authority conferred on him by the warrant of the Speaker. Having stated the effect of that decision, he said that it now became important to consider what course the House ought to take next. At present the House had no materials before it on which to act. He thought that it should have before it a copy of the shorthand writer's notes of the arguments produced before, and of the opinions given by, the judges, and also of the record itself. He conceived that the most expedient course to be adopted would be that pursued in the case of Stockdale v. Hansard. In that case it was referred to a select committee to inquire into the course which it would be most advisable to follow, and he proposed that a similar committee should be appointed on the present occasion.—Lord HOWICK observed that the difficulty in which the House was now involved was but a realization of the prediction which was made by Sir T. Wilde a few years ago, when a similar case was under their consideration. Indeed it was nothing but the natural result of the pusillanimous course pursued by the House on a former occasion. If they persisted in the course which they had hitherto pursued, they would be dragged on, little by little, and step by step, until all their privileges would be left at the mercy of the courts of law. —Sir R. INGLIS controverted this doctrine. If Lord Howick was determined to plunge into a struggle with the courts of law on this point, he hoped that he would bring, not a sheriff, but the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench to the bar. The House of Commons had no right to claim a power greater than any now possessed by the Queen herself. The warrant should have stated for what cause, and for what time, the party was to be taken and kept in custody. Now the warrant in this case did not specify either the cause or the time of the imprisonment, but merely specified that Mr. Howard was to be taken and kept in custody; and such a warrant the Court of Queen's Bench held to be illegal.—The proposition of the Solicitor-General was adopted, and the appointment of a select committee of inquiry was in consequence agreed to.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

PENNY POSTAGE.—The finance accounts just published shew a large increase in the revenue of the Post-office. The gross revenue for the year 1844 was 1,705,067*l.*, giving an increase of more than 84,000*l.* as compared with 1843; the net revenue was 719,957*l.*, giving an increase of nearly 80,000*l.* as compared with 1843. The apparent increase in 1844, taking the Post-office returns for 1843 as the standard of comparison, is, in each case, more than double the amount here given; but as we stated at the time, those returns gave the revenue both gross and net too low by about 85,000*l.* The actual increase of net revenue in 1844 is greater than for any year since the war, except 1825, when it was 92,000*l.*; and 1836, when it was 81,000*l.* From 1840 (the first year of penny postage) to 1844, the increase of net revenue is nearly fifty per cent.

RAILWAY PROJECTS THIS SESSION.—A curious return has just been officially prepared, giving a list of all the railway projects submitted to the consideration of the Board of Trade, shewing the date at which each such project was received, and specifying those upon which the Board of Trade have already reported to Parliament. This return occupies five closely printed folio pages, merely enumerating the names of the railways under which the plans were deposited, between the 21st of November and the 3rd of December last. The 30th of November was the day named at the time as being the last on which they could be received. In this return there were enumerated the names of no fewer than 248 railways which have been projected, and for which plans have been duly prepared. Only 18 of those projects remain to be reported upon by the board.—Globe.

CAP. X.

An Act to make certain Provisions for Proceedings in Bastardy. (May 8, 1845.)

1. Proceedings in bastardy according to the forms in the schedule hereto valid.—Whereas divers questions have been raised as to the validity of certain orders in bastardy made by justices under the Act of the last session of Parliament, intituled "An Act for the further Amendment of the Laws relating to the Poor in England," which questions are wholly beside the merits of the cases; and it is desirable to remove such questions, and to prevent the recurrence of the same or similar questions in future; be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That where any proceedings have been had or taken before the passing of this Act, or shall hereafter be had or taken in matters of bastardy under the provisions of the said recited Act, and shall have been set forth according to the forms in the schedule hereunto annexed, or to the like tenor or effect, the same shall be taken respectively to have been and to be valid and sufficient in law; provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent any court of general quarter sessions from proceeding to hear and determine the merits of any case brought before them on appeal against any such order, or apply to any order heretofore made or professed to have been made under the said Act, which shall have been quashed on appeal to any general quarter session of the peace, or in respect whereof any writ of certiorari shall have been sued out of the Court of Queen's Bench, and served before the twenty-sixth day of February last, or in place whereof any other order shall have been made.

2. Mother, when order has been quashed for defect in form, may apply again within six calendar months.—And be it enacted, That when any order made under the provision of the said Act prior to the passing of this Act shall have been or shall be quashed for any defect therein, and not upon the merits, it shall be lawful for the mother of the bastard child in whose favour such order shall have been made to take proceedings for the obtaining of another order, according to the provisions of the said Act, at any time within the space of six calendar months after the passing of this Act, although the period limited for her application to the justice under the said Act shall have expired.

3. Form of recognizance to be given by the putative father.—And whereas power is given by the said Act to the putative father to appeal against an order made upon him by the justices in petty session assembled, giving notice of appeal as therein specified, and also sufficient security, by recognizance or otherwise, for the payment of costs, to the satisfaction of some one justice of the peace; be it enacted, That the condition of any such recognizance shall be for the appearance of the said putative father at such general quarter session of the peace as is required by the said Act, and his trial of the appeal thereat, and the payment of such costs as he shall be then and there ordered to pay; and that in respect of any order to be made after the passing of this Act, the party entering into any such recognizance shall forthwith give or send a notice in writing of his having so entered into such recognizance to the woman in whose favour the said order shall have been made; and unless he shall enter into the recognizance before one of the justices who shall have made the order, to one at least of such justices; and in default of his giving or sending such notice or notices as aforesaid, the appeal shall not be allowed; provided that the sending of such notice or notices by the post shall be taken to be sufficient.

4. Provision as to the mode of proceeding in cases of applications by women who are pregnant.—And whereas it is enacted by the said Act, that any single woman who may be with child may apply to a justice of the peace as therein described for a summons to be served upon the man alleged by her to be the father of such child, and that such justice shall thereupon issue his summons to such man to appear at a petty session, as therein also set forth, and power is given to such woman, after the birth of the child, to apply to the justices at such petty session for an order upon the person so alleged by her to be the father of such child; but doubts are entertained as to the time which shall be fixed by such justice for the appearance of the said man so summoned at petty session, and it is desirable to remove the same; be it therefore enacted, That the said justice to whom any application shall be made by any such woman being pregnant, shall summon the man to appear at some petty session at which he usually acts, to be held on a day after the time when the said mother shall expect the child to be born, provided that if on such day the woman shall not have been delivered, or the justices shall be satisfied that she has been so delivered at so short a period before such day that she cannot appear at the said session, it shall be lawful for the justices thereat to adjourn the hearing of the said case until some other day, and so from time to time until the child shall have been born, and the woman shall be able to attend at the said session; and it shall be lawful for the justices at their petty session to make an order in respect of any such application so made by such woman so pregnant to a justice as aforesaid, if she apply at such petty session within the space of two calendar months from the birth of the child, although more than forty days shall have elapsed from the time when the summons was served upon the alleged father, or was left at his last place of abode.

5. Putative father may abandon his appeal, and his recognizance shall not be estreated.—And be it enacted, That if at any time before the hearing of the appeal the putative father who shall have entered into any such recognizance shall give notice in writing of his abandonment of the appeal, to the mother of the child in whose favour the order shall have been made, and to the justice or justices before whom the said recognizance shall have been taken, and shall pay or tender to the said mother all sums then due under the said order, and such costs and expenses as she shall have incurred by reason of such notice of appeal, the said recognizance so entered into by the said putative father shall not be estreated, nor in any manner put in force or otherwise proceeded with.

6. The mother of the bastard child to be examined by the court of quarter sessions, on appeal against the order in bastardy; but no order to be confirmed unless her evidence is corroborated.—And whereas by the said recited Act it is enacted, that where any woman shall apply to the justices at a petty session for an order upon the person whom she shall allege to be the father of her bastard child, such justices shall hear the evidence of such woman, and such other evidence as she may produce, and shall also hear any evidence tendered by or on behalf of the person alleged to be the father, and if the evidence of the said mother be corroborated in some material particular by other testimony, to the satisfaction of the said justices, they may make such order as is therein set forth: And whereas power is thereby given to the putative father to appeal to the general quarter sessions of the peace against such order, but it is not therein set forth what evidence the said general quarter sessions shall or may hear on the trial of such appeal, and doubts have been raised as to whether the said mother can be heard by the said court of quarter sessions; be it therefore enacted, That on the trial of any such appeal before any court of quarter sessions the justices therein assembled, or the recorder (as the case may be), shall hear the evidence of the said mother, and such other evidence as she may produce, and any evidence tendered on behalf of the appellant, and proceed to hear and determine the said appeal in other respects according to law, but shall not confirm the order so appealed against unless the evidence of the said mother shall have been corroborated in some material particular by other testimony to the satisfaction of the said justices in quarter session assembled, or the said recorder.

7. Parties may be heard at petty session by counsel or attorney. 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 114.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for any woman who shall apply to the justices at any petty session for any such order as aforesaid, to be assisted in her application by counsel or attorney, and for any person summoned under the said Act to appear at any such petty session as the alleged putative father, to appear and make his answer thereto by counsel or attorney; and it shall be lawful for either of such parties to have all witnesses examined and cross-examined by such counsel or attorney.

8. Default of sufficient distress within the jurisdiction of the justices to warrant the commitment to prison. 5 Geo. 4, c. 18.—And whereas it is provided in the said first-recited Act, that if default be made by the putative father in payment of the sums ordered to be paid to the mother of a bastard child, any justice may by warrant cause such putative father to be brought before any two justices; and it is further provided, that such two justices may by warrant direct the sum appearing to be due under any such order, and the costs, to be recovered by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such putative father; and if upon the return of such warrant, or if, by the admission of such putative father, it appears that no sufficient distress can be had, then any such two justices may cause such putative father to be committed to prison: And whereas doubts have been entertained whether such power of committal exists where it is shewn that the putative father has goods and chattels whereon a distress might be levied, but the same are not within the jurisdiction of such justices; be it therefore declared and enacted, That the said justices are and shall be empowered to commit any such putative father to prison, according to the provisions of the said Act, if it appear on the return of such distress warrant, or on the admission of the putative father, that no sufficient distress can be had on any goods and chattels within the jurisdiction of the justices before whom he shall have been brought on such warrant of apprehension.

9. Magistrates of police courts may act alone in cases of bastardy.—And be it declared and enacted, That any one magistrate of the police courts of the metropolis, sitting at a police court within the metropolitan police district, has and shall have full power to issue summonses for the appearance of parties and witnesses before such police court, and to do alone any other thing in any matter of bastardy arising under the said Act within those parts of the said district for which a police court has been or shall be established, which may be done by any justices at a petty session holden for their several petty sessional divisions in any such matter arising within their divisions respectively, and that the sitting of such magistrate at such police court shall be within all the provisions of the said Act and of this Act concerning a petty session of justices.

10. "Petty sessional division," what to include. 9 Geo. 4, c. 43.—And be it enacted, That the term "petty sessional division" in the said Act and this Act shall be taken to include any division of a county, riding, or division having a separate commission of the peace in which one or more petty sessions have been or shall be usually held, or any division for the holding of special sessions formed or to be formed under the provisions of the Act of the ninth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the better Regulation of Divisions in the several Counties of England and Wales," or of the Act of the sixth year of the reign of his late Majesty amending the same; and that where there are two or more petty sessions usually held in any such division, or where any justice acts for two or more of such divisions, he shall require the party whom he shall summon under the authority of the said first-recited Act to appear at the petty session to be held in any such division, as he shall deem fit.

11. Interpretation of the word "recorder."—And be it enacted, that in the said first-recited Act and in this Act the word "recorder" shall be taken to apply to any person who shall preside as the judge at any court of general or quarter session held for any city, borough, liberty, or other place of limited jurisdiction.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE Terms treading so closely one upon the heels of the other, the usual summary of decisions on the Law of Magistrates will not be given until the close of the present Term, thus treating the two as one.

No event of peculiar interest has occurred to require comment.

We beg to direct attention to the case of Reg. v. Mortlock, which, owing to its importance, we have given in this LAW TIMES. It was argued and decided on Thursday last.

JUSTICES' CLERKS AND CLERKS OF THE PEACE BILL.

The following are the new clauses introduced by the committee as amendments in this Bill:—

Clause A.—Attorney for prosecution. That it shall be lawful for the justices of any division, if they shall think fit, with the approval of the justices of the county in general quarter session assembled, to order that the duties of any clerk to the justices, or clerk of petty sessions of the peace, shall include the transaction of all necessary business as attorney for the prosecution of offenders committed for trial within the district for which he shall be appointed, who shall be prosecuted at the expense of the county, and to fix the salary of such clerk accordingly.

Clause B.—Remission of fees. That any justice or justices before whom any proceeding shall be had whereon a fee is lawfully exigible, or before whom any person shall be summoned for non-payment of a fee contained in any lawful table of fees to be taken by clerks to justices, may remit such fee in whole or in part for poverty or other reasonable cause, in his or their discretion; and in every such case the justice or justices by whom any fee or fees shall be so wholly or partly remitted, shall cause an entry to be made, in a book or books to be for that purpose kept by the clerk to the justices, of the nature and amount of the several fees so remitted, and of the reasons for the remission in each case, which entry shall be signed by the justice or two or more of the justices authorizing such remission; and the production of such book shall be a sufficient voucher to discharge the clerk from the receipt of the several amounts so remitted in the account of fees to be by him rendered as herein provided.

Clause C.—Clerk of Indictments. That it shall be lawful for the justices of any county in general quarter session assembled, if they shall think fit, to appoint a fit person to be clerk of indictments, whose duty it shall be to prepare, engross, and present the indictments at the courts of general quarter sessions of the peace in all cases which shall be presented at the expense of the county, or which he shall be directed by the justices to prepare, and to pay to such clerk of indictments a reasonable salary out of the county rate, and every such clerk of indictments shall be entitled to hold his office until dismissed by a resolution of the justices in general quarter session assembled, after notice given at the general quarter session then next preceding of the intention to propose such resolution.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—There has been a great deal said within the last few months as to informality in orders in bastardy, and the following has just occurred with regard to a client of mine.

In the body of the order it says, "And whereas, it is now duly proved upon oath, that C. M. was delivered of a male bastard child, on, &c. and that the said A. B. had been duly served with the summons hereinbefore referred to," &c. Now, the service of the summons was not proved on oath, or in any other way, and in my opinion the order is bad; but, perhaps, some of your correspondents may have had a similar case; and I shall be obliged by your inserting this; and perhaps some of them may favour me with an answer. I am, Sir, yours, &c.

J. M.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE business of the Term began on Thursday. It is the longest and heaviest of the year, for in it and the sittings after, it is usual to bring up the arrears of the previous seven months, and to pronounce suspended judgments.

As promised, the LAW TIMES of to-day contains the judgment in the great case of Howard v. Gossett, on which it was erroneously stated last week that the judges were unanimous. It was not so; as will appear by perusal of the very learned and eloquent judgment, of which we give a verbatim report. Mr. Justice WILLIAMS dissented from the others.

It is confidently said that a new court will be created previously to Michaelmas Term, and that the commissioners have resolved to recommend many extensive alterations in the arrangements of the Terms, the Assizes, and the Circuits. The much-needed removal of the courts of law from Westminster to a more convenient and central site is also again occupying the attention of the Profession.

We give a portion of the new Orders in Chancery. But a complete edition of them, with practical notes and a very copious index, for office use, is preparing by G. F. ALLNUTT, Esq. Barrister-at-law, and will be ready in a few days. Inasmuch as, when they come into operation at the beginning of Term, every Solicitor will require a carefully-prepared edition of them for daily reference, we have deemed it right to request a gentleman of competent learning to frame such a one for the use of the readers of the LAW TIMES and the members of the Verulam Society.

ON THE GENERAL ISSUE.

ACTION ON THE CASE.

In actions founded upon fraud, the wrongful act is usually a fraudulent misrepresentation. "Not guilty" puts in issue the fact of the representation and the circumstances which make it fraudulent. These are usually the untruth of the representation, and the defendant's knowledge thereof. The case where circumstances which may conduce to the proof of fraud are stated in the indictment by way of explanation falls under a different head, which will be hereafter considered. As actual damage is, as it appears, an ingredient in this action, it is also in issue under not guilty, according to the preceding observations. By the 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 6, no action shall be maintained for misrepresentation of a certain species unless made in writing, signed by the defendant. A plea of this statute, for reasons which we propose to explain under the head of assumpsit, amounts to the general issue. (Turnley v. M'Gregor, 1 Dow. & L. 506; 6 M. & Gr. 46, S. C.)

The action upon the case on a warranty appears at first to resemble those founded upon fraud. Indeed, in the common form of declaration a fraud is charged; but since the case of Williamson v. Allison (2 East, 446), it has been considered as settled that fraud is not a constituent in this action. It must not be confounded with the action for fraudulent misrepresentation upon the sale of goods, which strictly belongs to the class last discussed. (Moens v. Hayworth, 10 M. & W. 147.) In the action now in question, it seems unnecessary even that the plaintiff should have been misled by the warranty; it is apprehended that he might succeed notwithstanding it appeared that he was aware at the time that the goods did not correspond with the warranty. If so, the breach of the contract, and not deceit, in any sense of the word, is the gist of the action, or, in other words, "the breach of duty, or wrongful act alleged," to which the facts of the sale and the warranty are inducement. From this it would follow that they are not in issue under not guilty—a conclusion to be regarded with the greatest suspicion, so far as it applies to the warranty, as being in that respect directly at variance with the opinion of Mr. Baron PARKE in Spencer v. Dawson (1 Moo. & Rob. 122). The book cited does not report the reasons of the learned judge, or the arguments of counsel.

Supposing the action upon a warranty to proceed upon the breach of a contract, the view above taken may be illustrated by considering here the effect of not guilty in actions against bailees and carriers, in which the charge is usually of a breach of duty by mere non-feasance. That duty arises out of facts which properly constitute a contract, and will support an action of assumpsit upon an implied promise. By the last example subjoined to the rule it appears that in the action upon the case against a carrier, not guilty does not operate as a denial of the receipt of the goods by the defendant, as a carrier for hire, or of the purpose for which they were received,—being the facts which make up the contract,—but only of the non-performance of it by their loss or damage. Accordingly in Webb v. Page (6 M. & Gr. 196), where the declaration, without shewing the defendant to be a common carrier, stated that he had contracted to convey goods of the plaintiff's from Maidstone to London, and had been guilty of negligence in the performance of the resulting duty, it was held that the defendant could not under the general issue shew a misrepresentation by the plaintiff as to the weight of the goods; for that could, under the circumstances of the case, only operate as a defence by avoiding the contract admitted on the face of the record. On the defendant's part it was urged in effect that, admitting the sole question raised by not guilty to be, whether or not the defendant had used proper skill and care in the carriage of the goods, still, in order to ascertain what amount of care was proper, regard should be had to the defendant's belief, founded on the representation of the plaintiff, that the weight of the goods did not exceed [illegible] cwt.; and thus that the representation became an element in the determination of the issue. The case of a bailment of a package may be put as an instance in which the defendant's ignorance of the nature of its contents might affect the degree of care to be used in its custody, and would, therefore, it is apprehended, be admissible under not guilty, with reference to that question. But in Webb v. Page no question of degree arose, for the van was so much overloaded that it was indisputable that there had been gross negligence; and as the defendant had admitted on the record that he contracted to carry the goods actually received, it became chargeable upon him. It was attempted to shew under the same plea that the plaintiff had himself packed the goods, and that the injury had resulted from the careless packing of them, and not from any negligence imputable to the defendant; but to this it was answered that it was the duty of the defendant to pack the goods, and that he was responsible for the consequences of insufficient packing though he had suffered the plaintiff to interfere. In fact, the defendant was bound by the contract to pack with reasonable precautions, and, if he was prevented from so doing by the act of the plaintiff, that fact might excuse, but could not negative the non-performance of the contract, which was the point in issue under not guilty.

The actions upon a warrantry and against traders and factors above considered, are instances in which an inducement is necessary to constitute the right for the infringement of which the plaintiff proceeds. Such matter of inducement is in most cases easily recognizable. Upon this head, the examples subjoined to the rule are particularly full. And, in the ordinary forms of declaration, facts of this nature are usually stated in their logical order before the charge. But sometimes the inducement is intermixed with the charge; as occurs, for instance, in the common form of declaration on the case for debauching the plaintiff's servant, in which the fact that the person debauched was the servant of the plaintiff is stated between the act and its consequences. The case of Torrence v. Gibbins (1 Dav. & Mer. 226) decides that the statement in question is not in issue under not guilty. It is otherwise in the action of trespass, for the same cause as we shall hereafter have occasion to shew. So in the action on the case for criminal conversation, not guilty admits the marriage; for the existence of that relation is matter of inducement. But in trespass for the same injury, the general issue puts the plaintiff to the proof of the marriage. Consequently the action upon the case is the preferable remedy for either wrong.

The inducement must be understood to comprise all the facts necessary to found that particular right for the infringement of which the plaintiff proceeds. This appears by the case of Wright v. Lainson (2 M. & W. 739). The declaration was for a false return of nulla bona to a writ of fi. fa., and in other respects similar to that in Wylie v. Birch, as above stated. It was held the plea of not guilty did not put in issue the seizure of goods belonging to the debtor, or any of the previous proceedings; for all these and the levy of the money were necessary to support the charge of not having it ready to be paid over to the plaintiff, and falsely returning nulla bona. It was argued, that as the declaration alleged that the defendant falsely returned nulla bona, the falsehood of the return was in issue, and therefore that the defendant was at liberty to shew its truth, by proving that the property in the goods had passed from the execution debtor before the seizure. In the same way it had been unsuccessfully contended in Frankum v. Falmouth (2 A. & E. 452), an action for wrongfully diverting a watercourse, that the defendant might, under not guilty, contest the plaintiff's right stated in the inducement, in order to shew that the diversion was not wrongful. The fallacy consists in concealing the distinction pointed out at the commencement of these observations between the several uses made in declarations of qualifying words. In the cases now in discussion, it is plain that "wrongfully" and "falsely" merely describe the legal character of the act, resulting from the existence of the facts stated in the inducement. (See 3 M. & W. 170, Lewis v. Alcock.)

PRACTICAL NOTES.—No. III.

PAYMENT INTO COURT.

THE frequency of actions in which admitted disputed claims are joined renders it extremely important that the effect of paying money into court should be distinctly understood, and we purpose, therefore, to shew what has been decided, and what principles have regulated the decisions upon it, although they may already be familiar to many. The practice of paying money into court dates from the reign of Charles II., when Serjeant Levinz made the first motion of the kind during the chief justiceship of Kelynge. Up to the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 21, it was allowed wherever the sum demanded was a sum certain and capable of being ascertained by mere computation, without leaving any discretion to be exercised by the jury. This should still be borne in mind, as no rule or judge's order is now necessary except in cases under the last-mentioned statute, or 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 2, or other special statutory provisions. (R. G. H. T. 4 Wm. 4, Pleading, 18.) The decisions prior to that Act are collected in Tidd, 9th edit. p. 619, but it is hardly necessary to repeat them here, as in any doubtful case a rule or judge's order would of course be obtained. One apparent exception, however, may be mentioned. The 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, ss. 12, 13, by which money is allowed to be paid into court upon bonds conditioned to make void the ___, upon payment of a lesser sum, at a day or place certain, does not authorize this to be done by way of plea; for the Court, under the statute, is to ascertain, through its officer, the amount actually due for principal, interest, and costs, and to discharge the defendant from the debt; whereas, in the ordinary method, the defendant, at his own risk, determines the sufficiency of the sum to be paid in. (England v. Watson, 9 M. & W. 333.) But the practice of paying money into court was altered, as well as extended, by the rules of H. T. 4 Wm. 4. It was formerly usual to plead the general issue to the whole declaration, whether a contract was set out, or the indebitatus form only used, and the money paid in was then considered struck out of the declaration; whereas now it must always be pleaded in confession and avoidance, to the further maintenance of the action, after all the other defences have been exhausted, and without any other plea to the same cause of action. (Sharman v. Stevenson, 3 D. P. C. 709; 2 C. M. & R. 77, 119; Thompson v. Jackson, 1 M. & Gr. 242; 8 D. P. C. 591.) The form of plea is given by R. T. T. 1 Vict. on which we may hereafter offer some remarks. But while there is no necessity of singling out any particular count or breach upon which to pay the money, the defendant may do so if he pleases, provided the cause of action is clearly separable from the rest; as in replevin for goods taken in closes A and B, money was allowed to be paid into court as to the goods taken in A, and as to some of those taken in B, and to avow and make conveyance as to the residue. (Lambert v. Hepworth, 2 Q. B. 729; 2 G. & D. 112; and see Marshall v. Whiteside, 1 M. & W. 188; Hodges v. Earl of Lichfield, 2 D. P. C. 741; and Smith v. King, ibid. 750.)

Effect of payment into court as an admission.—The general principle to be gathered from both the older and the more recent cases is, that payment into court admits, in every case, all the allegations contained in the declaration or count, to the precise extent to which, if traversed, the plaintiff would have been bound to prove them. (Dyer v. Ashton, 1 B. & C. 3; Archer v. English, 1 M. & Gr. 373; Cooper v. Blick, 2 Q. B. 913.) We will illustrate this, first of all, in the case of payments upon the indebitatus counts, and then upon special counts.

On the indebitatus counts.—The general nature of these counts only binds the plaintiff to prove some contract or contracts within the description given, and therefore the defendant admits only that, by virtue of some such contract or contracts, he is liable to the amount paid in, and no further. Before referring to the leading case of Kingham v. Robins (5 M. & W. 94, 7 D. P. C. 352), it should be observed, that by Meager v. Smith (4 B. & Ad. 673), and Booth v. Howard (5 D. P. C. 438), it was decided that the particulars of demand, although annexed to the record, formed no part of it, in order to ascertain upon what ground the payment was made, and to estop the defendant, who had paid money into court generally, from disputing the several items there stated. In Kingham v. Robins, then, there were counts for use and occupation, for goods, chattels, and fixtures, and upon an account stated. The amount paid in exceeded the sum specified in the first count and the particulars for rent, and the plaintiff contended that it was unnecessary for him to prove any precise contract for fixtures; but it was held that the defendant had only admitted his liability upon some contract of that nature, and as upon judgment by default, the plaintiff must have proved an agreement and the value, so he was equally bound to do so after payment into court, to entitle him to recover more than the sum paid in. Walker v. Rawson (1 M. & Rob. 250) was declared to be bad law, and the dicta of Parke, J. and Littledale, J. in Meager v. Smith, as to the similarity between payment into court and payment before action brought, were incorrect. Ravenscroft v. Wise (1 C. M. & R. 203, 2 D. P. C. 676) was also in effect overruled, for it had there been held that the defendants were precluded by payment into court from shewing that one of them was not liable upon the supposed contract. This point, however, again came under the consideration of the Court in Stapleton v. Nowell (6 M. & W. 9), and it was there expressly decided that

A plea of payment into court by two defendants pleaded to one or more indebitatus counts, admits only that the plaintiff has a cause of action on one or more of the contracts declared on, to the amount of the sum paid in, and does not admit the defendant's joint liability to any greater amount, although the plaintiff gives evidence aliunde to fix one of the defendants with liability to a greater amount.(a)

The Court of Common Pleas confirmed this principle in Archer v. English (1 M. & Gr. 873), and it was again upheld by the Court of Exchequer in Charles v. Branker (12 M. & W. 713, 1 Dowl. & L. 989). In the note to Archer v. English, the learned reporters suggest that "it would seem to have been a legitimate subject of inquiry whether the contracts to which the admission on the record applied, were not the same as those shewn to be the only contracts existing between the parties." But this could not well be, consistently with the doctrine that no particular contract at all is admitted, and the law is certainly now settled otherwise. Stevenson v. The Corporation of Berwick (1 Q. B. 154) affords another illustration. There, in an action against a corporation for work done as an attorney, payment into court did not preclude the defendants from shewing that they never had retained the plaintiff as attorney. Similarly, it would seem, that in an action by an apothecary, payment into court would not admit the plaintiff's title to sue as an apothecary; since the statute 55 Geo. 3, c. 194, s. 21, requires proof of his capacity to sue, upon grounds of public policy; and his incapacity need not be specially pleaded. (Wagstaffe v. Sharpe, 3 M. & W. 521; Wills v. Langridge, 5 A. & E. 383.) Beyond the sum paid in, every defence is open, if admissible under the rules of pleading (Reid v. Dickens, 5 B. & Ad. 499), in which case the Statute of Limitations was pleaded to part of a promissory note payable by instalments.

THE PROPERTY LAWYER.

NOTES ON CONVEYANCING CASES.

Trusts for the separate use of a married woman—Clause against anticipation.

THAT most useful series of provisions introduced into modern settlements, by which an income, and an income only, is received for the exclusive use of a married woman during her husband's lifetime, seems to be doomed to encounter peculiar hazards. Scarcely had the law of separate use been put upon a plain and intelligible footing, by the case of Tullett v. Armstrong (3 Mylne & Craig), when the very existence of that, which Lord Cottenham justly designated the most valuable part of settlements to the separate use, namely, the clause against anticipation, was threatened with annihilation by the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England, Sir L. Shadwell, in Brown v. Bamford (11 Simons, 127). We know of no recent decision which had exposed so many family settlements to danger, or which has excited so much disapprobation in the Profession. It is true that the same learned judge had made a somewhat similar decision in a previous case, Barrymore v. Ellis (8 Simons, 1); there, however, the peculiar form of the limitations gave some colour to the interpretation put upon them, and the same decree must have been made upon other circumstances; but the distinct and decided opinion expressed by the Vice-Chancellor in Brown v. Bamford, that the ordinary form of the clause against anticipation was insufficient for its intended purpose, created universal alarm.

The case of Brown v. Bamford is this: J. B. by will gave leasehold houses and stock in the funds to trustees, "upon trust from time to time during the natural life of his daughter, Sophia Bamford, or until she should be duly declared a bankrupt or take the benefit of any Insolvent Act, to pay the clear rents, interest, dividends, and proceeds of such leaseholds, stocks, funds, and securities unto such person or persons, for such intents and purposes, and in such manner as Sophia B. by any writing or writings under her hand, when and as the same should become due, but not by way of assignment, charge, or other anticipation thereof, should, notwithstanding her then present or any future coverture, direct or appoint; and in default of any such direction or appointment, or so far as the same, if incomplete, should not extend, into her proper hands, for her sole and separate use, independent of the debts, control, or interference of her then present or any future husband; for which purpose the receipts in writing, under the hand of his said daughter, should, notwithstanding any such coverture as aforesaid, be good and sufficient discharges for the last-mentioned rents, interest, dividends, and proceeds, or so much thereof as should in such receipts respectively be expressed to be received." After the testator's death, Sophia Bamford agreed to guarantee a debt to the Sunderland Banking Company, and the present bill was filed to enforce payment of that debt out of the separate estate bequeathed to her by J. B.'s will. The bill charged that, according to the true construction of the will, Sophia Bamford had both a restricted power of appointment and, in default of appointment, the general uncontrolled dominion over the income bequeathed to her for life. Bamford and wife demurred to the bill for want of equity, and in support of the demurrer, it was argued that this case was distinguishable from Barrymore v. Ellis.

The Vice-Chancellor, without hearing the other side, said that the words were in substance the same as those in Barrymore v. Ellis, and that he adhered to his opinion in that case; he then proceeded thus:—

I admit the common form to be in the terms stated, but it always appeared to me to be defective. When I was in the habit of drawing conveyances, and wished to settle on a lady property over which she was to have no power of anticipation, I always used to introduce an express proviso that no receipt should be a discharge to the trustees, except a receipt given by the lady, for the rents or dividends then actually become due. The proviso to which I allude declared, as far as my recollection serves me, that the receipts of the lady, under her own hand, to be given from time to time after the rents or dividends should have actually accrued due, should be, and that other receipts should be, sufficient discharges to the trustees for the amount of the monies therein expressed to be received. In this case, however, there are no negative words in the receipt clause, and therefore there is nothing to restrict the power which Mrs Bamford had, to dispose of or charge the rents and dividends of the trust property, under the general direction to pay those rents and dividends to her for her separate use.

Now, the obvious remark on this passage is, that no negative words could make the intention of the testator plainer than the expressions of his will, that the trustees should pay the rents and interest, "when and as the same should become due, but not by way of assignment, &c." as his daughter should appoint; and that the subsequent payment of the rents and interest to her, in default of appointment, is to be governed and qualified by the same condition. What is to be paid to her in default of appointment? Why, clearly the rents and dividends when due, but not by way of charge.

The words of the limitation in Barrymore v. Ellis were,

To pay the annuity, as the same should become due and payable, to such person or persons, and for such intents and purposes as Lady Barrymore should, by any writing signed with her name, in her own handwriting, notwithstanding her coverture, direct or appoint, but so as not to deprive herself of the benefit thereof by sale or other anticipation; and for want of such direction or appointment, to pay the same to Lady Barrymore, for her own sole, separate, and peculiar use and benefit; it being thereby agreed and declared, that the annuity should not be subject to the debts, control, interference, or engagements of Mr. W. (the husband) and that the receipt or receipts of Lady Barrymore, or of any person so to be by her appointed to receive the same, should, notwithstanding her marriage, be sufficient discharges to the persons paying the same.

The Vice-Chancellor held, that this did not differ from a limitation to such uses as A shall in a certain manner appoint, and subject thereto to A generally, and that it was within the spirit of Cox v. Chamberlain (4 Ves. 631), and other cases of that class. Now Cox v. Chamberlain was a case in which it was a question whether a person having general power of appointment, with a limitation in default of appointment to himself in fee, had conveyed under his power or his interest, he having used words applicable to both. It would have seemed, but for the two cases of Barrymore v. Ellis and Brown v. Bamford, that such a question as the effect of the clause against anticipation could be but remotely affected by the purely technical reasoning applicable to cases on which Cox v. Chamberlain proceeded.

From the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England in Brown v. Bamford, an appeal was made to Lord LYNDHURST, C. who, in April 1843, affirmed the decree below. In giving judgment (reported 3 Law T. 69) his lordship said:—

In the restrictive clause, Sophia Bamford is authorized to make an appointment of the yearly income of the property, which she is restricted from anticipating; by that clause she is to have the power, by writing under her hand, when the rents become due, to dispose of such rents, but not by way of assignment or other anticipation. The question is, whether this restriction extended to the estate which she took in default of appointment; the words of the will being, that the trustees were, in default of appointment, to pay into her proper hands exclusive of her husband.

And his lordship thought the case not to be distinguished from Barrymore v. Ellis. His lordship, however, upon representations made to him of the serious evils this decision may entail upon families, whose settlements have been framed in reliance upon the validity of the usual clause against anticipation, has consented to have the case re-argued by one counsel of a side. It is not probable that judgment will be given immediately, but in the meantime it is desirable that the attention of practitioners should be directed to the subject. In order to guard against the risk of the ultimate affirmance of the decision in Brown v. Bamford, the following form may be substituted for the latter branch of the usual clause against anticipation:—

And in default of such direction or appointment into the proper hands of the said S B, for her sole and separate use and benefit independently and exclusively of the said L X, her intended husband, and without being subject to his debts, control, interference, or engagements, or to be aliened, anticipated, or disposed of by the said (wife) in any manner howsoever. And the receipts of the said (wife), notwithstanding her coverture from time to time, and only after the said (rents, interest, dividends) shall have actually become due, and no other receipts, to be sufficient discharges for the same.

Such a clause repeats the restriction upon the power of appointment, which, according to all reasonable construction, is unnecessary; but it complies, at all events, with the extremest requisitions of the decisions in Barrymore v. Ellis and Brown v. Bamford.

Other of the equity judges have not regarded Brown v. Bamford as an authority. The Master of the Rolls, Lord Langdale, in Harnett v. Macdougal (5 Law T. 18) expressly said that the decision in Brown v. Bamford had been affirmed "under circumstances which deprive it of all authority."

The limitation to the separate use, and the anticipation clause in Harnett v. Macdougal, were in the ordinary form; and on the authority of Brown v. Bamford, the married woman had made an arrangement which was, in effect, an anticipation of the income. On a petition to carry out that arrangement, the Master of the Rolls, after considering the cases, said,—

"The trust funds are settled to the use of such persons as Mrs. A. shall appoint, but so as that she shall not alienate, &c., and, in default, to her separate use. Mrs. A., having become indebted, desires to charge the fund; and this petition is presented to give effect to such charge. To make the order would be in direct opposition to all the authorities; and I must refuse to do so, except so far as the fund in hand is concerned. I have read the cases bearing on the subject, and cannot make the order asked."

The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce has also made a decision similar to that of the Master of the Rolls in Moore v. Moore (1 Collyer, 54). We shall return to this question as soon as the judgment has been given upon the second argument in Brown v. Bamford, to which the profession is looking with great interest; for, although ill consequences may be guarded against in future settlements, whether the Vice-Chancellor of England's decision be upheld or not, the havoc which will be made in existing settlements by an affirmative judgment will be altogether irreparable, except by legislative enactment.

Since the above was written, Brown v. Bamford has been re-argued before the Lord Chancellor, and now stands for judgment. From the intimations of assent to the able argument of Mr. Bethell, which his lordship threw out, there is reason to believe that the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England will not stand.

W.

(a) Goff v. Harris (5 M. & Gr. 573) was similar to Kingham v. Robins, with the further fact that fixtures were shewn to have been in the defendant's possession; but in the absence of proof of any contract, the plaintiff failed. Elgar v. Watson (1 Carr. & M. 494) cannot, therefore, be regarded as any authority against so many decisions to the contrary.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE BANK OF ENGLAND.—Mr. Fitzroy Kelly, Queen's Counsel and M.P. has received the appointment of standing counsel to the Directors of the Bank of England, in the room of Mr. Justice Erle, thei late counsel.

THE CIRCUIT-DIVISION COMMISSION.—(From Correspondent.)—The nine Commissioners have nearly completed their labours. The Spring Circuit is to commence on the 10th day of January in each year They divided 4 to 4 that the Northern Circuit ough to be diminished. They will recommend that Liverpool be added to the Norfolk Circuit.

ADMISSION OF ATTORNEYS.—The number of persons who have passed their examination before the examiners at the Law Institution, and have given notice of applying during Trinity Term, which commenced on Thursday, to be admitted as attorneys, amount to 116; there are also 21 applications for renewal of certificates, and three for admission, made pursuant to Judge's order of the last day of Easter Term.

BANQUET IN MIDDLE TEMPLE HALL.—On Wednesday evening, a magnificent entertainment was given by the Benchers of the Hon. Society of the Middle Temple to a large number of the Benchers of Lincoln's-Inn, the Inner Temple, and Gray's-inn. This, we understand, was the first occasion on which the representatives of the other Inns of Court participated in the hospitalities of the ancient society of the Middle Temple. The dinner took place at six o'clock in the body of the Hall; covers were laid for between forty and fifty, and the banquet was of the most sumptuous character. Among the company assembled were Sir L. Shadwell, Vice-Chancellor of England; Sir Herbert Jenner, Sir Frederick Thesiger, Solicitor-General; Sir John Dodson, Judge Advocate-General; Sir Charles Wetherell, Sir Robert Comyn, Sir Gregory Lewin, Sir William Owen, Messrs. Tinney, Stuart, Bethell, Simpkinson, Teed, Romilly, Jervis, Whateley, Chilton, Pollock, Alexander, Whitehurst, Temple, Burge, &c. Queen's Counsel, and several other leading members of the bar.

THE IMPROVEMENTS IN LINCOLN'S-INN-SQUARE.—The recently arid inclosure of Lincoln's-Inn now assumes a most verdant appearance. The pebbled pathways and asphaltum crossings of "days gone by" have given place to beds of earth, covered with plots of grass, and ornamented with shrubs in every variety of evergreen. Round the margin of the "garden" is a row of neatly-executed octagonal pillars of stone, which are intended as a protection to the beds. The earth is sustained round the edges by blocks of granite, so embedded that the fronts and upper sides only are visible. Novel means of drainage have been employed, the ground being preserved from saturation by circular wells, bricked round, into which the waste water will be carried. At present it is not publicly known whether it is intended to ornament the garden with a central fountain; such, however, is the general impression. The whole of the alterations are in excellent keeping, and the fact of a garden being planted within the area inclosed by the dingy walls of Lincoln's-Inn cannot but be regarded as indicative of the growth of feelings at once honourable to the "heads" of the "learned profession," and advantageous to the health of the citizens at large.

THE LATE EARL OF ROMNEY.—Probate of the will of the Right Hon. Charles, Earl of Romney, late of Boxley-house, in the county of Kent, who died on the 29th of March last, aged sixty-seven, was granted on the 15th instant to his son, the Right Hon. Charles, Earl of Romney (late Viscount Marsham). The personal estate in England is, sworn under 20,000*l.* He bequeaths to his wife 1,000*l.* for her immediate use, and leaves her the premises in Hertford-street, May-fair, and all the furniture at Boxley-house, and his stock and certificates in the Bank of Pennsylvania, and other foreign stock; he directs 10,000*l.*, under settlement, to be divided between his son, the present earl, and his daughter Charlotte, and bequeaths her an annuity of 300*l.* and a legacy of 500*l.* for her immediate use. The residue he bequeaths to his son the Earl of Romney.

WILL OF A MILLIONAIRE.—The will and codicil of Mr. Phillip John Miles, late of Bristol, banker, has just been proved in Doctors' Commons by Mr. William Miles, Mr. Philip William Skinner Miles, and Mr. John William Miles, the sons and executors, who have sworn the personal property alone to be above the value of a million sterling (the highest amount to which duty is payable). The deceased bequeaths to his sons (eight in number) 100,000*l.* each, and to William Miles an additional sum of 50,000*l.*; to his grandsons 100*l.* each; to several god sons 200*l.* each; to nieces and many other relatives legacies varying from 100*l.* to 3,000*l.*; to his two solicitors 200*l.* each, and legacies to three of his confidential clerks; to each of his banking partners legacies varying from 100*l.* to 300*l.* He observes that he has provided for his three eldest daughters, on their marriage, and bequeaths them 1,000*l.* each, and directs his collection of pictures and best service of plate to go with his mansion, in the nature of heirlooms. He gives to the Herefordshire Infirmary 200*l.*; to the Somersetshire Infirmary, 200*l.*; to the Gloucester Infirmary, 200*l.*; to the Bristol Infirmary, 500*l.*; to the Bristol Dispensary, 50*l.*; to the Lying-in Institution at Bristol, 50*l.*; and to three Dorcas Societies, 50*l.* each. He directs sufficient money to be invested to produce the sum of 70*l.* yearly, which is to be laid out in the purchase of bread and meat, and distributed every 1st of March to the poor of four neighbouring parishes. The residue, after very many legacies, is given to his sons and executors. The will is dated in 1842, and is of great length (79 sheets of paper, or 360 folios). The codicil is dated in 1844. The stamp affixed to the probate is of the value of 15,750*l.*

GERMANS.—Probate of the will of the Right Honourable William, Earl of St. Germans, late of Port Elliot, in the county of Cornwall, who died on the 19th of January last, was granted to the Right Hon. To his second son, Russell Gurney, barrister-at-law, he bequeaths all his freehold estates at Northlands and Abbots Farms, and the property at Cuckfield, in Sussex, and his chambers in King's Bench-walk; also his law library. To his son, Sidney Gurney, a legacy of 2,000*l.* To his three daughters ,000*l.* each. The residue of his property, at the death of Lady Gurney, to be divided among his children in portions, as directed by the will. To each of his nine grandchildren a legacy of 100*l.* and to his faithful clerk, who had been with him many years, a legacy of 400*l.* The will is written in draft, dated November 30, 1844, signed "John Gurney," witnessed by C. Ewens, Basinghall-street, and his clerk. On a separate paper is a list of his children and grand-children, and their ages, places of birth, &c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

The following letter, signed "S." treats of that much disputed question, and would have appeared last week but for want of room.

AUDIENCE OF COUNSEL AT SESSIONS.

This is a very important question. It is one which has been prominently mooted in Flintshire, but is nowise settled there. I may as well premise by stating that I take a moderate view of the matter, and am equally disinclined to espouse either extreme; at the same time I feel so fully impressed with the validity of the reasons advanced in a leading article of the LAW TIMES of this day three weeks, that I cannot but condemn the conduct of the Flintshire justices, and lament the course taken by the attorneys who practise at those sessions. They evidently pique themselves much on their unanimity; but, if the feeling of the great body of their brethren is any test of the matter, they are unanimously wrong.

"The President of the Denbighshire and Flintshire Law Association" (Mr. EYTON, and the thirty-five other attorneys who signed the document published a fortnight ago, base their opposition mainly on the opinions pronounced by the Recorders of Oxford and Lichfield on the right of attorneys to practise at sessions. (4 LAW TIMES, 303.) Nobody doubts this right; it is sanctioned by usage and special enactment; but what was the decision given by these Recorders—the echo, be it remembered, of Lord DENMAN's opinion? It was this:—That barristers were entitled to PRE-AUDIENCE, though not to SOLE audience. But is this the course adopted by the bench and the three dozen attorneys of Flintshire? It is not. Their decision practically is to exclude counsel. Not only does Lord DENMAN's dictum afford no foundation for their conduct, but it is directly at variance with it. Instead of giving pre-audience to barristers, they are giving it to attorneys. Is there a man among them who denies this to be a fact? So long as counsel sit unemployed whilst attorneys are engaged, the pre-audience is with the latter, by whom the former are excluded. It needs not that I should take upon myself to construe the term pre-audience: it is done ready to hand by a higher authority than your correspondent, and even a higher one than any in Flintshire. Mr. Serjeant TALFOURD, in his last edition of Dickenson's Quarter Sessions, p. 135, says:—"In cases where counsel have not been accustomed to attend, but two or more barristers wish to do so, it is usual for them to intimate their desire to the chairman or recorder, and to request that they may have pre-audience; and if this request is granted, the attorneys cannot afterwards be heard in their presence unless all who attend should be retained on one side." Now this is precisely what pre-audience means; it means that counsel shall be heard in preference to attorneys, but not in exclusion of them. It may be that but one counsel is in attendance, therefore sole or exclusive audience is an untenable demand; and it may very well be that in an appeal case there may not be four counsel present, and then an attorney would have a right audience. But beyond this Lord DENMAN's opinion does not go; and in giving attorneys a right to be heard in preference to barristers I think the Flintshire bench have directly opposed themselves to the judgment of Lord DENMAN.

The proper mode of bringing the question to an issue is, I incline to think, by applying to the Court of Queen's Bench for a mandamus to the justices of Flintshire, or such order as the Court may deem proper under the circumstances of the case. Be this as it may, the barristers who have begun this matter must not let it drop. They are bound to have the question decided by competent authority, for it affects both branches of the profession, and involves, or may involve, highly important interests.

On the general policy of the right of counsel to be heard in preference to attorneys I think that (out of Flintshire) little doubt exists. Attorneys have a field of practice quite large enough without adding the distinctive functions of advocates. Their local feelings are apt to arise, and the conduct of business is more impassioned and less decorous. I know nothing of Flintshire attorneys, they may be competent as counsel, and icebergs in temperament,—they may be all they say of themselves, and the barristers who appeared among them may be as briefless as they are described by Mr. EYTON, and yet is the general policy and expediency of the rule unaltered. Attorneys of eminence and respectability habitually refrain from enacting the advocate unless compelled to do so by the circumstances of the case. This at least is the rule; a rule honoured and sanctioned by the great body of the Profession. I insist on the general principle. I know I am fortified in it by the voice and feeling of the great body of the attorneys of England. Law there may be none on the subject; but there is the opinion of the first and noblest of our judges—that of the best and highest text-book on the subject—and that of the general opinion and all but universal usage of the Profession itself, against the three-dozen gentlemen in Flintshire, whom, therefore, I venture to think wrong. I think them, moreover, wrong in manner as well as in matter. Why do they impute incompetency to Counsel whom they have never tried? They say:—

"That the barristers who attended and claimed exclusive audience at the last Flintshire sessions may, without invidiousness, be designated as of small standing at the bar; as not one of them to our knowledge has ever been engaged in a parish appeal, by far the most important and intricate branch of sessions practice, or ever drawn or settled the grounds of an appeal, which latter demand more practical than theoretical knowledge of the Law of Settlement; and it is not known that any one of them has ever led in a prosecution, or been intrusted with the defence of a prisoner."

How do they know this? I am assured, on very good authority, that this is not the fact. And whether or not, these vague imputations against five or six professional men may be of serious injury to them. The fact that they have little business, if true, is no sort of proof of their incompetency; on the contrary, in the country, it frequently happens that the most competent have very little business, and vice versâ. It is said they cannot speak Welsh; neither can the counsel who attend the Assizes.

On the other side, it is alleged, that very improper reflections have been cast on these attorneys. If so, I, for one, strongly condemn them. If courtesy and forbearance, both in act and word, were ever required, it would be clearly on the part of a set of professional men, who, whether rightly or wrongly, are proceeding to take a certain share of business from others. I think any such intemperance of language, or undue reflection, most reprehensible; but that in nowise prevents me from upholding the right and the expediency of pre-audience for counsel at all sessions. I hope the Flintshire justices will review their decision.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, MAY 24, 1845.

TO READERS.

THE present is the first of the enlarged numbers of the LAW TIMES, which will in future be substituted for Supplements, whose great cost (each one being attended with a loss of no less than 40*l.*) has of course deterred us from resorting to them save in the most urgent necessity. By the present arrangement that loss will be so much reduced that we shall be enabled, whenever required by influx of reports or other matter of immediate interest, to provide for the occasion without serious inconvenience.

The present enlarged number, containing so many judgments and other important matters, will best illustrate the rule that will in future direct a resort to the same method for placing in the hands of the Profession the earliest and amplest information of all kinds; and during this busy period of the year such enlargements must necessarily be very frequent.

Many articles in type have been postponed to afford room for the important judgment in Howard v. Gossett, which is a verbatim report taken expressly for the LAW TIMES by Mr. GREGORY, short-hand writer. We were desirous of bringing up arrears of the one Term before the commencement of the next.

THE BAR AND THE PRESS.

AT last the Times has condescended to take some notice of the universal expression of disgust and indignation occasioned by its nefarious conduct in garbling and falsifying its reports, for the purpose of punishing Mr. Sergeant TALFOURD for some offence unknown to any but the conductors of that Journal, or, as some confidently assert, with the still more infamous design of advancing a rival of the learned sergeant, who happens to be connected, by ties of relationship, with some or one of the conductors of the Times.

But the form in which the defence appears, as well as its substance, partakes of the base and pettifogging character of the offence. It is unmanly and un-English, and must increase the contempt and loathing which have been already excited, wherever the story has been told. A letter appears, in large type, under the signature of "The Editor of a Country Newspaper;" but so palpable a fraud could impose upon no person; and, to give it an air of probability, a postscript states that the writer has sent his name and address, which he begs the Editor to make no secret of, if the authenticity of his communication be called in question. Never was there a more clumsy disguise. What Editor of a country newspaper has such an interest in the matter as to thank the Times for the course it has pursued? If it be possible for any to excuse the Times, and consider that it has not done wrongly in this matter, certainly there is no sane man who would see in the falsification of reports, to gratify private spleen or personal interests, a subject for congratulation and thanks. The letter is, in truth, a leading article, from the pen of the Editor, and intended to be his defence.

And what a defence! No acknowledgment of error; no apology to the public for the imposition attempted to be practised upon them; no promise of amendment. On the contrary, it is an elaborate attempt to justify the deed. But we must place it on record as a part of the legal history of the year.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR,—As a member of the press, I beg to offer you my hearty thanks for the uniform consistency and jealous care with which you uphold the dignity and privileges of the journalist; and I regret exceedingly that, in vindicating our claims to social rank and position, you cannot rely upon the co-operation of your contemporaries of the daily press. The sordid feeling that they are rival traders, and have a common interest in attempting to write down the Times, is so grossly apparent in the columns of the twin journals, that we naturally look to see them take up a position of trading hostility to the leading journal. But that another morning contemporary, whose pathetic exclamations on the degraded social position of English as compared with French journalists you transferred to your columns a few days ago, should join in the hue and cry against the Times, in a matter vitally affecting the honour of the press, may well lead one to doubt whether such representatives of our common profession deserve to have their pretensions to social equality with the highest in the land recognized and admitted.

I trust you will not consider it descending from the high ground you have very properly taken in a matter just now occupying attention among the Bar and the press, to allow me to offer a few remarks on the abstract question at issue.

Is a journal, then, bound to publish the name of a counsel engaged in suits which may be reported in its columns?

I maintain the negative of this proposition. If an editor thinks fit to mention a circumstance wholly unconnected with the principle of law at issue in the cause, it is pure matter of grace and favour on his part. If a barrister finds his name in the papers, his praises in every man's mouth, and his briefs in every attorney's blue bag, let him be grateful to the fourth estate, which has pushed him up the ladder of legal promotion, and helped him to professional emolument. But if he chance to find himself addressing only the Court in which he is pleading, and the auditors it may happen to contain, let him envy the happier fortune of his brethren who are permitted to put their lips to the great speaking-trumpet through which they are allowed to address the whole civilized world. If he is a wise man he will bethink himself where and what public insult he offered to the journal whose interests it is the duty of its conductors to protect, or whether some overweening conceit or desire to fill the public eye does not impose upon the journalist a corresponding duty of discouragement.

No man will contend that an editor is bound to contribute towards the public influence of a man who uses that interest to the prejudice of the journal he represents. And again, every newspaper editor knows how often it is necessary to set his face against the attempts of some persons to obtain for themselves incessant notoriety by means of the press. Here, then, are two cases in which the possession of the power of excision, and of saying what shall, and what shall not, be published in his paper, are absolutely necessary for the protection of the editor, and that of the public.

The name of the counsel is an accident in any case reported, which in no degree affects any principle at issue, any fact that may be stated, or any argument that may be employed. It is not necessary, and answers no useful purpose, that even the judge who tries the case should know the name of the advocate, or the circumstances of his eminence. The duty of a journalist is clear. He must not misstate the facts of the case. He must not convert John Doe into the defendant, when he should figure as the plaintiff. Names, dates, and figures connected with the trial we look to have correctly represented. The Bar may even demand that a legal argument shall be reported with strict technical accuracy, if reported at all. And, believing, as I do, in the resources of the Times, I have little doubt that you will gratify the public when necessary and convenient, although you may be denied the assistance of any members of the Bar itself. But whether Mr. Bagfull or Mr. Briefless let out their tongues for hire on this side or that, or on neither, is a question very important, no doubt, to Mr. Bagfull and Mr. Briefless, and interesting enough to their half-dozen friends, but which an editor and his readers may be allowed to arrange between themselves in an amicable manner. I think I may venture to say that we seldom omit to publish what any large section of our readers care to know.

There are plenty of authors, actors, orators, and dramatists who reward with a sneer the profession that deals out to them fame, and more substantial benefits, with a liberal hand. These persons are, no doubt, delighted to see the attempt now made to wrest from the hands of the conductors of the press the privilege of deciding what modicum of personal intelligence they shall publish. By-and-by we shall have some one proclaiming himself a martyr, because the Times won't review his book; another, because the Times permits him to appear on the stage of Drury-lane without chronicling his debut. A politician will exclaim on the injury done to his professional prospects by the omission of his name in the list of those present at a fashionable party, and the non-publication in the Times, of his speech at a hole-and-corner meeting of his constituents. While the adapter and translator of the last French vaudeville will rend the air with complaints that the Times notices the trifle, and does not think it necessary to hand down to immortality the larcenist. To all these classes of persons it is of at least as much pecuniary importance as to the successful advocate, that their labours should be recited in your diurnal columns, yet they have not as yet raised the wail of persecution because in the exercise of your discretion you occasionally condemn them to obscurity. It is left to the Bar to put on the air of injured innocence, and to say to the press, "You would not do it to one of your own size!" The peculiar modesty of the Bar occasionally, it must be confessed, stands them in good stead.

It is reported that the Bar mess on one circuit have endeavoured to brand the press as an inferior profession, by forbidding its members to report for the newspapers. If the daily papers were animated by the esprit de corps of their French neighbours, now would be the opportunity to shew the barristers on this circuit how much the Bar owes to the press, and how little, on the other hand, we are indebted to the Bar. And that is the inferior profession, forsooth, whose breath is necessary to the other's success, and which slays learned counsel when it ceases to notice them.

Your obliged and grateful servant,

THE EDITOR OF A COUNTRY NEWSPAPER.

P.S. I inclose my name and address, which I beg you will make no secret of, if the authenticity of my communication is called in question.

The Times denies that a journal is bound to publish the name of the Counsel engaged in suits reported in its columns. The proposition cannot be disputed. A journal has a right to exercise its discretion whether it will name the Counsel at all. But that is not the question now at issue. The offence of the Times does not consist in not reporting, but in falsely reporting. If Mr. Sergeant TALFOURD were engaged alone in any case, the Times would have a right to omit his name, and say merely, "The Counsel for the plaintiff," or as the case may be. Of this no complaint could be made, however we might despise the motives that tempted to the exercise of such a form of enmity. But the reports under consideration are of very different character. They publish the names of some of the Counsel, omitting only that of the object of hostility. They give to the world as the arguments of B and C what in fact were the arguments of A, B, and C, or rather what were the arguments of A—for the leader's in almost every case are the lips by which the substance of the argument is stated to the Court. Therefore the real offence of the Times is not, as it desires the world to believe, a mere omission of a Counsel's name, but the publication of a deliberate falsehood. Always hateful is that to Englishmen, but peculiarly detestable when it is resorted to with the base motives that have tempted the Times into a course as discreditable to English journalism as, happily, it is new—for we doubt if ever before there has been an instance among English newspapers of advantage being taken of his position by the Editor, to use it for the advancement of private ends. The practice has been borrowed from the lowest of the American journals, and though to the leading English journal belongs the bad eminence of being the first to introduce it here, we trust that the universal burst of indignation with which it has been received, will shew it to be so thoroughly un-English, that all other journals will fear to follow the example. If so, out of evil will come a great good.

We must defer to another week some further remarks in support of the position that a Barrister cannot, consistently with his professional position, or his character as a gentleman, report for the Times.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

THE following is the richest specimen we have yet seen of this disreputable practice. It appeared in the Cambridge Independent Press of the 17th inst. The first advertisement was placed in one column and the other in another.

There is some ingenuity in this scheme of advertising oneself under pretence of finding fault with another.

TO THE EMBARRASSED.—IMPORTANT

There are thousands of persons who have struggled long against the force of misfortune, but few are aware that by a very recent Act all small traders owing debts not exceeding 300*l*., farmers, and all others owing to any amount, can be entirely raised from their difficulties, at a small expense, and without imprisonment or bankruptcy. All such Mr. Weston begs will apply to him at Moira Chambers, 17, Ironmonger-lane, Cheapside, by letter or personally.

TO THE EMBARRASSED.—IMPORTANT.

Mr. Editor,—An advertisement, headed as above, appeared in your paper of last Saturday, directing persons in embarrassed circumstances, and desirous of being released from their difficulties without imprisonment or bankruptcy, to apply to a Mr. Weston, Ironmonger-lane, London, who, however, I would observe, does not describe himself as a solicitor, nor does he appear as such in the Law List. I have had considerable practice in the Insolvent Debtors' Court during the last twelve years, both in this and the adjoining counties of Huntingdon and Bedford, and being a solicitor of the Court of Bankruptcy, I beg to inform all such persons as may be desirous of availing themselves of the recent Act, that they need not incur the trouble and expense of a journey to London to consult any party there, but that by applying to me (either personally or by letter), they may, at a moderate cost, obtain their protection. I have had several cases under the recent Act without advertising for them, and I may be allowed to express my thorough dislike of that most unprofessional method of obtruding oneself on the notice of persons requiring legal assistance, and that my only object in troubling you and the public with this letter is, to prevent the parties to whom Mr. Weston's advertisement is particularly addressed being impressed with the idea that it is necessary for them to employ some one resident in London, to transact the business for them.

Yours respectfully,

JAMES HUNT.

Cambridge, 16th of May, 1845.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

THE 12th number of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases, completing Part III. has been issued.

The 6th number of Cox's Criminal Law Cases, and the 6th number of Practice Cases, will be ready by Saturday next. The latter will commence the Equity Practice Cases.

Some valuable Precedents of Indictments will be appended to the Criminal Law Cases.

Cox and Atkinson's Registration Appeals are in the press.

Many more forms are in progress; among them Bastardy Forms, as set forth in the schedule to the new Act.

The subscriptions for the present year are due, and payment is requested.

As the prices at which the publications of the Verulam Society are supplied to members can only be sustained by the plan of pre-payment; in order to secure this it will be necessary to adopt the same arrangement as with the LAW TIMES, and therefore the members are requested to observe, that unless the subscriptions be regularly paid in advance, all the Reports, books, and Forms supplied will be charged to them at the full prices as to the public.

The very large number of defaulters, who have ordered and received the publications of the Society, but from whom neither entrance-fee nor subscription can be procured, nor even the courtesy of a reply to frequent applications, compels the adoption of the rule above stated, and which will be strictly observed for the future.

As a last resort, when letters have been tried in vain, the names of the defaulters will be notified to the members.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

The Law of Bankruptcy, Insolvency, and Mercantile Sequestration in Scotland. By JOHN HILL BURTON, Esq. advocate. Part the Second. Edinburgh, 1845. W. Tait.

THIS is a continuation of the work noticed in the LAW TIMES some time since as being the best compendium of the Scottish law of bankruptcy. In its arrangement it is a model of legal writing, and the author's plans might advantageously be adopted in our own law books. All who have occasion to look into the law of Scotland, as it relates to the subjects named upon the title-page, should refer to the volumes of Mr. BURTON as the best and the most accessible authority.

The Law Magazine, for May. No. III. New Series. Benning and Co.

THIS new number contains many articles of interest and worth; some on jurisprudence, some on practical law, some biographical, some critical, but all remarkable for ability. The first essay is on the subject of Criminal Law Reform, a few branches only of which are reviewed; but the commentary will, we hope, be continued. The second article is a practical one, "On the sale of Reversionary Terms for raising portions," and it will be read with advantage both by the practitioner and the student. "The Business Arrangements of the Courts" abounds in useful suggestions, which will, we trust, attract the attention of those in whom is vested the power of adopting them. The fourth article handles, with great acumen, the legal question as to the right of the Secretary of State to open letters at the Post-office. The writer doubts whether the power exists in law, but he is satisfied that it ought not to be exercised. "The Game Laws" are next reviewed and defended. A brief memoir of the late Mr. Baron GURNEY follows, and which we shall take an early opportunity of submitting to our readers. The seventh article reviews the new edition of Selwyn's Nisi Prius, and this is followed by an interesting and elaborate notice of the recent edition of Saunders's Reports. A short, but elegantly-written memoir of the late Lord WYNFORD; a powerful, deep-thoughted essay, suggested by the murders that have been so rife for some months past; a learned examination of the "habeas corpus in Jersey" question; and a vigorous, severe, but not altogether unmerited stricture on "Lord Eldon, his Biography and its Reviewers," complete the more elaborate papers; this last being the most able, as it certainly will be the most attractive article in the number. The usual notes on leading cases, events of the quarter, &c. follow. We regret that other more urgent claims forbid the insertion, just now, of any one of the many interesting and instructive passages we had marked for extract; but, as opportunity may offer, we will return to them.

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

April 24 and 30.

LIDGETT v. WILLIAMS.

Practice—Appeal motion—Charterers and masters of vessels—Pleading—Specific relief—General prayer for relief.

Motions before the Lord Chancellor are not strictly appeal motions, and it is no objection to such motions that the terms of the notice of motion vary from those of the original motion in the court below.

Where the captain of a vessel is sent out by charterers to get a cargo from a particular factor, and such factor is unable or refuses to supply the cargo, the captain is at liberty to return home; and any other goods with which the captain may lade the ship back must pay the freight, though the charterers will not be liable for any loss which may be incurred upon them.

In order to enable a plaintiff to obtain relief other than the specific relief prayed by his bill, under the prayer for general relief, the scope and frame of the bill must be such as would render such other relief proper; and it is not enough for that purpose to have a few facts and isolated charges introduced into the bill for different purposes, which, if picked out and put altogether, might shew a right to some other than the specific relief prayed.

This was a motion made by the plaintiffs, by way of appeal, from the decision of Vice-Chancellor Wigram. The application made to the Vice-Chancellor by the plaintiffs, Messrs. Lidgett and Sheppard, was to restrain the defendant from proceeding with the barque Magnet to any other place than Liverpool, and from disposing of her cargo of guano except as the plaintiffs might direct; and his Honour refused to grant the injunction. On the appeal motion, the form of the plaintiffs' notice was varied by asking for an injunction to restrain the defendant from proceeding with the vessel to any other place than such as the plaintiffs might direct; without specifying by name any place to which he should proceed.

Tinney, for the defendant, objected that the notice of motion on the appeal varied from the original notice of motion before the Vice-Chancellor, and that the present motion, therefore, could not be heard.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—These motions before me are called appeal motions, but they are not strictly so, they are rehearings. The rule is, that this Court won't take motions not previously heard in one of the other branches of the court, and, therefore, motions here are called appeal motions, because they have been heard before.

The case then proceeded. The circumstances, as disclosed by the pleadings and the affidavits of the parties, were these:—The plaintiffs, merchants in London, are owners of thirty-two 64th parts of the vessel the Magnet, and the defendant Williams is the owner of the other thirty-two 64th parts. The plaintiffs, with one Lamont, who was at Ichaboe, had chartered the vessel for a voyage to Ichaboe, on the west coast of Africa, for a cargo of guano, and they employed the defendant as her captain. A copy of the charter-party was delivered to the captain, but the charter-party itself was not signed until some time after the delivery of the copy. By that charter-party, the freight was 3*l.* 15*s.* per ton, and fifty days were allowed for obtaining a cargo, and seven days for demurrage. The captain sailed under sealed orders, which gave him very precise directions, and required him to procure the cargo, through Lamont. On his return voyage, while stopping at St. Helena, Williams wrote a letter to the plaintiffs, in which he stated that Lamont had been of but little assistance in procuring a cargo, and that he had no exclusive privileges on the island of Ichaboe, which enabled him to facilitate the shipping a cargo. On the arrival of the vessel in England, in June 1844, the defendant delivered up his papers to the plaintiffs in the usual way of business between captains and charterers of ships. The plaintiffs then proposed to the defendant again to charter the vessel for plaintiffs and Lamont, and an agreement to that effect was made on the 18th of July, 1844. A copy of the charter-party was delivered to Williams, which was in the same terms as that on the previous voyage, except instead of a limited period of fifty days, with demurrage, the defendant was to have "a sufficient time" for procuring his cargo; and the freight was to be 4*l.* 5*s.* per ton. Though what purported to be a copy of the charter-party was then delivered, no such charter-party was ever actually signed. When the defendant arrived at Ichaboe in October, he found that Lamont, having gone to St. Helena on his own business, had lost his previously alleged right to certain pits and stages, and that, under the regulations subsequently made by a committee of the captains and supercargoes frequenting the island, the whole island had been parcelled out amongst the agents and owners then at the place. Lamont was, therefore, unable to procure a cargo for the Magnet, and, in fact, only assisted the defendant to obtain forty tons of guano. The defendant made repeated applications to Lamont to furnish the required quantity of guano, which he stated he was unable to do; and he declined to purchase a cargo, lest the plaintiffs should repudiate such a transaction. The defendant then set about procuring a cargo by his own means, and through his own connections, and finally, by December, obtained a further quantity of 390 tons. The defendant, under these circumstances, contended that he had obtained the cargo for the owners of the vessel, and not on account of the charterers; and that, as part owner, he, the defendant, had a right to half the profits of the venture.

Romilly and Heathfield, for the plaintiffs, contended that the defendant, having been engaged as captain, was bound to use his best exertions to procure a cargo, and accomplish the object of his voyage; and that he had no right to appropriate the results of such exertions to his own benefit. They cited and referred to Abbott on Shipping, 249, Thompson v. Havilock (Abbott on Shipping, 168). The expenses of the ship, which amounted to 850*l.* had been paid by the plaintiffs; and even should the Court hold that as charterers they were not entitled to the cargo, still as managing owners they had a right to restrain the defendant from disposing of it at his own pleasure.

During their argument, the LORD CHANCELLOR said:—The plaintiffs send out to a particular factor, who was to supply a cargo; the factor did not supply a cargo, and the defendant, as captain, had then a right to come home without any lading. Instead of that, the captain embarks in an adventure. Supposing it had been a losing one, would he have had a right to have charged the plaintiffs with the loss? Had he a right to purchase a cargo, and charge them with the cost? He was agent to take a cargo on board, not to purchase one. He had no directions what to do if he got no cargo; and it would have been his duty to get freight in diminution of the loss. The plaintiffs are bound to pay according to the charter-party; they are owners of the vessel during the voyage, and they have a right to freight. If a captain takes goods in on freight, that freight belongs to the charterers; and if there is nobody there able or willing to act for the charterers, he exercises a sound discretion to take such freight; and if he likes to purchase goods, he is bound to pay the freight. How can he throw the loss on the charterers? He must stand to the loss, and is entitled to the profits; but he must pay the freight.

The plaintiffs claim as charterers, and then use the facts for another claim: they say that as charterers we have sold the cargo, and then they claim as managing owners to get hold of the cargo to perform that contract.

The defendant had no right to purchase a cargo of guano on their account. It was not that species of charter-party which transferred the possession of the vessel, and made the captain the servant of the charterers. The defendant was himself a part owner, and not getting a cargo on behalf of the charterers, he got one for the owners. The only question at present is, in whom the property of this guano is. It is clearly not the property of the charterers.

Tinney and Collins, for the defendant, read the defendant's affidavit shewing the circumstances under which Lamont declined to procure a cargo.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I do not consider, after this, that any notice was necessary. Three months had elapsed, when the defendant had been led to expect that he would have been detained three weeks only. Lamont was not in possession of any guano; he could only purchase it. The defendant says, that Lamont, being unable to provide guano, left him to himself to do the best he could. The defendant asked Lamont to purchase a cargo, but he refused; and the reason he gives is natural; namely, that having left the island and lost the pit [illegible] partners, the plaintiffs, [illegible] would have made him liable.

Tinney.—This suit claims the guano for charterers as against the owners.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The bill prays that the guano may be declared to be the property of the plaintiffs as charterers, and not as owners thereof; that the defendant may deliver the cargo, the plaintiffs consenting to account as the Court shall direct, having regard to their position as managing owners. The question is, whether the bill under the general prayer will entitle the plaintiffs to the relief they seek as managing owners. They contend that they are entitled to an injunction on the whole bill, notwithstanding the prayer; that the prayer does not signify. But they do not claim the cargo as owners; they claim it throughout as charterers.

Romilly.—There is a charge that the defendant was bound to obey the plaintiffs as managing owners.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In that very clause they claim as charterers, even if there was any thing in the claim that the defendant was bound to obey them as managing owners. Lamont saw that Williams was getting guano, and did not object to it. In Pullen v. Stainforth (in Abbot on Shipping), it was held that the act was not done under the contract. Here the contract is a subsisting one, because part of the cargo (the forty tons) was put on board, and must be dealt with under the contract. The defendant says, I do not exclude the plaintiffs, but I will not let them have the cargo as charterers.

Romilly, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The ownership and possession of the vessel continued in the owners, and not in the charterers. If the plaintiffs had brought an action against the defendant as captain for not bringing back a full load, the question would be what damages had thereby been sustained, and the jury would consider what the defendant had earned in their estimate of damages, and would hold that the plaintiff had not sustained so much damage as if he had not earned any thing. I am against the plaintiffs on all points, unless you can shew me authority that the charterer has the absolute possession of the vessel. The defendant had directions to go to Ichaboe to get a load of guano from Lamont. Lamont said he could not get any; and when told he might buy some, he refused, and went away somewhere. As it appears at present, I think the contract by the charterers has been broken.

Romilly.—If Lamont was absent, it became the duty of the captain to get guano by his own personal exertions.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—All this guano was in the possession, by right or by wrong, of certain persons, as much as any other property. Lamont had once a right, but lost it. Lamont might have sent him home.

Romilly declined to press that part of the case more, and contended that if the facts raised on the pleadings made a case on which the plaintiffs were entitled to some relief, it would be granted, though the prayer of the bill did not ask for the particular relief.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—But you must shape your bill for such relief. It is not sufficient that you shew a few unconnected facts inserted for a different purpose. What are the facts you rely on?

Romilly.—That the plaintiffs were the managing owners. A part owner having obtained a cargo cannot exclude the managing owners.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The plaintiffs claim as charterers, and directed the defendant to go to Liverpool to deliver the cargo, in performance of a contract made by them as charterers. He was not bound to obey such an order. The plaintiffs were making use of their character of managing owners for an improper purpose. Have the plaintiffs stated in their bill that he threatens to dispose of the cargo, and appropriate the proceeds?

Romilly.—The defendant says the plaintiffs have nothing to do with the cargo. If he would put the cargo in a warehouse in their joint names, the plaintiffs would be satisfied.

Tinney.—The defendant wishes to sell, the plaintiffs to keep the guano.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The defendant must not exclude the joint owners from the management.

Romilly.—(Palk v. Clinton, 12 Ves. 48).

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—As to the scope of your bill, the plaintiffs set out their case as owners of the cargo as charterers only. I think there is evidence that they were the managing owners of the vessel.

Romilly.—They were like tenants in common.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—But one tenant in common has no power to require the other to deliver to a person who has no right. You can't take out little facts, here and there, and put them together to make out a case for relief.

Romilly.—There is a charge that if the plaintiffs are not entitled as charterers, they are, as managing owners, entitled to the disposition of the cargo. The raising a claim to the whole, which the Court thinks unfounded, does not disentitle the plaintiffs to have their interests in the cargo protected.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I think the defendant's refusal has reference to the plaintiffs' contract to deliver the cargo at Liverpool. If I dispose of this motion, will the defendant allow the plaintiffs to have their share of the management of the cargo?

Tinney.—The plaintiffs have made no case by their bill.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—So far I am with you. The question, however, is, whether, upon allegations in the bill, the plaintiffs have not a right to control the disposal as managing owners. I cannot, how ever, find any part of the bill which does not arise out of the plaintiffs' claim to have possession of the cargo as charterers. I consider the refusal of the captain to go to Liverpool to be a mere resistance of that claim. They might have had good ground for an application, but all is explained by reference to that claim—that is, upon the frame of the bill. Upon the other point I have no doubt.

Re PENDER.

Taxation of bill of costs under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73—Delivering bill—Signing, necessity of—Delivery up of papers—Order for taxation in personal and representative character.

A bill of costs may be referred for taxation under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37, if it has been delivered, though not signed by the solicitor, nor inclosed in a letter signed by him, and referring to such bill.

Where a solicitor transacts business for a client personally, and delivers bills of costs for the business so done, and also other bills for which the client is liable in his representative character, the proper course is to obtain two distinct orders for taxation.

Though it is irregular to obtain the common order to tax a solicitor's bill of costs, if it direct that, on payment of what is due, the solicitor shall deliver up all papers, &c. belonging to his client, if there be other papers of his client in his possession than those relating to the bill, and on which the solicitor has a lien for other costs, and the order so obtained may be discharged for the irregularity; yet, under the circumstances of the case, a motion to discharge was refused.

It appeared in this case, that William Glasson had employed Messrs. Pender and Co. as his solicitors in a suit of Esdaile v. Glasson, in which he was a defendant, and in a cross suit of Glasson v. Lewis, in which he was plaintiff, and at the time of his death was indebted to them to a considerable amount for costs in those suits and other matters. In March 1843, William Glasson died, having appointed Elizabeth Glasson, his wife, and two other persons, his executors, who all renounced probate. In the July following, Messrs. P. and Co. delivered to Mrs. Glasson four bills of costs, amounting together to 333*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* for the business done for her late husband, which she handed over to her daughter, Miss Glasson, after she had, in March 1844, taken out letters of administration, with the will annexed, to her father, William Glasson Miss Glasson employed Messrs. P. and Co. in reviving the suits after her father's death, and continued to employ them therein, and in some other matters, till September 1844, when she appointed Messrs. Willoughby and Jaquet her solicitors; and on the 31st Oct. following an order was made, by which the latter were substituted in the room of the former as solicitors in the above causes. Several applications having been made to Messrs. P. and Co. by Messrs. W. and J. for their bills of costs against Miss Glasson, Messrs. Clayton and Co. their town agents, on the 4th of November, 1844, delivered to Messrs. W. and J. three bills of costs for business done in the above suits, &c. for Miss Glasson personally. These bills were not signed by Messrs. P. and Co. or their agents, nor were they inclosed in, or accompanied by, a letter subscribed in the manner required by the Act, and referring to them. There was an affidavit, also, of Mr. Clayton, to the effect that the instructions of Messrs. P. and Co. were to arrange certain bills of costs for them with Messrs. W. and J.; and that the bills had accordingly been delivered to Messrs. W. and J. unsigned, not for the purposes of, or with a view to, taxation, but that they might be the subject of an amicable discussion and arrangement. Mr. Clayton further deposed that he had offered to deduct certain items objected to by Messrs. W. and J. It also appeared that several meetings had taken place with a view to the arrangement proposed, but after much discussion they were not attended with any satisfactory result. On the 6th of November, 1844, therefore, a common ex parte order to tax the four bills was obtained by Messrs. W. and J. as it appeared from information at the Rolls, that the four bills and the three bills ought not to be included in the same order. Subsequently, however, at the suggestion of the Secretary at the Rolls that this order was irregular, it was discharged on notice to the other side. On the 10th of February last Messrs. W. and J. obtained the common order to tax the three bills; and by that order it was, amongst other things, required that Messrs. P. and Co. should, on payment of what was due to them, deliver to Miss Glasson all deeds, books, papers, and writings in their custody or power belonging to her. On the 22nd of the same month a petition for a special order for taxation of the four bills was presented by Miss Glasson, and Messrs. C. and Co. were requested to accept service thereof; but on the very same day they issued a writ in an action to recover from Miss Glasson the amount of the four bills, and served it on her on the 24th; and on the 27th they gave notice of a motion to discharge the order of the 10th for irregularity. This motion and the petition now came on to be heard together.

Kindersley and Goodeve, for the petition, and in opposition to the motion.

Turner and James, for the motion, and against the petition, contended that the three bills were not delivered by Messrs. P. and Co. with a view to taxation, but for the purpose of an amicable arrangement, and that they were not signed, or inclosed in a signed letter according to the requisitions of the Act, and that therefore the solicitors could not maintain an action upon them. The consequence was, they were not taxable under the 37th section of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73. The order of the 10th February was also irregular in requiring the delivery up of all deeds, &c. belonging to Miss Glasson, there being in the possession of Messrs. P. and Co. divers papers belonging to her as the administratrix of her father in the above suits, not relating to the then bills of costs. If obliged to give up all those papers, their lien would be lost The order ought to have been limited to the papers relating to the three bills. As to the four bills included in the petition, they objected that they were not properly signed, and that they never were in fact delivered to Miss Glasson, but to Mrs. Glasson, before letters of administration were taken out by the former.

April 10.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The principal question raised, is whether a party chargeable with a solicitor's bill of costs, and to whom a bill of costs has been delivered, is entitled to have the bill taxed although it may not have been signed by the solicitor, or inclosed in, or accompanied by, a letter which has been signed by him. The question depends on the true construction of the 37th section of the Act 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73. That clause begins by enacting, &c. [Here his lordship commented at large on the Act.] Taking the whole clause together, I am of opinion that the expression "such bill" means a solicitor's bill of fees, charges, and expenses for business done for his client; and that upon the true construction of the Act an order may be obtained for the taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs, which has been delivered without being signed. In general, I think it is an objection to an order of course of this kind, that it contains a direction to give up more papers than the solicitor is bound to give up, on payment of the bill, which the order itself directs to be taxed; but this is not an ordinary case, and considering the nature of the application, and of the order, I think the words "all papers" must be considered all the papers relating to the business, or all the papers on which a lien was acquired in the transaction of that business. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the motion to discharge the order of course must be dismissed with costs, and that, upon the petition, the usual order must be made for the taxation of the four bills for business done for William Glasson.

LAWSON v. PADDON.

An auctioneer, with whom part of the purchase-money of property is deposited, and who was made a party to a suit for specific performance, but whose name afterwards was struck out on amendment, will not be ordered to pay money into court, as a preliminary step to an injunction being issued to restrain an action-at-law for the recovery of it, but, upon his paying it in, the injunction will then be granted.

In this case, which is reported in 4 LAW T. 490, a motion was now made by the auctioneer who held the deposit, for an injunction to stay an action-at-law brought against him by the defendant to recover it, on his paying the money in court. Questions arising as to the title, the purchaser gave notice to the vendor that he rescinded the contract; but, after much correspondence, a bill was filed on the 15th October, 1844, by the vendor, and the auctioneer, Mr. Bromley, was made a party. The defendant Paddon insisted by his answer that he was not a necessary party, and accordingly, in the amended bill, his name was struck out. The defendant, though in his answer he stated he did not threaten or intend any action against the plaintiffs, or either of them, yet, a few days after the bill was so amended, brought his action against Mr. Bromley for the deposit, and notice of motion for an injunction was accordingly given.

Rogers, for the motion.

Southgate, contrà, insisted that it was merely a case of a purchaser bringing an action for a portion of the purchase-money. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Have you by your answer insisted that the contract is vacated?] Yes, we have. And as to the action, the writ was sued out on the 25th March, the order for amending the bill being obtained on the 19th of the same month, and the amendment being actually made only on the 31st. He cited Lucy v. Lindo (3 Meriv. 81).

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Here is a question of title pending, and in the meantime the defendant brings his action for part of the purchase-money. I will not grant the injunction till the money is paid into court; when it is, I will. But counsel ought to stop this litigation if possible. Take the order that, on payment, &c.

DEAN AND CHAPTER OF WELLS v. DODINGTON.

Statute of Limitations—Dean and Chapter—Evidence of conversion.

In 1820 the right to recover certain court-rolls and other documents accrued; in that year a letter demanding them was written, and in 1822 another letter on the subject was written. No distinct refusal was shewn. A bill to compel their delivery was filed in 1844. Held, that it was too late, the Statute of Limitations being a bar, as the letters, followed by non-compliance, were sufficient evidence of conversion; but leave was given to bring an action.

In 1757, the plaintiffs, who were the lords of the manor of Cheddar, Somerset, granted the manor lands to Samuel Dodington for the lives of himself and two other parties. The last life expired in 1820. Samuel Dodington died in 1813; the defendant was his executor. The bill alleged that the court-rolls of the manor and a variety of other documents, which ought on the expiration of the grant to have been delivered up to the plaintiffs, had come into the defendant's possession in his character of executor, and were retained by him. The defendant, in his answer, relied on the Statute of Limitations. In support of this defence two letters were proved: one written in 1820, requesting that the documents in question might be handed over; and the other in 1822, to the effect that, after what had passed at a particular interview, the plaintiffs' agent was surprised that no time "had been fixed" for delivering up the documents.

Russell and Heberden, for plaintiffs, cited Lord Buckhurst's case (Rep. 7; Jenkins, 254); Strode v. Blackburn (3 Ves. 221); Jackson v. Butler (2 Atk. 307).

Lee (amicus curiæ) referred to 10 Co. 93.

Chandless and Surrage, for defendant, were not called upon (except as to the point of giving the plaintiff leave to bring an action).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—If I am to consider, as I suppose I must (the plaintiffs' counsel not having shewn me the contrary), the Dean and Chapter to be without any special parliamentary privilege exempting them from the Statutes of Limitation, I must hold them to be bound by those statutes, and decide that this suit is too late. The letters, followed by non-compliance, appear to me sufficient to establish conversion—very little is sufficient for that purpose. All I can do for the plaintiff is to retain the bill for a twelvemonth, giving him leave to bring an action.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

REG. v. WILLCOCK.

Convictions for the unlawful possession of woollen materials under 17 Geo. 3, c. 56, need not set forth that they were found concealed in the house of the offender; neither need the penalties be specifically apportioned; but where the information has been made before one set of justices, and the adjudication before another, it must be so made to appear on the face of the conviction.

On appeal against a conviction under the 17 Geo. 3, c. 56, for the possession and concealment of woollen goods, the sessions quashed the order, subject to a case for the opinion of this Court.

Hall, in support of the order for quashing.—The conviction was clearly bad on several grounds. It does not properly distribute the penalty, but merely awards that the offender pay 20*l.* "to be paid in manner provided by the statute." This is bad. (Paley on Convictions, 213.) The 17 Geo. 3, c. 56, requires the penalties to be apportioned. That Act has not been repealed by 58 Geo. 3, c. 51, for the statement in the margin of the latter Act refers to an Act passed in "the thirteenth year of the reign," and not the seventeenth. In the margin the figures are 17, but that is a mere suggestion of the editor's, and will not countervail the express reference in the body of the statute to the chapter of another Act which does exist, and may be referred to; and mere loose words of reference will not suffice to repeal statutes. (Atkinson's case, 1 Mood. C. C. 273; Allen v. Vickers, 10 Ad. & Ell. 640; Rex v. Cartwright, 4 T. R. 490; Nixon v. Manning, 2 Q.B. 749.) This is a conviction under the 10th section of 17 Geo. 3, c. 56, for the 14th section does not create a new offence, and the conviction ought to shew that the materials were found concealed in a dwelling-house. The 10th section of 17 Geo. 3, c. 56, enacts, "that where materials used in the manufactures before mentioned are found, or known to be concealed in the possession of persons who have received the same, knowing them to be purloined, or embezzled, or of persons known not to be entitled to dispose of the same," and that by the 22 Geo. 2, c. 27, s. 4, "justices of the peace, after conviction of any offender for purloining or embezzling the said materials, or for buying or receiving the same, are authorized to grant warrants for searching the houses and other places of the persons so convicted—but no such authority is given before conviction, nor in any other house or place, except such as belongs to a person convicted,—and enacts, that "it shall and may be lawful for any two justices of the peace of any county, riding, &c. upon complaint made to them upon oath, &c. that there is cause to suspect that any such purloined or embezzled materials, &c. are concealed in any dwelling-house, &c. by virtue of a warrant under their hands and seals to cause every such dwelling-house, &c. to be searched in the daytime. And if any such materials, &c. shall be found therein, to cause the same, and the person or persons in whose house, &c. the same shall be found, to be brought before any two justices, &c. And if the said person or persons shall not give an account to the satisfaction of such justices how he, &c. came by the same, then the said person or persons so offending shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished in manner hereinafter mentioned, although no proof shall be given to whom such materials belong." Section 14 enacts, "that every person deemed and adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, in having in his or her possession any materials suspected to be purloined or embezzled, and not producing the party or parties, being only entitled to dispose of the same, of whom he or she bought or received the same, nor giving a satisfactory account how he or she came by the same; or of a misdemeanor in having, carrying, or conveying of the said materials suspected to be purloined or embezzled, and not producing the party or parties, being duly entitled to dispose of the same, of whom he or she bought or received the same, nor any credible witness to testify on oath, &c. the sale or delivery thereof, nor giving a satisfactory account how he or she came by the same (as the case shall be), shall for every such misdemeanor, forfeit, &c.; of which forfeiture, one moiety shall be paid to the informer, and the other moiety thereof to and amongst the poor of the parish, town, or place where such conviction shall be, or to such public charity or charities as the justices convicting shall appoint." Such misdemeanor means the being stopped in the night with goods concealed, and not giving "an account to the satisfaction of such justices," &c. The justices derive their jurisdiction from two other justices, and they, by complaint on oath of concealment, and by the fact that in the house searched by virtue of a warrant under their hands and seals, materials suspected to be purloined or embezzled have been found. Davis v. Nest (6 C. & P. 167) will be quoted on the other side; but the attention of Tindal, C. J. was never directed to section 13 of the 17 Geo. 3, c. 56.

But the 2nd section of 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, provides that "where the original complaint or information shall be made to any justice or justices, deputy lieutenant or deputy lieutenants, or other person or persons different from him or them before whom the same shall be heard and determined, the form of conviction shall be made conformable and according to the fact." This has not been done in this conviction. The section applies generally, and its bearing is not confined, as by express terms in the first section, to "cases wherein a conviction has taken place, and no particular form has been directed." The conviction ought to have stated that the information was laid before one set of justices and that the adjudication was made by others. It has not done so, and is therefore rightly quashed. (Jones v. Gurdon, 2 Q. B. 600; Leeds v. Summersgill, 17 Ves. 408.)

Overend, on the same side.—This conviction is not under the 14th section, but the 10th. The 14th fixes the punishment for every such misdemeanor. There must be some suspicious circumstances to ground the proceeding. The offence is, not giving a proper account to the justices, not, refusing to give any account to an unauthorized person. (R. v. Goodfellow, 1 C. & M. 560.) Then the facts constituting juris diction must appear. (Re Peerless, 1 Q. B. 143; R. v. Sutton, 13 L. J. M. 58; R. v. Walsh, 1 A. & E. 481.) The 2nd section of 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, is general, and is not restricted, as is the 1st section, to cases wherein a conviction shall have taken place, and no particular form for the record thereof hath been directed. (Jones v. Gurdon, 2 Q. B. 600; Rile and Lane's case, 1 B. & C. 101; Re Peerless, 1 Q. B. 143.)

Pickering and Hardy, contrà.—The 14th section creates a new offence, and this conviction is therefore good. But if not, the 10th and 14th sections, taken together, shew that the offence is dishonest possession, and the not satisfactorily accounting for the possession. In the form given by the statute it says, "specify the offence," and the issuing a warrant cannot render the innocent possession a criminal possession. Cheney v. Payne (1 Q. B. 712), Nixon v. Manning (ibid. 747), Davis v. Nest (6 C. & P. 167), were cited. The 17 Geo. 3, c. 56, s. 14, has been repealed by 36 Geo. 3, c. 51. (Bac. Ab. tit. Statute (L. 5); Sanderson v. Piper, 5 B. N. C.; Andre v. Fletcher, 2 T. R. 164.) The 2nd section of 3 Geo. 4 does not here apply, as a form is given in the Act. It cannot have been intended that a specific provision of an Act of Parliament of this kind should be interfered with by a subsequent general enactment. (Leeds v. Summersgill, 17 Ves. 408.) Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This case was a conviction, to which three objections were made: first, that the penalty was not properly distributed; secondly, that the conviction was by two different justices than those who received the information; and thirdly, that the goods were not found concealed, nor under a search warrant. If any one of these objections is fatal, the conviction is to be quashed, if not, it is to be affirmed. None of them can be properly considered without an examination of the whole law upon the subject. The conviction is framed on the 17 Geo. 3, c. 56, ss. 10 and 14, and charges in substance that the defendant had in his dwelling-house and in his possession certain materials suspected to have been purloined; that he and the said materials were brought before the convicting magistrates, when he gave no account to the satisfaction of the said magistrates how he came by them, nor produced at any time the person from whom he bought or received them. It then adjudges him guilty of a misdemeanor, and that he has thereby forfeited 20*l*., this being his first offence, to be paid in manner provided by the statute, and imprisonment in default of payment. The conviction is in the very words of the 10th section, with an addition, rendered necessary by the 12th section, and negatives that the appellant produced before the justices the person of whom the goods were bought or received by him. But an argument is founded on the introduction of the word "such," as applied to the materials among the operative words of the 10th section, where it is said to have reference to materials in the manner described in its preamble. The recital is, that materials used in the manufacture before mentioned are frequently found, or are known to be concealed in the possession of persons who have received them, knowing them to be purloined or embezzled, or of persons not entitled to dispose of the same, and the discovery and conviction of such purloiners and embezzlers, buyers and receivers of such materials, is full of difficulty, from the close and clandestine manner in which the offence is committed, and that there is still greater difficulty in proving whose property such materials are, and that it would tend to the discouragement and suppression of such offence if the discovery and conviction were rendered more easy, and reciting, by a former Act, justices, after the conviction of any offender for purloining or embezzling, or for buying and receiving the same, are authorized to grant warrants for searching the house and other places of the person so convicted; but no such authority is given before conviction, nor in any other house or place, except such as belongs to a person before convicted. Then the enactment follows, authorizing two justices, upon complaint on oath, or on affirmation by a Quaker, that there is cause to suspect that any such purloined or embezzled materials are concealed in any dwelling-house, &c. by a warrant under seal, to cause every such dwelling-house, and so on, to be searched in the daytime; then the misdemeanor is created; "and if any such materials suspected to be purloined or embezzled, shall be found therein, to cause the same, and the person or persons" in whose custody they are found, to be brought before two justices; and if the said person shall not give an accurate account to such justices how he came by the same, then he is to be punished. The word such is supposed to incorporate in the description of the materials found all the preceding particulars, or at least the fact of their being concealed in the dwelling-house where they are found. That we think is not the true construction. "Such" does not appear to be applied to the circumstances, but to the nature of the article. It is not "so found," or "found upon such search," nor found concealed; nor is there any reason why that limitation should be imposed, either by the legislature or by any judicial interpretation of the statute. The preamble recites the mischief, and, moreover, gives some additional powers for preventing it; but the offence meant to be put down is the possession of goods suspected to be purloined, without being able to give satisfactory account of them.

The difficulties that protected suspicious goods from seizure induced the legislature to provide a penalty against all in whose possession they might be found, without explanation how they were come by; and the primâ facie case is equally made out, whether they are found in possession in the course of an unexpected visit, or by virtue of a search-warrant. This was the view taken by the chief justice of the Common Pleas, at Gloucester, in the year 1833, and we think it perfectly correct. The concealment is merely evidence, and by no means essential to the definition of the offence. Secondly, whether the penalty is properly distributed by the adjudication is assumed to depend on the question whether the Act first alluded to was in those particulars repealed by the 58 Geo. 3, c. 57, s. 3, which repeals an Act passed in the 13 Geo. 3, intituled an Act with the title of that which I have just referred to; and here is set out the title of the 17 Geo. 3, not that of any Act passed in the 13 Geo. 3, nor, we presume, of any Act whatsoever. A mistake has been committed by the Legislature in the title of this statute; and having referred to the subject-matter, and looking to the mere contents of the Act itself, we cannot find the intention was to repeal the 17 Geo. 3, and we think that the incorrect year must be rejected. The third objection, arising from the information having been before different justices from those who convicted, is certainly not removed by the 3 Geo. 4, because the fact of such difference is not recited in the conviction as recited by that Act. The 3 Geo. 4 must be taken generally. If the latter part of the section—the part on which this turns, were confined in its operation to the case provided for in the former part,—the commencement—that is, of a proceeding by one justice where two are necessary for the hearing and conviction, there is no reason why a voluntary justice should be introduced. It clearly contemplated an information laid before two justices. There we have the words as general as may be, and a provision the application of which is as reasonable where two have received the information and two others have heard the evidence as where one only has commenced the proceeding. Upon this ground we think that the conviction was bad.

Order confirmed.

KEIR v. LEMAN.

Applications for rules to rescind judges' orders respecting taxation of costs are too late after the lapse of a year.

A rule had been obtained to shew cause why so much of a judge's order in this case should not be set aside as respects the costs in this action, which had been brought on a guarantee. The taxation had been in the presence only of an attorney's clerk, it being stated to the Master that an arrangement had been made, and that it was an amicable taxation. It was now sought to set it aside, on the ground that it was fraudulently made, and that the deductions were exorbitant.

Bliss shewed cause.—The application is too late. This order was obtained on the 4th of June, and the whole of Easter and part of Trinity Term has been suffered to go by before coming to the Court. (Reg. v. Austin, 1 Dowl. N. S. 666; Reg. v. Mayor of Swansea, 12 L. J. Ex. 281.) And where the judge has jurisdiction, it is for him to give costs, and his order will not be interfered with. (Doe dem. Muller v. Roe, 11 Ad. & Ell. 333; Sadler v. Palfreyman, 5 Ad. & Ell. 717.)

Kelly, Q. C. (with whom was Pashley), contrà.—This taxation was fraudulently made. The Attorneys Act had not passed when this action was brought, and a year had not elapsed.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—I think they have not sufficiently explained this delay, and we ought not to interfere with the learned judge's order.

PATTESON, J.—The application is not made till more than a year after action brought.

Rule discharged with costs.

WHARTON v. WALTON.

Covenant.

Where to a lease is attached an agreement which imposes penalties, it requires a separate stamp, though connected with and ancillary to the demise.

This was an action upon an agreement contained in a lease, whereby Wharton, a brewer, let a house to the defendant, and undertook to be answerable for his license, on condition that the defendant should buy all his beer of the plaintiff, who was a brewer. The agreement and lease at the head of it did not name the plaintiff, but the plaintiff's son; but it was executed by the plaintiff. The verdict was found for the plaintiff, with leave to move, on the ground that a lease-stamp was not sufficient to cover the agreement without an agreement stamp, there being none; and also that the agreement is bad, because the plaintiff's name was not properly stated in the commencement of the deed.

Vaughan Williams shewed cause.—The agreement is incidental to the lease, and the sale of the beer is in fact the consideration for the demise, and wherever a lease introduces matter connected with the demise, and not independent of it, the lease stamp suffices. (Price v. Thomas, 2 B. & Ad. 218.) The one contract was auxiliary to the other, and the lease stamp suffices for both. (Corder v. Drakeford, 3 Taunt. 382; Stead v. Liddart, 1 Bing. 196.) The son is named at the beginning of the deed, but at the end J. W., the plaintiff, holds himself bound. The meaning of this agreement is, that the plaintiff had demised to the defendant, and then the father comes and says, I will be responsible for what my son covenanted.

Welsby, same side.—That defendant shall buy the beer is a part of the agreement, for it is the consideration for which the lease is given. If the stamp refers to the beer, it need not be stamped, according to Stead v. Liddart; but looking at the whole instrument, it means to bind the defendant to the moneys under the agreement, and not otherwise, and therefore there is a sufficient consideration set out on the face of the deed.

Jervis, Q. C. contrà.—This is not a mere lease. (Clayton v. Burtenshaw, 5 B. & C. 41.) It is no part of the demise to make express terms and set forth specific penalties for the breach of the agreement to buy beer. It is not only a guarantee which requires no stamp; it is more, it is a penalty, and does require a stamp.

Townsend, same side.—The agreement was complete without the guarantee for any amount of money which may become due from Wharton, jun. This was a supplemental agreement, not auxiliary to the other, which does not fall within the exception in the Stamp Act.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—There is this clear and simple objection to the case put by Mr. Williams, that there is a penalty to be paid on the one part, which is guaranteed on the other part, and it certai requires a separate stamp. Rule absolute.

ROBINSON v. ROBINSON.

An error in the amount of a defeazance to a warrant of attorney does not make the warrant void against the assignees—Attesting attorney under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.

H. Hill moved for a rule nisi calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the judgment and execution should not be set aside wholly, for an excess in the levy. The warrant was dated April 21, 1844, and contained defeazance for 1,300*l*. Judgment was signed Nov. 1, 1844; fi. fa. issued to levy 1,332*l*. 4s. and 1,085*l*. 6s. 6d. was levied. A fiat issued Feb. 20, 1845; the assignees were appointed April 5. The first information they received on the subject was on May 5, and they immediately summoned the plaintiff to appear in the Court of Bankruptcy, and the facts upon which this motion was made were then elicited from him. The grounds were, 1. That the defeazance stated more to be due than was in fact due at the time, which made the warrant void. (3 Geo. 4, c. 39.) 2. That there was no sufficient affidavit of the time of the execution of the warrant of attorney. (Dillon v. Edwards, 2 M. & P. 550.) 3. That the attesting attorney was not the attorney for the defendant. It appeared that the usual attorney for the defendant had prepared the warrant, and a Mr. Dibben, not the plaintiff's usual attorney, had attested it, and had afterwards been employed by the plaintiff to sue out execution; but there was nothing to shew that he had been before employed by either. 4. That the assignees were entitled to recover the excess. The sum levied was more than what was due upon the warrant, which did not allow the plaintiff to levy for any sums for which he was liable on the defendant's account. (Duke v. Watchorn, 1 D. N. S. 265.)

By the COURT.—There may be a rule upon the objection as to the date of the affidavit and as to the excess, but there is nothing in the other two points.

Rule accordingly.

ELLIOT v. BLACKWELL.

It is evidence to go to the jury, in an action for goods sold to the wife, that the husband, though living apart from her, knew of the purchase.

Debt for goods sold to the wife of the defendant.

Verdict for the plaintiff, 30*l*.

The action was brought to recover 60*l*. for several articles of furniture not necessary for the wife.

Hayes.—The plaintiff knew the defendant was a married woman. The husband was a man-servant, and a letter was put in, shewing that he intended to make a settlement; so that it was not a common and ordinary separation, for they could not, under the circumstances, live together. The daughter swore that the goods came in, and she went, with the father's consent, to live with her mother; the father paying compensation for her board. This furniture was for a lodging-house, which the husband knew of, and would have derived benefit from. If he knew the wife had not ready money, and must have known that she had the goods on credit. This implies knowledge by the husband; and this was evidence to go to the jury, though not of the strongest kind.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—This appears to be an outrageous verdict; but there was evidence to go to a jury: the plaintiff will only have a rule on payment of costs; but perhaps the best course would be a stet processus. There must be a new trial, but the costs shall be reserved.

Humfrey, Q. C. contrà, was not in court.

Rule absolute.

Re SLYMAN.

District coroner, election of—Qualification—Stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92.

Robinson moved for a rule that should call on a gentleman named Slyman to shew cause why an information in the nature of a quo warranto should not issue commanding him to shew by what authority he assumes to exercise the office of coroner for the district of Newton, in the county of Montgomery. An election to the office of coroner for that district, under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92, took place in January last, and the returning officer returned Mr. Slyman as duly elected. To the return there were three objections: 1. That several persons, in number exceeding two hundred, had voted for Mr. Slyman, and were not qualified, and that several persons voted twice for Mr. Slyman. 2. That Mr. Slyman had not the necessary freehold qualification for the office. (2 Hawk. P. C. 102; 2 Hale, P. C. 55.) 3. That the town of Montgomery was one of the polling-places fixed by the returning officer, and as that is a borough having a coroner of its own, it was not within the district for which the election was to take place within the meaning of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92. To shew that a quo warranto would lie, he quoted R. v. Sayer (5 T. R. 376, n.)

REG. v. WILLATTS, Esq. and ANOTHER.

Certiorari—Order of removal—R. G. Pasch. 1 Anne—Coming to inhabit—Equivalent statement.

In the course of last Term a rule had been obtained by Pashley, that called on two justices of the borough of Reading to shew cause why a writ of certiorari should not issue for the removing into this court an order of removal made by them for removing a pauper and his family from Reading to Bickington. Several objections were taken to the order, one of them being that the order alleged that the pauper and his family "had lately intruded and come into the said parish of St. Giles, &c. and have become actually chargeable, &c." Against the rule cause was now shewn by Carrington.—1. The time for appealing is not out. (R. G. Pasch. 1 Anne; 2 Nol. 587; 1 Salk. 147; R. v. Harman, Andr. 343; R. v. Houlditch, 2 Bott. 356.) In this case there will be an opportunity of appealing after removal, if the removal shall be treated as a grievance; and, therefore, if the Court, according to the rule of Anne, could send back the case though the certiorari had issued; à fortiori, will it send back the case at this stage of the proceedings for obtaining the certiorari.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—That rule of court does not apply; it was made to prevent removal by the party in whose favour the order had been made, and to preserve the appeal to the other party.

Carrington.—The statement in the order is equivalent to the statements that have been used in the old forms. To say that persons have lately intruded themselves and are actually chargeable, is the same thing as saying that they have lately come to inhabit, which satisfies the statute of Charles. (R. v. Rotherham, 12 L. J.; R. v. Bnegar, 7 East, 377.)

COLERIDGE, J.—Would the word "intruded" do of itself?

Carrington.—Not without being chargeable.

COLERIDGE, J.—A tramping beggar who asks relief?

Carrington.—If he gets the relief, he is removable.

COLERIDGE, J.—Suppose he were to break his leg and to be tended in the parish?

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—We cannot give to the word "intruded" the meaning for which you contend. The rule must be made absolute. Rule absolute.

SEDGWICK v. HAMMOND.

Evidence under plea of no consideration in action by indorsee against acceptor of a bill of exchange.

This was an action on a bill of exchange, by indorsee against acceptor.

Plea.—That it was accepted for the accommodation of the drawer, and without consideration or value; and that it was indorsed without consideration.

The defendant offered in evidence an undertaking by the drawer, that he would pay the bill, and that after the bill was paid, it got into the hands of the plaintiff, and whilst in his possession, the defendant's son went to demand it for the defendant, when plaintiff made no claim upon the bill; but did not give it up, because it was not in his possession at the time.

Lord Denman, C. J. at the trial thought there was no evidence of the acceptance for the accommodation of the drawer, and refused to put it to the jury.

Humfrey, Q. C. now moved for a new trial.—Easton v. Pratchell (2 C. M. & R. 798), shews that this would have been a good plea upon general demurrer, or after verdict, without the averment that it was accepted for the accommodation of the drawer, and that therefore there was evidence to go to the jury that it was accepted without consideration.

Rule nisi, subject to an objection as to the admissibility of the undertaking.

DAY v. EDWARDS.

Right of pawnbroker to use pawn — Remoteness of damage.

This was an action upon the case to recover damages for injury caused by the plaintiff's drinking nitric acid out of a cruet, which had been put in by the defendant during the period he had it in his possession as a pawnbroker, the plaintiff's father having purchased the ticket and redeemed it from the defendant. The declaration stated the facts, with averments of the knowledge of the defendant, and that he gave the bottle to the plaintiff without informing or warning the plaintiff's father, and that it was received for the use of the family.

Lush now moved, in arrest of judgment, that the damages were too remote. (Levy v. Langridge, 4 M. & W. 337; Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29; Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 M. & W. 109.) It was not stated that the putting the nitric acid into the bottle was an improper use of the cruet in question; and a pawn may be used. (Story on Bailments.) It does not appear where the plaintiff's father put the bottle. If the rule in arrest of judgment is granted, a rule for a new trial should also be granted, because there was no evidence of the scienter offered, and the defendant may be held to be concluded by the averment of the scienter. It is true no point as to the scienter was made.

Rule nisi on both points, that the defendant may not be estopped by the averment of scienter.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF MANCHESTER.

Statement of chargeability.

Residence in the workhouse and averment of chargeability are sufficient.

This was an appeal from an order of sessions, confirming an order of removal, subject to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench upon the sufficiency of the statement of chargeability. The pauper stated that she had been married about five years; that her husband had left her, and that she had removed to Preston; that she was residing in the workhouse in that town, and was now chargeable thereto.

Cowling.—The statement is insufficient, for it does not shew any evidence of chargeability, as required, according to Reg. v. High Bickington (3 Q. B. 790; see 1 Bit. & Sym. 1). There might be residence in the workhouse without any charge or relief. It ought to be more precise, and shew relief.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—So it does.

COLERIDGE, J.—The statement of chargeability need not shew conclusive evidence.

Order confirmed.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF CUDDINGTON.

The payment of a uniform rent for land inclosed from the waste is not proof of an estate in the land when the origin of the inclosure is shewn.

It appeared that the sessions had quashed an order of removal, inferring from the facts proved by the appellant parish that the pauper was irremovable. It appeared that the pauper's grandfather had, at some time prior to 1769, built a cottage upon some waste land, which he occupied until his death in 1829. A receipt was put in, dated Sept. 26, 1769: "Received of J. Tomlinson, 2s. 6d. a year's cottage rent, due to W. Grey, esq." Subsequently another piece of land was taken, and 6d. added to his yearly payment, which was continued without any variation. In 1829, the husband of the pauper entered as the heir of the grandfather, and the rent was paid as before. In 1843, the collector of the rents spoke to her, and threatened to raise the rent, and she said she hoped he would not. From these facts the sessions had inferred that the cottage and land were an estate, which prevented the pauper from being removable.

Townsend now argued in support of the order of sessions.—This is a payment of quit-rent for a number of years, and the inference from payment for so long a period is, that it is a mere acknowledgment of tenure, and not a compensation for the land. (Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, 269; Doe dem. Whittick v. Johnson, Gow. 173.) [PATTESON, J.—That case has been much doubted, if not overruled. Besides, here there is the additional fact of the origin of the holding—that it was an inclosure from the waste.] After so long a period the Court will be unwilling to remove, and the conversation with the wife of the tenant was of no importance here, as she could not be supposed to know the exact nature of the payment. Rex v. Garway (Burr. S. C. 682), and R. v. Bitton (ib. 631), were cases of this kind. The addition of the 6d. made no variance in the payment, as it was in respect of a new piece of land.

Whately, Q.C. contrà.—There was no estate here. It was not a quit-rent; but if so, it is conclusive proof that it was not an estate settlement. It was a mere licence, and this confers no estate for settlement.

R. v. Hornchurch (2 B. & A. 189), R. v. Hagworthingham (1 B. & C. 634), R. v. Garway, and R. v. Billon, are distinguishable. In the one case, no rent had been paid for thirty years; in the other, rent had been paid by mistake.

By the COURT.—It is quite clear the sessions had no grounds to draw the inference they did. The origin was proved and the acknowledgment of tenancy; it could not, therefore, be an adverse possession. Order of sessions quashed.

REG. v. WORTHINGBURY.

An order of removal, signed by the magistrates with their sui names in full, but only the initials of their Christian names, is sufficient.

An order of removal had been confirmed in this case, subject to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench upon the sufficiency of the signatures of the two magistrates, whose Christian names were only set forth by initials. The body of the order did not contain their names at length. In all other respects the order was sufficient. The Court called upon

Corbett (with whom was Yardley) to support the objection.—In coroners' inquisitions, the Christian names of the jurors must be set out at length. (R. v. Evett, 6 B. & C. 247; R. v. Bowen, 3 C. & P.; R. v. Bennett; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83, s. 2; R. v. Steventon.)

COLERIDGE, J.—Our orders are frequently signed with the initials of the Christian names.

Whitmore, contrà, was not called upon.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—This order is clearly good. Order of sessions confirmed.

REG. v. ALTRINGHAM.

Tenement' settlement.

The occupation of land need not be distinct and separate under 5 & 6 Geo. 4, c. 57.

This case had been granted prior to the decision of Reg. v. St. Laurence, Appleby (14 Law J.; 4 Law T. 331), and it was only distinguishable from it by the fact, that the distinct values of the land and the house were not stated. The pauper had rented a farm in the appellant parish jointly with A. B. for 50*l*. per year, and they had occupied it as joint tenants and resided in it.

Townsend tried to distinguish this from the above case, and in support of the order of sessions, who, acting upon Reg. v. Caverswall (10 A. & E. 270) had quashed the order of removal, but admitted that the value of the land must be taken at above 20*l*. a year.

Walson, Q.C. contrà.

By the COURT.—The order of sessions must be quashed. The occupation of the land was quite sufficient without any house, and Reg. v. St. Laurence Appleby was correctly decided.

Order of sessions quashed.

Demurrer to plea.

Watson, Q.C. was proceeding to state his case, when

LORD DENMAN, C.J. said.—What is the point to be argued here. The points delivered are as follow: The matters in law to be argued are, amongst other things, set out in the body of the demurrer. We have over and over again condemned this practice. Call the next case. The plaintiff must pay the costs.

Bovill, for the defendant, expressed his willingness to waive the objection.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—This rule is for the protection of the Court.

PATTESON, J.—When we have made some examples, and punished the disregard of our rules by making the parties pay the costs, they will be followed. (a)

STEPHENS v. LOWNDES.

Practice—Appearance for an infant Nullity.

Byles, Serjt. moved a rule to shew ... the appearance for the defendant, declaration, and judgment, and execution thereon, should not be set aside.

The action was brought against an infant. An appearance had been entered for the defendant by the plaintiff under the statute. On the 24th of February last judgment had been signed, and on the 12th of April the defendant was taken in arrest on a ca. sa. The application, it was admitted, was too late if the appearance which had been so entered was only an irregularity; but it was contended that it was a nullity, and therefore not waived.

The following authorities were cited: Tidd's Practice, 99, 9th ed.; Roberts v. Spurr (3 Dowl. 551); and Nunn v. Curtis (4 Dowl. 729). Rule nisi.

DOE dem. MUSKET v. ROE.

Where the names of all the tenants are not affixed to each of the notices served, judgment in ejectment can only be moved for against the tenant to whom the notice was directed.

Byles, Serjt. moved for judgment against the casual ejector.

A copy of the declaration in ejectment had been served upon each of the tenants in possession, but the notice annexed to each copy was directed only to the tenant on whom the same was served, instead of containing the names of all the other tenants.

The COURT refused to grant it against all the tenants, as otherwise each party might suppose the premises sought to be recovered were those only in his own occupation, but judgment might be had against one. Rule accordingly.

TOMLINSON, Clerk v. SIR FLETCHER BOUGHEY and ANOTHER.

Where exemption from tithes is claimed by reason of several moduses, if the yearly value of the tithes in respect of the land covered by each modus does not exceed 20l. the decision of the tithe commissioner thereon is final, although the aggregate value of the tithes in respect of the land covered by all the moduses may exceed 20l.

Talfourd and Shee, Serjts. shewed cause against the rule obtained in last term, calling on defendants to shew cause why they should not accept the issue which had been tendered them under the Tithe Commutation Act (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, s. 46). The plaintiff was the rector of the parish of Stoke-upon-Trent, and the defendants were landowners within the parish, as devisees in trust under a will. A claim of exemption from tithes was made before the tithe commissioner in respect of fourteen different kinds of modus. One of them was a parochial modus, and the rest were separate farm moduses. The tithe commissioner decided in respect of four of the farm moduses in favour of the plaintiff, the rector, and as to the residue he decided in favour of the defendants. The yearly value of the tithes in respect of all the lands covered by the eight moduses so decided in favour of the defendants exceeded the sum of 20*l*., but the yearly value of the tithes in respect of each of the farms was under 20*l*. The question was whether, under the 46th section the decision of the commissioner was to be considered as one decision on all such moduses, or a separate decision on each. It was contended, that if the plaintiff could thus unite the decisions of the commissioner on these various moduses, the effect would be to get rid of the provision of the Act that the decision of the commissioner should be final in cases where the value of the payment withholden should be less than 20*l*. a year; at all events, the plaintiff had no right to appeal only from so much of the decision as was against him, if it was one and not several decisions.

Channell, Serjt. in support of the rule.—In the case of Mackintosh v. New College, not reported, the Court of Queen's Bench said, the object was to give a remedy by trial by jury to any party whose interest affected may exceed the yearly value of 20*l*. Here it is contended the interest of the rector affected by the decision exceeded 20*l*. a year, and therefore he was a party dissatisfied with such decision, within the meaning of the 46th section. [MAULE, J.—The question will turn upon the meaning of the words "any such decision," in the 46th section.] There is here really only one decision; that is, that the rector is not entitled to these tithes in kind, though several reasons are given for the same in the form of different moduses.

TINDAL, C. J.—It appears to me that this rector is not entitled to have this issue under the 46th section of the Act. The words of that section are, "that any person claiming to be interested in any lands, or the tithes thereof, who shall be dissatisfied with any such decision of the commissioner," &c. "may, if the yearly value of the payment to be made or withholden according to such decision, shall exceed the sum of 20*l*." &c. It therefore restrains any action unless the yearly value to be made or withholden exceed 20*l*. The question is, whether then, when the lands possessed by the landowners, and covered by each modus, do not separately amount to the yearly value of 20*l*. the rector may combine them together, and so make them exceed that value. It seems to me that each of the moduses was a question for the decision of the commissioner, and in case of appeal, for trial at law. It has been stated in behalf of the rector, that if the aggregate amount of the tithes exceed the yearly value of 20*l*. the rector has the power of having an issue under this 46th section; but this is open to the answer, that if so, the rector and the landowner would not be on an equal footing, as the landowner in such case could not come and require an issue, should he be dissatisfied with the decision on any of the moduses. Looking at the 44th, the 45th, and the 46th sections of this Act, we find that in each a modus is the subject-matter of decision for the commissioner, and if either of the parties is dissatisfied therewith, in one case, and one case only, an issue may go for trial; and that is, if the yearly value of the payment withholden according to such decision shall exceed 20*l*. I am therefore of opinion that this rule must be discharged.

COLTMAN, J.—The decision must be looked on as a separate decision as to each modus; and if the tithes in respect of the land covered by each modus do not exceed 20*l*. then such decision is final and decisive.

MAULE and CRESSWELL, JJ. concurred.

Rule discharged.

COOPER v. WILLOMATT.

Where a bailee who has the use of goods for hire wrongfully sells the same to a bonâ fide purchaser not in market overt, the bailor may recover them in trover against such purchaser.

Trover for goods and chattels.

Plea—Not possessed.

The action was brought to recover the value of certain furniture, which had come into the possession of the defendant under the following circumstances. The furniture originally belonged to a person of the name of Parry Savage, who, becoming involved in pecuniary difficulties, assigned the same by bill of sale to the plaintiff as a security for the sum of 100*l*. An agreement, dated 24th April, 1844, was then entered into between the plaintiff and Savage, which, after reciting such assignment, proceeded as follows: "It is hereby agreed between the said parties, that the said Parry Savage shall have the use of the said household furniture, goods, chattels, utensils, and effects, he, the said Parry Savage, paying unto the said Edward Cooper the rent or sum of 6s. by the week, for the rent or hire of the same. The first weekly payment to become due and be made by the said Parry Savage on the 27th day of April instant. And the said Parry Savage hereby agrees to pay the said rent or sum of 6s. by the week during so long a time as he shall be allowed by the said Edward Cooper to have the use of the said household furniture, goods, chattels, utensils, things, and effects; and the said Parry Savage hereby agrees that he will not alter or dispose of the same or any part thereof without the license or consent of the said Edward Cooper, his executors, administrators, or assigns, for such purpose had and obtained in writing; and that he will pay for or replace such articles or things that may be broken or damaged; and that he will deliver up the said household furniture, goods and chattels, utensils, things, and effects, in as good state and condition as they now are, on demand being made for the same by the said Edward Cooper, his executors, administrators, or assigns." The agreement then gave to the plaintiff a right of entry on the house of Savage to remove the furniture without being subject to any action; and that if any action should be brought for so doing, the agreement might be pleaded in bar thereto. At the time making this agreement, a written authority was given by the plaintiff to the wife of Savage to hold possession of the furniture in behalf of the plaintiff, with a direction not to allow Savage to dispose of the same without the consent in writing of the plaintiff. It appeared that Savage afterwards removed the furniture to the house of his father-in-law, and there sold the same to the defendant, a furniture broker, who bought it bonâ fide, believing Savage to be the owner. Demand was made on the defendant by the plaintiff for the property to be delivered up to him, but the defendant refused to comply therewith.

On these facts being proved at the trial, the learned judge nonsuited the plaintiff, but gave him leave to move to enter a verdict for the amount of 27*l.* if the Court should be of opinion that, under the circumstances, he was entitled to recover. A rule nisi having accordingly been obtained, Talfourd, Serjt. now shewed cause.—The question is, whether the conduct of Savage had or not so put an end to the demise as to enable the plaintiff to maintain trover instead of bringing an action on the case for the wrong committed. It is submitted that this agreement constituted a weekly tenancy, which could not be determined without notice, or demand being made for the furniture on Savage; whereas the only demand which had been made was on the defendant. The plaintiff allowing, both by himself as well as by the wife of Savage (whom he chose to make his agent), Savage to remove the goods to his father-in-law's, and generally to treat them as if they were his own, cannot now be permitted to recover them from the defendant, who has been induced in consequence to consider Savage the true owner. (Gregg v. Wells, 10 A. & E. 90.) On the same principle it has been held, that if the bailee of goods deliver them to a stranger, the bailor cannot bring trover against the stranger. (Bac. ab. Trover, C.) It was next contended that the agreement operated as a demise to Savage, and that Savage had done nothing inconsistent with the same, but that the sale to defendant at all events gave to the defendant the same rights as Savage had under the lease, and that therefore the plaintiff could not recover the property by the present form of action.

Shee, Serjt. (Bovill with him) in support of the rule.—The bailee of goods should always be in a condition to return them; if he has put himself out of that condition, the bailment is determined. The wrongful act of Savage, who was a bailee, worked a forfeiture of the bailment, and revested the property in the plaintiff, so as to enable him to maintain trover for them. Loeschman v. Machin (2 Stark. N.P.C. 311); Farrant v. Thompson (5 B. & A. 826); Gordon v. Harper (7 T. R. 9); Story's Bailment, 262.

TINDAL, C. J.—This was such a demise of the goods as might be put an end to whenever the plaintiff Cooper might make a demand for the same. It has been said on the part of the defendant that if Savage parted with the possession of the goods to another, intending to give that person a larger power over the goods than he himself possessed, he must at all events have given him the limited one he had; but I think that the demand which was made by the plaintiff on the defendant put an end to the tenancy as much as if the demand had been made on Strange himself. The case of Loeschman v. Machin is a strong authority in favour of the plaintiff, and I see no reason to dispute the correctness of that decision. It was there said, that where the hirer of a piano had sent it to an auctioneer to be sold, it was a conversion on which trover would lie against the auctioneer if he refused to deliver the piano up except on payment of certain expenses.

COLTMAN, J. concurred.

MAULE, J.—I think we are called upon by authority to hold that the plaintiff is entitled to maintain this action of trover. The case of Loeschman v. Machin is expressly in point; and even if there was not that case I see no reason for deciding otherwise. I was struck at one time with the difficulty that, in an action against Savage for the rent he might not have any defence thereto, although these goods had been recovered by Cooper already in trover; but that does not shew that Cooper may not rely on the wrongful conversion. That difficulty, therefore, does not here exist. There is no doubt that the sale to the defendant was a bonâ fide and honest one; but the law is clear with respect to personal property of this kind, when intrusted to a person who has not the power to sell; and whatever may be said as to the inconvenience of such a law, it is not such but that the trade of a broker may be carried on, and that too with profit; but even if any inconvenience were to result from it, that can afford no answer where the law is clear and not otherwise doubtful.

CRESSWELL, J. delivered a similar judgment.

Rule absolute for entering a verdict for the plaintiff.

Saturday, May 24.

CHADWICK v. CLARKE.

The plaintiff entered into a contract with a company of which he was the director, for the letting of a house to the company. A memorandum containing the terms of the letting was prepared, and in which it appeared that the contract was with the plaintiff and the directors exclusive of the plaintiff, and that the letting was to be to the directors exclusive of the plaintiff. This memorandum was never signed, although a resolution of the directors was made, authorizing the agreement with the plaintiff to be signed. Held, that in an action against one of the directors for the use and occupation of the premises, the plaintiff could not give this document in evidence without it had an agreement stamp. Held also, that an agreement does not the less require to be stamped as such because it is not signed by either of the parties.

Debt, for use and occupation; money paid and on an account stated. Plea, never indebted.

The action was brought for the rent of certain premises in Adelaide-place, London-bridge, occupied by an intended life assurance company called The Oriental, Colonial, and General Life Assurance Company, and of which company the defendant was a director. At the trial before Maule, J. at the London sittings in last Term, it appeared that the defendant had early become a director of the proposed company, and had attended several of its meetings. On the 20th December, 1842, a resolution was come to by the directors, electing the plaintiff a director of the company; but there was no evidence of his having assented thereto prior to the 12th January, 1843. On the 29th December, 1842, a resolution was come to at a meeting of the directors, at which the defendant was present, for renting the plaintiff's house in Adelaide-place for the use of the company. An agreement was drawn up, but never signed, for letting the premises to the company. This agreement was dated the 5th January, 1843, and was sent to the solicitors of the company for approval. Various alterations were made, and as altered the document purported to be a memorandum of an agreement made the day of January, 1843, between William Chadwick, for himself, of the one part, and John Beard more Wathen and Edward Strick, on behalf of the directors of the Oriental, Colonial, and General Life Assurance Company (save and except the said William Chadwick) of the other part. The agreement, after reciting an agreement to let, proceeded thus:—

"The said William Chadwick doth hereby agree to let unto the said directors, and other the directors for the time being (except the said William Chadwick), and the said John Beardmore Wathen and Edward Strick, as such solicitors for and on behalf of the said directors, except as aforesaid. do hereby agree to take and rent of the said William Chadwick, all that, &c. being the premises in Adelaide-place, "for the term of one year, to be computed from the 25th day of December now last past, at the net clear yearly rent of 210*l.* payable quarterly, on," &c. The other parts of the agreement are not material to the case, and are therefore omitted.

On the 5th January, 1843, the directors passed a resolution authorizing a sub-committee to take steps for the immediate occupation of the house, and for authorizing the solicitors to sign the agreement with the plaintiff. On the 12th January the plaintiff for the first time attended as director at a meeting of the company, and at this meeting the minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

The plaintiff offered the agreement in evidence, in order to shew that he contracted in his individual character, distinct from that of director, in the letting of the premises to the company. The reception of this evidence was objected to by the defendant's counsel for want of a stamp. It was also objected, on the part of the defendant, that the plaintiff could not maintain the action on account of his being a partner in the concern. The learned judge thought the document was inadmissible for want of a stamp, and the plaintiff was nonsuited, with leave to move to enter a verdict for the sum of 52*l.* 10s. being the amount of a quarter's rent. A rule nisi for that purpose having been obtained in Easter Term last, cause was now shewn by Byles, Serjt. (with him Wordsworth).—The plaintiff being a partner, could not maintain this action on any implied agreement to be raised by the occupation. It was, therefore, necessary for him to resort to an express one, and the only express one was that of the 5th of January. That document was either an agreement or not. If not an agreement, plaintiff could not recover; if it was an agreement, it required a stamp as such.

The following cases were cited: Drant v. Brown (3 B. & C. 665); Rex v. The Inhabitants of St. Martin's, Leicester (2 A. & E. 210); Williams v. Stoughton (2 Stark. 292).

Shee, Serjt. (Hoggins with him), in support of the rule.—This document was not an agreement, nor a memorandum of an agreement. Before a contract becomes binding there is a fact to be ascertained, viz. as to who was the party contracting, and for this purpose the document was admissible. [MAULE, J.—You cannot have so artificial a state as an occupation under an agreement between these parties without being in their character as partners, except it was under a special agreement.] It was competent for the plaintiff verbally so to contract, and the document was admissible to shew this. This document was nothing but a proposal to let the premises until it had been signed, and resembles Doe dem. Lambourne v. Pedgriph (4 C. & P. 312). [CRESSWELL, J.—That case goes too far. Supposing, instead of the words there used, "we approve of this draft," there were the words "we agree," would that make any difference? If so, then its being an agreement turns on the using of those words.] It is submitted that it is not within the Stamp Act, because it was never signed. The words of the Stamp Act are "under hand only," and therefore would seem to exclude the case when it has not been signed.

The following authorities were cited: King v. The Inhabitants of St. Martin's, Leicester (2 A. & E. 210); Ramsbottom v. Tunbridge (4 M. & S. 434); Ramsbottom v. Mortley (4 M. & S. 445); Drant v. Brown (3 B. & C. 665); and Hawkins v. Warre (3 B. & C. 690).

COLTMAN, J.(a)—I am of opinion that this rule must be discharged. The first objection to this memorandum requiring a stamp was, that under the Stamp Act no document requires a stamp which is not signed, the words of the Act being "agreement, or any minute or memorandum of an agreement, under hand only." This, however, it seems to me, cannot be the meaning of the Act. I cannot conceive any reason why a binding agreement, but not signed, should not therefore require to be stamped; and this is more apparent when one reads what follows in the Act—"or made in Scotland, without any clause of registration." This shews that the Act has reference to a document which, either according to the Scotch law or according to the English law, may be a mode of forming an agreement as contradistinguished from a more formal mode. The second objection was that this document was not an agreement, but a mere proposal, and therefore according to the authorities it would not be, if a mere proposal, liable to be stamped. But when we come to look at it, this was, it seems to me, the agreement between the parties. In the case of Doe dem. Lamburn v. Pedgriph, Lord Tenterden thought that the document was not the agreement. Here, however, there can be no doubt that this document embodied, and was the real agreement between the parties; it so purports to be; it is drawn up with much formality; it is sent to the attorneys of the other side for approval, and it is treated by the Court of Directors in their minutes of the 5th Jan. as an agreement between the parties. The 29th resolution being that the sub-committee be authorized to take steps for the immediate occupation of the house taken for the company, and the 31st resolution, that the solicitors be authorized to sign the agreement with Mr. Chadwick on behalf of the Directors. The authorizing the signature to be put, shews that it was treated by the parties, not as a mere proposal, but as something already agreed to, and therefore it falls within the Act as an evidence of a contract, and ought to be stamped accordingly.

CRESSWELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. This was an action for use and occupation of premises by the defendant and other persons. Where one person occupies by the permission of another, the law will imply a contract to pay for the same; but when the occupation has been jointly with the person by whose permission it is occupied, so that such last person is jointly liable to pay for the occupation, it comes within Homes v. Higgins (1 B. & C. 74), and that class of cases. Then, in order to prove an express contract, the plaintiff finds it necessary to produce this document, when an objection is taken to it for want of a stamp. In answer to that objection it is said that the document does not amount to an express contract, but if it does not, then there was no evidence of any express contract, and the plaintiff is remitted to the situation of difficulty was previously in, and from which he could not get out except by proving an express contract. I think that this document was a complete agreement, and therefore required to be stamped. If it contains terms by which the parties were to be bound, then required to be stamped, although it was not signed. It is evident that it was considered as the agreement by the resolution of the directors. The resolution to sign the agreement—what agreement but this? If this is not the agreement referred to by that resolution, then the plaintiff had no right to put it in evidence.

MAULE, J. delivered a similar judgment.

Rule discharged.

HARLOW v. READ.

An erroneous statement in an award, that the arbitrators have considered the decision of a person who has no authority to decide in the matter, does not vitiate the award.

Therefore, when a reference ordered that in case of difference of the arbitrators they should adopt the decision of an umpire, to be nominated by them, and the award stated that they had nominated an umpire, and had considered his decision, but there was no statement that the arbitrators had ever differed, the award was held good, though the arbitrators had not, in fact, consulted the person so nominated by them as umpire.

Glover, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule calling on the defendant to shew cause why an award should not be set aside on, amongst other grounds, that the arbitrators founded their award on the decision of an umpire whom they had not consulted, and who has not investigated the case or made any decision.

The award was made under the following order of reference of Maule, J. dated Dec. 31, 1844:—

"Upon hearing the attorneys on both sides, and by their consent, I do order that all matters in difference between the parties in this cause be referred to the award, certificate, order, arbitrament, final end, and determination of Henry Gibb, of," &c.; "Robert Crickmer, of," &c. "and John Kelsey, of," &c. "so as they, the said arbitrators, or any two of them, shall make and publish their award or certificate in writing of and concerning the matters referred, ready to be delivered to the said parties in difference, or such of them as shall require the same, on or before," &c. After ordering other matter, not material to the present case, the order proceeded thus:—"I further order that the said arbitrators, or any two of them, shall, as to the carpenters', builders', and joiners' work, adopt the opinion or decision of the said John Kelsey, and as to the machinery and other work the opinion or decision of the said Henry Gibb and Robert Crickmer; or in case the said Henry Gibb and Robert Crickmer shall differ in opinion, then that the said arbitrators, or such two of them as shall make an award or certificate, shall adopt the opinion or decision, as to such other work and machinery, of an umpire, to be nominated by the said Henry Gibb and Robert Crickmer, before proceeding with the said reference, by a memorandum in writing, to be indorsed on this order, and shall make their award or certificate accordingly; and by the like consent I further order that the said parties shall in all things abide by, perform, fulfil, and keep such award or certificate to be made as aforesaid," &c. The rest of the order is immaterial to the present question.

The award made under this reference, after reciting the present action, and the above order of reference of Maule, J. proceeded thus:—"And whereas we the said arbitrators, Henry Gibb and Robert Crickmer, did, before proceeding with the said reference, by an indorsement on the said order in writing under our hands, nominate and appoint Joseph Anns, of," &c. "to be an umpire between us, the said Henry Gibb and R. Crickmer, to decide as to the work and machinery, except the carpenters', builders', and joiners' work referred for our opinion or decision by the said order, in case we, the said Henry Gibb and R. Crickmer should differ in our opinion thereon. Now we, the said Henry Gibb, R. Crickmer, and John Kelsey, having taken upon ourselves the burthen of the said arbitration, and having heard and duly considered all the allegations and evidence of the said respective parties of and concerning the matters in difference so referred as aforesaid, and considered the decision of the said umpire, do make and publish this our award, in writing, of and concerning the said matters in difference so referred, and do hereby award," &c. The award bore the signature of Gibb, Crickmer, and Kelsey.

The plaintiff caused the order of reference to be made a rule of Court, but omitted to make as part of the rule the indorsement on the order of reference of the appointment of an umpire.

The present rule was moved for on affidavit, by which it was sworn that Joseph Anns had informed the deponent that he had not been consulted or spoken to by any person, or in any way interfered in the matter of the said award.

It was contended in behalf of the defendant, that the statement in the award, that the arbitrators had consulted the umpire, was merely surplusage, as the umpire had no jurisdiction except in case of difference of the arbitrators, which did not appear to have existed.

Talfourd, Serjt. was called upon to support the rule, and contended, that as the award expressed to be founded on the arbitrators having considered the decision of the umpire, it was founded on a false statement, which had not been explained, and which vitiated the award.

TINDAL, C. J.—The ground of objection to this award is, that there is a false allegation of the arbitrators having taken the advice of the umpire, and if this had been so there would have been a good ground for the objection; but the only ground on which it rests, is the allegation in the award,—"We having taken upon ourselves the burthen of the said arbitration," &c. "and considered the decision of the said umpire:" now this is either true or false. The umpire had no authority to decide, because there was no difference in opinion between the arbitrators; he was, therefore, a perfect cipher, without any authority in the matter. It consequently appears sufficiently from the evidence, that the arbitrators have mistakingly said that they considered the decision of a party who could not give any decision in the matter at all; there has, therefore, been only an unfortunate introduction of these words in the award.

Rule discharged without costs.

DOE dem. WILLIAMS and PROTHERO v. EVANS.

An assignment of leasehold premises by a person not in possession of the premises at the time of the assignment, is void both at common law and by the Statute of Bracery, 32 Hen. 8, c. 9.

This was an action of ejectment brought to recover the possession of certain premises in the parish of Merthyr Tydvil.

At the trial before Cresswell, J. at the last Spring Assizes for the county of Glamorgan, it appeared in evidence, that in August 1802, a lease of, inter alia, the premises in dispute was granted to one Evan Richards for a long term of years, and in 1806, Evan Richards assigned to one Wyndham Lewis a portion of the demised premises, for the residue of the term. In Feb. 1807, Wyndham Lewis underlet the same to Evan Richards for a term not yet expired, and it was admitted, on the part of the defendant, the premises sought to be recovered were comprised in the under-lease of 1807. Evan Richards was in possession up to the time of his death in June, 1828. Previously to the death of Evan Richards, his brother, Jenkin Richards, appeared to have been in possession of part of the property, and there was some evidence of his having bought the property and entered into possession in the lifetime of his brother; he died in March, 1829, having bequeathed the same by his will to the defendant, James Evans, who thereupon entered and continued in possession ever since. The reversion of the premises which, on the granting of the under-lease in 1807 to Evan Richards was in Wyndham Lewis, was, in April 1815, assigned to one William Price (whose daughter married Prothero, one of the lessors of the plaintiff), and by a deed of settlement the same was afterwards assigned to Williams, the other lessor of the plaintiff, in trust for Prothero and his wife. In July 1841, letters of administration to the estate of Evan Richards were granted to Thomas Richards his son, who in the same month assigned the premises comprised in the under-lease of February 1807, to the lessor of the plaintiff Prothero. The lessors of the plaintiff abandoned the title of Williams the trustee, and rested their title on the assignment of the under-lease by the administrator of Evan Richards to Prothero. It was objected on behalf of the defendant that the statute 32 Henry 8, c. 9, s. 2, prevented the assignment by the administrator from being valid. A verdict was found for the lessors of the plaintiff, with leave to the defendant to move to have the verdict entered for him. In Easter Term last a rule for that purpose was accordingly obtained by Sir T. Wilde.

Channell, Serj. (R. V. Williams with him) now shewed cause, and contended that the possession of Jenkin Richards must be taken to be a possession under his brother Evan Richards, and that after the death of Evan Richards it must be taken as a possession under the administrator; that it was not the case of a person who had obtained the possession by a disseisin or ouster of the rightful owner, but of a person whose first possession was permissive, and had continued such possession with the license of the administrator. That the statute of 32 Henry 8, which forbids the buying of any pretended right in any land unless the seller hath been in possession of the same, or taken the rents and profits one year before, did did not therefore apply, as the administrator had in effect been in possession, the possession of Evans the defendant being the possession of the administrator, as the possession of the tenant is the possession of the landlord. (Doe dem. Oliver v. Powell, 3 Nev. & M. 616.) The administrator was not in the situation of a person who had a mere right of entry, which applies rather to where there has been some tortuous acts of ouster, and not to where the possession has only been withheld. (Cully v. Doe dem. Taylerson, 11 A. & E. 1008.) It was also contended that the statute of Henry 8 does not avoid the grant, but only imposes a penalty.

The following authorities were also cited: Goodright v. Forrester (8 East, 552); and Williams v. Protheroe (5 Bing. 309).

Byles, Serjt. in support of rule, contended that the statute of 32 Henry 8 only enforced what was previously the common law, and that therefore it was not necessary for defendant to depend alone on that statute, as before that Act a right of entry could not be granted; "for the common law before the statute was, that he who so was out of possession might not bargain, grant, or let his right or title; and if he had done it it should have been void." (Partridge v. Strange, Plowd. 88); and so also in Co. Litt. 214, referring to sec. 347 of Litt.; "and the reason hereof is for avoidance of maintenance, suppression of right, and stirring up of suits, and therefore nothing in action, entry, or re-entry can be granted over." Shep. Touch. 240, was also cited. It was also contended that the statute avoided the grant.

TINDAL, C. J.—I think that this is a case which it was the very object of this statute to prevent. It is the case where one person is in possession, and a third person purchases a right of another, and brings an action thereon to eject the person in possession. The facts of this case are, that Evan Richards died in 1828, in possession of the premises in respect whereof this action is brought; that some time before his death his brother, Jenkin Richards, was in possession of a part of the premises; that he afterwards took possession of the remainder, and bequeathed such right as he had in the same, whatever it was, to the present defendant, who, up to 1841, was in possession without his right thereto being disputed. In that year Thomas Richards takes out letters of administration to the estate of his father Evan, and sells the premises to the lessor of the plaintiff, Prothero. Upon this the question arises. It has been said that the effect of the statute of Henry 8 is not to make void such assignment, but only to prohibit the course there pointed out from being carried into effect: if so, of course we could not now interfere; but it appears to me that such is not the effect of that statute. The common law avoided it before the statute, and the statute superadded a penalty to what was before contrary to the common law. The authority in Plowden is quite decisive on this, where he says, that he who was out of possession might not grant his title, and if he had done it it should have been void. I do not think that the case can be put more clearly than it is in Plowden; also the authority cited of Coke upon Littleton is to the same effect. The assignor was out of possession when he assigned, and therefore, by the statute, the lessor of the plaintiff is prohibited from bringing this ejectment.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Monday, May 5.

HODGINS v. COOK.

Where a demurrer to a plea is set down for argument, and the day fixed for argument by the Court falls upon a Monday, the defendant is in time if he deliver his demurrer books at any time on the previous Wednesday, and the plaintiff is not entitled to deliver them at the expense of the defendant until the Thursday morning.

Demurrer to plea.—The argument upon the demurrer presented no point of importance; but upon M'Mahon rising for the defendant,

Huddleston, for the plaintiff objected that he was not entitled to be heard until he should have paid the costs of the demurrer books delivered by the plaintiff, in default of their delivery in sufficient time by the defendant.

It appeared that the day appointed by the Court for the argument fell upon a Monday. The plaintiff delivered his own demurrer books on the Tuesday previous, and went again on Wednesday to see if the defendant had delivered his. He found that he had not, and the plaintiff accordingly delivered the defendant's books for him. At a later hour on Wednesday the defendant appeared with his demurrer books, which were refused on account of their previous delivery by the plaintiff.

It was now contended that the defendant ought to have delivered his books on the Tuesday, as otherwise there would not be four clear days before the argument, pursuant to the rule of Court, H. T. 4 Wm. 4, c. 17, without counting the Sunday, which, being the last day, it was argued, ought not to be counted.

The COURT referred it to the Master to decide what the practice was, and he afterwards reported the defendant was in time.

On the demurrer there was

WALLER v. BLACKLOCK.

Motion for new trial.

This was an action against the defendant for trespass, in breaking down a weir; a verdict was found for the defendant. Knowles, Q. The Court having taken time to consider the case and to consult the learned judge who tried the case, now gave

JUDGMENT.

POLLOCK, C. B.—In the [illegible] Waller v. Blacklock, which was moved by Mr. Knowles, the action was for pulling down a weir, and the third plea claimed a right to the water, by virtue of the possession of the close and the mill, and justified the pulling down of the weir. The only point urged by the plaintiff was that the new weir was not higher than the old weir, and that it did not back up the water in the old dam. At the trial no distinction was attempted to be taken between the effect of damming the water back from the new goit or the old goit. The original dam had been removed. It appeared the new goit was made in 1801, and the defendant's new weir was made in 1822, so that the new goit had been used for 20 years without interruption, and before the erection of the weir complained of. At the trial it was not disputed that the defendant had a right to erect a weir to the height of the old dam, nor was it proved at the trial that the effect of the dam was at all altered by the substitution of the new goit in the place of the old goit. The learned judge reports that if that point had been made, the jury no doubt would have come to the conclusion that the substitution of the one for the other would make no difference, but in point of fact that point was not made; and the learned judge thinks very discreetly and very advisedly. It appears to us, therefore, in this case, that the point left to the jury is correct, and we see no reason to be dissatisfied with the verdict; and therefore there will be no rule.

Rule refused.

BLACKWELL v. BADGER and WORRELL.

Motion for new trial.

This was an action for use and occupation. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, damages [illegible]l. Dundas, Q. C. on the 22nd of April moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection; and the only question was, upon the evidence, whether there was a tenancy from year to year between the parties. The Court said they would see the learned judge who tried the case. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

POLLOCK, C.B.—In the case of Blacklock v. Badger, which was moved by Dundas, Q.C. at the commencement of the Term, we have referred to the learned judge (Coltman) who tried the cause, who reports to us that he left it to the jury to say whether Badger was a party with Worrall in the taking of the premises; and secondly, if both were parties to the taking of the premises, whether they entered as tenants from year to year, or had only entered into a permissive occupation, under the expectation of entering into an agreement from year to year, which had become abortive. In the former case, they would be liable; in the latter case, only for the time they could be considered as actual occupiers. As to the occupation, it was said they had taken the keys away when the plaintiff refused to take them, and in fact kept them until March 1844. This, undoubtedly, was very correctly stated. The facts of the case, and the statement of the law, were most correctly stated, and also the points the jury had to decide. The jury have found that they were jointly liable; and no doubt, for the purpose of form, judgment recording damages for use and occupation against both of them was clearly right; and the jury having found they were both liable, and that the taking was not a mere permissive occupation, subject to its becoming abortive, but a taking from year to year, the verdict is right, and the learned judge is not at all dissatisfied with it, though it may be a doubtful case; and therefore there must be no rule. Rule refused.

Thursday, May 22.

STOKES v. SAVAGE.

As a general rule, the Court will always give costs to the successful party in an issue under the Tithe Act, whether the ultimate decision be in support of or opposed to the decision of the Commissioner. The only exception to this will be where parties have disentitled themselves by some misconduct of their own (a).

This was a rule calling on the defendant to shew cause why he should not pay the costs of an issue under the Tithe Act upon which the Court had given judgment in favour of the plaintiff. The Commissioner had decided in favour of the defendant, and the Court had come to a different conclusion.

Jervis now shewed cause.—This was an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the Tithe Commissioner, who decided in favour of the landowners. It came on to be tried before Tindal, C.J. It was then turned into a special case, and the Court gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff, who is now asking for his costs. There was a case of the Earl of Stamford v. Warrington decided by the Court last Term, and reported in 5 Law T. 130, in which Pollock, C.B. is reported to have said—"The rule we are disposed to lay down is, that in all cases the successful party shall have the costs unless he is disentitled to them by some misconduct or other act of his own. In all other cases we shall give costs." I presume that case is correctly reported.

POLLOCK, C.B.—It is very correct.

Jervis. That case is analogous to the present one, for it appears that there also the unsuccessful party before the Court had been successful before the Commissioner, and yet that the Court held that he must pay the costs of the successful appellant from the Commissioner's decision. Still, I submit that in that case the Court did not arrive at the right conclusion. What is the use of the discretionary power reserved to the Court in the Act of Parliament, if the costs are always to abide the event?

POLLOCK.—That is to give the Court the power to provide against cases where there has been any breach of good faith, or where there is a partial success only.

Jervis.—Where an exception is taken to the Master's report in Chancery, costs are never given to the party who succeeds against the decision of the Master.

POLLOCK, C. B.—There is more analogy between this and cases where an issue is directed out of Chancery.

The other side were not called on.

ROLFE, B. The only rational rule about the costs is, that the party should pay the costs who occasions the costs. Mr. Jervis has put this as if it were in the nature of an appeal from the decision of a judge. Now I do not think that is so. The Act of Parliament means to provide that, as there are very important matters which the parties are litigating about, they should have the right of trying them, unless they choose to take the Commissioner's decision as final. The usual way of trying such questions before the Act would have been by an action at law, when costs would have followed success, as of course, and I do not think the Act was intended to make any difference in that respect. I am glad that this matter has been mentioned again on the first day of Term, because otherwise the decision of the Court, which was well considered on the last day of last Term, might not have received all the weight it deserved.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Ex parte COBBETT.

It is not the practice to grant costs against the party suing out a writ of habeas corpus to a person whose interests compelled him to appear in support of the commitment, and who had notice to do so.

Quære, whether the Court have the power to give costs under such circumstances.

Mr. Cobbett being in the custody of the keeper of the Queen's prison, under an order made in a suit in Chancery of Oldfield v. Cobbett, was brought up to this court under a writ of habeas corpus, of which notice had been given by order of the Court to the plaintiff Oldfield. The Court, after hearing the case, made the following order:—

"In the Exchequer:—Easter Term, A.D. 1845.

"Re William Cobbett.

"Saturday, 26th April. England:—The said William Cobbett being brought here into court, in custody of the keeper of the Queen's prison, under and by virtue of a writ of habeas corpus, and a rule of this court, and upon reading the said writ of habeas corpus, the return of the said keeper thereto, and the affidavit of Edward Weatheral, and the affidavit of Edward Weatheral, the younger, and upon hearing the said William Cobbett in person, and Mr. Martin, of counsel for Jesse Oldfield, the plaintiff in the suit of Oldfield v. Cobbett mentioned in the said rule, and upon mature deliberation, he, the said William Cobbett, is hereby recommitted into the custody of the said keeper of the Queen's prison, to remain in the same state and condition as he was in at the time of issuing the said writ of habeas corpus; and it is further ordered, that the said William Cobbett pay to the said Jesse Oldfield, his attorney or agent, the said Jesse Oldfield's costs of this application."

Pashley having obtained a rule to rescind the latter part of this rule, which ordered Mr. Cobbett to pay costs to Mr. Oldfield,

Martin, Q.C. now shewed cause, and contended that Mr. Oldfield, having been brought here by a notice, and having been obliged to appear to defend his rights, the Court had the same power to give costs to him as to any other person brought here upon a rule of this court.

Pashley, contrà.

POLLOCK, C. B.—We have sent to the officers of the Queen's Bench to inquire what is the practice there as to costs, and whether they are ever given against the party suing out a writ of habeas corpus.

The officers of the Queen's Bench having stated that there was no instance of costs being given under such circumstances, the Court said, the order must be rescinded so far as it related to costs.

WAKLEY v. HENLY and ANOTHER.

Writ of inquiry—execution of before judge—motion for.

This was an action against the defendants (the proprietors of the Medical Times) for a libel. The defendants allowed judgment to go by default.

Bramwell now moved on behalf of the plaintiff for a rule calling on the defendants to shew cause why the writ of inquiry in this case should not be executed before one of the barons of this court instead of the sheriff, on the ground that the plaintiff intended putting in evidence of other libels against him by the same parties, and upon the reception of which it was possible important questions of law would arise, upon which it was desirable that the plaintiff should have the advantage of the judgment of one of the learned barons of this court. Rule nisi.

BARTLETT v. BENSON.

Judgment non obstante veredicto, motion for.

This was an action on a bill of exchange. The defendant pleaded five pleas, three of which were found for the plaintiff, and two for the defendant.

Byles, Serjt. now moved to enter the verdict for the plaintiff on these two pleas, non obstante veredicto, on the ground that they constituted no defence to the action, although proved.

BIRT v. LEIGH.

A receipt for 2l. 2s. "being the balance of account up to this day," is within the meaning of the schedule of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, relating to balances of account, and requires a 10s. stamp.

The declaration contained the common counts for work and labour, and an account stated.

Plea—Payment.

At the trial, the plaintiff having proved a demand for work and labour, the defendant proved a number of weekly payments on account, and then put in the following receipt:—

"1843, July 8.

"Received of Mr. G. C. Leigh the sum of two pounds two shillings, being the balance of account up to this day, for houses in Wellington-street.

£2. 2s. "WILLIAM BIRT."

It was objected that this document required a ten-shilling receipt stamp, and that it came within the meaning of the schedule of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, by which it is provided as follows:—"And any receipt or discharge, note, memorandum, or writing whatever, given to any person for or upon the payment of money, which shall contain, purport, or signify any general acknowledgment of any debt, account, claim, or demand, debts, accounts, claims, or demands, whereof the amount shall not be therein specified, having been paid, settled, balanced, or otherwise discharged or satisfied, or whereby any sum of money therein mentioned shall be acknowledged to be received in full, or in discharge or satisfaction of any such debt, account, claim, or demand, debts, accounts, claims, or demands, and whether the same shall or shall not be signed with the name of any person, shall be deemed and taken to be a receipt for the sum of 1,000*l.* or upwards, within the intent and meaning of this schedule, and shall be charged with the duty of ten shillings accordingly."

The defendant had a verdict at the trial, and leave was reserved at the trial to the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict for him for such amount as the Court should think fit, provided they thought the document inadmissible for want of a ten-shilling stamp.

Atherton having obtained a rule accordingly,

Crowder, Q. C. and Rawlinson now shewed cause.

Case cited: Dibdin v. Morris (2 C. & P. 44).

By the COURT.—This receipt is clearly within the words of the statute, and therefore the verdict must be entered for the plaintiff; but as the Court have a discretion reserved to them, it will be for a nominal amount only.

Rule absolute to enter a verdict for the plaintiff for a shilling.

BELCHER v. MAGNAY, WEEDON, and OTHERS.

New trial—Rule nisi—Notice to parties—Moulding rule.

Where a verdict has been given in an action for a tort against some of the defendants and for the rest, a rule obtained by one of the defendants, calling upon the plaintiffs to shew cause why the verdict for them should not be set aside and a new trial had, is irregular, because it only seeks to set the verdict aside partially, and not as against the defendants, who have succeeded, and a partial new trial cannot be granted. The Court, however, will mould such a rule so as to make it correct.

Trespass.—At the trial a verdict had been found in favour of some of the defendants, and against the defendant Weedon and others.

Jervis subsequently obtained a rule on behalf of defendant Weedon, calling on the plaintiff to shew cause "why the verdict for the plaintiff should not be set aside and a new trial had."

Watson, Q. C. and Humfrey, Q. C. shewed cause, and took a preliminary objection to the rule, that it did not seek to set the verdict aside entirely, but only the verdict so far as it was for the plaintiff, which could not be done; and that the defendants, who had succeeded, were not called on to shew cause, though their interests were materially affected, and they were entitled to be heard.

POLLOCK, C. B.—Really, is not this too absurd? How does it lie in your mouth to take an objection of this sort? The only party entitled to complain of it would be the defendants who have succeeded, and they do not object.

Humfrey.—It may be absurd. I am not here to defend the decisions of the Court, but there certainly is a case decided in this court so lately as Hilary Term last, and which is precisely in point. (Doe dem. Dudgeon v. Martin, Chapman, and Others, 14 L. J. Exch. 128.)

ALDERSON, B.—That decision is scarcely cold yet.

POLLOCK, C.B.—The rule in that case only sought to set aside the verdict against one defendant out of several. The verdict would have stood against the others, and therefore rule was had as only seeking to set the verdict aside partially.

Humfrey.—It is precisely the same here. It only seeks to set aside the verdict for the plaintiffs, though there was a verdict for some of the defendants.

ALDERSON, B.—I am not at all disposed to say that this case can be distinguished from that; and as I think that case was rightly decided, I must come to the conclusion that this rule also is irregular; but in that case there were circumstances to induce the Court not to exercise any discretion which they had as to moulding the rule, but to hold the defendant asking for the new trial strictly to technicalities. As no such circumstances appear in this case, the rule may be amended and set down at the bottom of the list.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Rule accordingly.

Note.—In Doe dem. Dudgeon v. Martin the verdict was for the plaintiff generally, and the rule called on the plaintiff "to shew cause why the verdict found for the lessors of the plaintiff against the defendant Chapman should not be set aside and a new trial had." In that case the defendant, moving for a new trial, was seeking to avail himself of a point in disobedience to an order of the Master of the Rolls.

PLAYFAIR v. MUSGROVE and ANOTHER.

Action against sheriff.

To an action against a sheriff for breaking and entering the plaintiff's dwelling-house, he pleaded that he entered the premises in question to seize certain goods and chattels of the plaintiff under a fieri facias, and seized the lease of the said premises, and sold the term thereof, whereby the plaintiff's interest therein determined. To this the plaintiff new assigned, that the action was brought not for the trespasses sought to be justified in the plea, but for the defendant's remaining on the premises for more than reasonable time after such sale. To this the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was not possessed of the house in question. Held, no answer to the action, and that the sheriff became a trespasser after remaining more than a reasonable time to execute the writ. Held also, that although the term had been sold, the execution debtor remained in possession of the house until after an assignment by the sheriff. Held also, that the word "sale" did not import that an assignment had actually been executed.

This was an action of trespass brought by the plaintiff against the defendants as sheriffs of Middlesex. The declaration was for breaking and entering the plaintiff's dwelling-house, and with force and arms, and with a strong hand, staying and continuing in possession thereof, making a noise and disturbance, against the will of the plaintiff, and against the peace, &c. To this the defendants pleaded, 1st, not guilty; 2nd, that the dwelling-house was not the dwelling-house of the plaintiff; 3rd, a justification, as sheriffs of Middlesex, under a fieri facias against the plaintiff, under which they entered the said dwelling-house, and seized and took in execution certain goods and chattels of the plaintiff then being therein; and also a certain lease of the plaintiff of the said dwelling-house, of which a certain part of the term for which the said lease was granted was unexpired, and then and before the said writ of fieri facias was returned by the defendants, and before the said time when, &c. &c. the defendants, as such sheriffs, and under the said writ, sold the said term, to wit, to one E. A. Taylor, whereby the interest of the plaintiff in the said dwelling-house was determined. To this the plaintiff replied, joining issue on the first and second pleas; and as to the third, new assigned that he brought his action, not for the trespasses therein attempted to be justified, but for the defendants remaining in possession after the said seizure and sale, and staying and continuing therein. To this new assignment defendants pleaded—1st, not guilty; 2nd, that the said dwelling-house was not at the said time when, &c. the dwelling-house of the plaintiff; 3rd, leave and license; 4th, that the trespasses were committed by the leave and license of the purchaser. Issue being joined on those pleas, the cause was tried before the Lord Chief Baron, at the sittings for Middlesex after Michaelmas Term 1844. The jury found all the issues for the plaintiff, except the second, to the new assignment, with leave reserved for the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict on the issue found against him, with 10*l.* damages.

Humphrey having obtained a rule nisi in Hilary Term,

Jervis, Q. C. and Kennedy now shewed cause. This is almost a new case, and it is submitted that rule cannot be made absolute. The plaintiff, it is submitted, has no right whatever to bring this action, for his title to the dwelling-house was determined by the seizure of the lease by the sheriff under the fieri facias and the sale of the term. These facts are admitted by the plaintiff on these pleadings; nor can a party who, it is submitted, has no right at all to the premises, it having been determined by the seizure and sale, make the sheriff a trespasser for remaining in after the sale of the term. [ALDERSON, B.—Where do you say the original title to the house is?] Not in the execution-debtor—perhaps in the sheriff until the sale has been perfected by assignment. Put the case of goods: there the possession would be in the sheriff until they were handed over to the purchaser. Now here he cannot hand over the title in the term bodily, but holds possession until the purchaser can be put in possession. At all events, the execution debtor's title is determined by the seizure and sale. Taylor v. Cole (3 Term Rep. 202) is in point, and is an authority for the defendants. [POLLOCK, C.B.—They by their new assignment say in fact that your duty under the writ is spent by the sale, and that by remaining in possession of the premises after that, you have made yourself a trespasser. [ROLFE, B.—The question seems to be, if the sheriff had a right to do any thing else after the seizure than sell the term, execute the assignment to the purchaser, and then leave him to bring his ejectment, if the execution debtor will not give him possession. Another point may arise also, whether the word sale of the term, in the plea, can be held to import the execution of the assignment as well as the sale of the term.] At all events, it is submitted that the term is out of the execution debtor; therefore he cannot maintain this action. The sale of the term does not pass the term until after assignment, and we contend that the term is in the sheriff within the period after the sale, and before the assignment. [POLLOCK, C. B.—Those matters which pass by livery of seizin may well be in the sheriff after seizure, but can that be contended to be so in this case?] Where the property once vests in the sheriff, it remains in him until divested by sale, and no action can be maintained by the debtor between the time of seizure and sale. Now here the sheriff was not functus officio until after a legal assignment was made; therefore the plaintiff is in this dilemma, if it was not made, the sheriff was justified in remaining in possession; if it was, then he had a right to remain as tenant of the assignee, and with his consent; and so, at all events, we are entitled to the verdict upon the issue of not possessed.

Cases cited: Brown v. Dawson (12 A. & E.); Taunton v. Corstar (7 Term R. 431); Newton v. Harland (1 M. & G. 694); Butcher v. Butcher (7 B. & C. 399); Doe dem. Stephens v. Donston (1 B. & Al. 230); Com. Dig. title Execution, C. 6, n. 7; Whittington v. Boxall (12 L. J. N. S. Q. B. 318); Hay v. Moorhouse (6 Bing. N. C. 52).

Humphrey, Q. C. and Peacock appeared to support the case, but were stopped by the Court.

POLLOCK, C.B.—I am of opinion this rule must be made absolute. The question is, whether the plaintiff or defendant is entitled to the verdict on the second issue on the new assignment. That issue is simply that the house in question is not the house of the plaintiff. Now, for the defendants it is said that the plaintiff is in a dilemma. I think that the defendants also are in a dilemma. It seems to me to make no difference whether the word sale in the plea means a perfect transfer by the sheriff or not. If it is to be held to import that there was a perfect transfer by assignment, then the sheriff is functus officio, and is a trespasser by remaining; if not, then the house is still the plaintiff's house, for the property remains in the lessee until assignment.

ALDERSON, B.—The question is here, whether the house is the house of the sheriff, as against the plaintiff. I think it is, and that the moment the sheriff had been there more than a reasonable time to execute the writ he became a trespasser. If there had been a perfect transfer to Taylor, he should have shewn that and justified under him; further, I do not think that the word sale imports that there was any assignment.

ROLFE, B.—I am of the same opinion. The word sold only means bargained and sold. Now a chattel real can only pass by deed. I think that the plea of not possessed is not made out; it appears to me that the sheriff had no right in the house at all, except, perhaps, to seize the paper writing of the lease, which might be there in a box. The proper course for the sheriff then was to sell and assign, and leave the party to his ejectment, if he could not get possession.

PLATT, B. was of the same opinion.

By the COURT, Rule absolute.

RICHARDSON v. PALMER and ANOTHER.

Assumpsit on a special contract, construction of—Breach.

This was an action of assumpsit on a special contract; and the contract declared on was, that in consideration that the plaintiff would make certain machines for the defendants for the manufacture of pins, the defendants undertook to pay the plaintiff 20*l.* apiece for the said machines, and to pay him 45s. per week for the space of three years for ten hours' work per day at their manufactory, for making other machines there. The breach assigned was, that the defendants "did not nor would permit and suffer the plaintiff to continue in the service and employment of them, the defendants, for the said space of three years; but, long before the said time, discharged the plaintiff therefrom without any reasonable cause." A verdict having been found for the plaintiff, Talfourd, Serjt. in last Term obtained a rule nisi to arrest the judgment, on the ground that the breach was ill-assigned, as there was no contract by the defendants to keep the plaintiff in their service for three years, but merely to pay him 45s. per week for such period as the plaintiff should remain in their service.

J. Gray now shewed cause.—This is the only way in which we could have assigned our breach, for this is not simply an agreement by the defendants to pay the plaintiff 45s. per week for three years, but to do so for his work; so that the real cause of complaint is, that they will not allow him to earn his money by continuing in their employ. [ALDERSON, B.—How do you distinguish this case from Apsdin v. Austin (13 L. J. N. S. Q. B. 155)?] Here the contract is not barely and nakedly to pay the plaintiff so much per week, but to do so for his work. [ALDERSON, B.—That may be so, but it may still be as in Apsdin v. Austin, that this was only to pay him if they employed him, and that they were not bound to employ him.] If there is any little ambiguity in the contract in this respect, that will be helped by another part of it, which prevents the plaintiff from teaching any one else the way to make these machines during the period of three years; which goes to shew that the parties contemplated the employment of the plaintiff during that space of time, and if the Court can see that the contract relied on in the breach is necessarily to be inferred, after verdict, the Court will so hold.

Talfourd, Serjt. contrà, was not called on.

ALDERSON, B.—It is impossible to distinguish this case from Apsdin v. Austin, and Dunn v. Sayles (13 L. J., N. S., Q. B. 155 and 159). I am clearly of opinion that the defendants are liable to pay the plaintiff for three years, at 2*l.* 5*s.* per week; but they certainly are not bound to employ him during that time. Therefore the breach is ill-assigned, which should have been for the non-payment of that part of the wages which remained due.

ROLFE, B. and PLATT, B. were of the same opinion. Judgment arrested.

WINWOOD v. HALL.

The rule nisi for enforcing payment of money under an award must, if possible, be served personally, although there has been personal service of the award itself.

This was a rule calling on the plaintiff in this case to shew cause why he should not pay a certain sum of money pursuant to an award.

Streaton now moved to make it absolute, on an affidavit of service of the rule nisi at the house of the plaintiff. He stated that there had been a personal service of the award, but there had been no personal service of the rule nisi, but that the affidavits shewed various unsuccessful attempts to serve him.

Cases cited: Jordon v. Berwick (1 Dowl. N. S.); Doe dem. Moody v. Squire (2 Dowl. N. S. 326).

ALDERSON, B.—I think you had better serve the rule personally if you can. You had better enlarge your rule for that purpose. Rule enlarged.

SURMAN and OTHERS v. DARLEY.

A theatre is not a house within the meaning of a statute which directs a rate to be levied upon all houses within a parish, to be paid by the occupiers.

The primâ facie meaning of the word house is dwelling-house.

This was a special case arising out of an action of trespass. The plaintiffs were the proprietors of Covent Garden Theatre, the defendants were the churchwardens of St. Paul's, Covent Garden, which ... in the by distress, upon which the plaintiffs brought an action of trespass.

The question was, whether the plaintiffs were occupiers, and the theatre was a house within the meaning of the Act; the plaintiffs admitting that they were occupiers of the theatre, but denying that they were occupiers within the meaning of the Act, by reason of their not residing on the premises, and contending that the theatre, not being a place of residence, was not a house at all within the meaning of the statute.

Bodkin, contrà.

By the COURT.—This statute is, I think, confined to dwelling-houses occupied by resident inhabitants. The word "house," primâ facie, means dwelling-house, and there is nothing in these statutes to modify the question. A theatre, therefore, is not a house within the meaning of the statute, and the judgment must be for the plaintiffs.

BAIL COURT.

Saturday, May 24.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

HITCHINGS v. FARROW.

Where a defendant is under terms "to take short notice of trial, if necessary," he is still entitled to full notice if there be time for giving it, and it is no excuse for not giving such full notice that the plaintiff took out a summons to try before the sheriff, which was not disposed of until too late to give the full notice, the order having been refused on the ground that the case was not within the jurisdiction of the sheriff, the amount indorsed on the back of the writ being above 20l.

Byles, Serjt. and T. Sanders, shewed cause against a rule obtained by Andrews, Q. C. calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the trial, verdict, and all subsequent proceedings had on the plaintiff's notice of trial should not be set aside with costs, and why a new trial should not be had between the parties.

It appeared that the writ was indorsed for the sum of 31*l.* The declaration, which was in assumpsit for work and labour and goods sold, was delivered on the 24th of February, the venue being Suffolk. On the 5th of March an order was obtained for further time to plead, on the usual terms of "taking short notice of trial, if necessary." On the 6th the pleas were delivered, one being a payment of 12*l.* into court. On the 12th of March the replication was delivered. On the 14th of March the plaintiff took out a summons to try before the sheriff, which was heard on the 17th, when it was dismissed, the case not being within the Writ of Trial Act, the sum indorsed on the writ being above 20*l.* The 17th was the last day for giving full notice of trial (the commission day at Bury St. Edmunds being 27th of March). The next day (the 18th) notice of trial was given; but on the 22nd the plaintiff's attorney was served with a notice that the defendant would not accept the notice. Upon this a summons was taken out by the plaintiff, calling upon the defendant to shew cause why he should not accept the notice. Mr. Baron Rolfe, however, refused to make an order, and on the 26th the plaintiff gave notice that he considered the former notice as good, and should proceed to try the cause. The cause was accordingly entered, called on, and tried, when, the defendant not appearing, the plaintiff had a verdict for 5*l.*

The question involved in this rule was, whether, under the circumstances, the defendant was bound to take any thing less than full notice of trial. For the plaintiffs it was contended that, inasmuch as the summons to try before the sheriff was not disposed of until the afternoon of the 17th of March, they were unable to give the full notice, and that the clause in the order for time to plead, "to take short notice of trial if necessary," came into operation.

Andrews, Q. C. contrà, was not called on.

WIGHTMAN, J. directed the rule to be made absolute, on the ground that, as the pleas were delivered on the 6th of March, and but for the summons to try before the sheriff, there would have been abundant time for giving full notice of trial, it ought to have been given, and that, inasmuch as the plaintiff ought to have known that the case was not one which could have been tried before the sheriff, his applying for an order for that purpose was no answer, for that if it were, a plaintiff could always, where a defendant is under similar terms, give him short notice of trial by taking out summonses which he must know he could not sustain. Rule absolute.

ALLEN v. FRANCIS.

Where a cause was referred to arbitration, upon an order of reference, directing the witnesses to be sworn before a judge and the arbitrator examined the plaintiff's witnesses not upon oath, which course was protested against by the defendant, who, nevertheless, permitted his own witnesses to be so examined: Held, that by such conduct he had waived the objection, and could not be permitted to impeach the award on that ground.

Bovill moved for a rule nisi to set aside the award herein, on the ground that the arbitrator had exceeded his authority, inasmuch as he took the evidence not upon oath. It appeared that the order of reference required the witnesses to be sworn before a judge; that on the plaintiff presenting his attorney as a witness to the arbitrator, who was a surveyor, the defendant objected that he was not sworn, and that the arbitrator had no power to administer an oath; that it was thereupon contended for the plaintiff that the witnesses need not be sworn; that the arbitrator coincided with this view, and decided upon receiving the evidence without oath; that thereupon the defendant protested against the decision, and requested the arbitrator to take a note of the objection; that, afterwards, all the witnesses, including those for the defendant, were examined unsworn, and an award was made against the defendant for 2*l.* 15*s.*

WIGHTMAN, J. in refusing the rule, said that, as the defendant had chosen to go on, notwithstanding the testimony of the witnesses had been taken not upon oath, and had actually tendered and examined his own witnesses unsworn, thereby taking the chance of the award being in his favour, he must be taken to have waived the objection. Rule refused.

Re HOPE, Gent. one, &c.

An attorney, whilst in attendance at the Master's office, taxing costs, and whilst returning therefrom, is privileged from arrest.

Where an attorney of this court had been in attendance at the Master's office of the Common Pleas, of which court he was not an attorney, on an appointment obtained by his client to tax his costs upon an order superseding him as his attorney, and on his returning therefrom he was arrested: Held, that he was entitled to be discharged; and that the fact of his not being an attorney of the Common Pleas, and so not entitled in law to the costs he was taxing, was no answer.

Willes applied for a rule to rescind the order of a judge at chambers ordering Mr. Hope to be discharged out of the custody of the sheriff of Middlesex.

It appeared that Mr. Hope having been the attorney for the plaintiff in a cause in the Common Pleas of Phelps v. Newman, an order had been obtained by his client to change his attorney, on the usual undertaking to pay what costs should be found on taxation to be due. An appointment by the Master having been subsequently obtained to tax, Mr. Hope attended, and, on returning from the Master's office, he was arrested for certain costs due from him in a cause of Hope v. Baxendale. Upon this, Mr. Hope applied to a judge at chambers for his discharge out of custody, on the ground that he was privileged whilst returning from the Master's office, where he had been engaged; and the learned judge being of that opinion, made an order for his discharge, whereupon this rule was applied for. It was now contended that Mr. Hope was not entitled to his discharge, on the ground of his not being an attorney of the Common Pleas, he never having been admitted there, and never having signed the roll of Common Pleas attorneys, pursuant to the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 27, and so not entitled to any costs, and having no business, therefore, to have attended for the purpose of taxing them.

Carey shewed cause in the first instance, and argued that, notwithstanding, inasmuch as Mr. Hope (who was an attorney of this court) was not an attorney of the Court of Common Pleas, he was possibly not entitled to the costs he was taxing; he was entitled to his discharge on the grounds—1st, that he had been in attendance at the Master's office pursuant to a summons for that purpose, and that his presence, therefore, was necessary for the furtherance of the business before the Master; and, 2nd, that as an attorney (though not of that court) he was generally privileged whilst engaged in the business of his clients in the courts of justice or their branches. (1 Bing. N. C. 66; Ex parte King, 7 Ves. 312.)

Willes, contrà, admitted that the Master's office was a place which would privilege a party in attendance there; but contended, that as Mr. Hope was not in fact an attorney of the Common Pleas, he had no right to any costs incurred for business done in that court, and that he was attending the Master's office in his own wrong, and could derive no privilege from being there.

WIGHTMAN, J. however, thought that whether Mr. Hope was or was not entitled to his costs, he was nevertheless justified in his attendance at the Master's office, inasmuch as he was required by the appointment to attend, and may, for aught that the Court could see to the contrary, have had some good reason to have shewn to the Master why in fact he was entitled to his costs; that it was a question for the Master, whether or not he was so entitled; but that, being called upon to present his bill for taxation, he had properly attended, and so had privilege from arrest redeundo. Rule refused.

The company of proprietors of the Medway Navigation being desirous of using their own engine upon this railway, had constructed an engine, and had given the prescribed notice to the directors of the railway to have it examined and give their certificate, but no notice had been taken of the application. Rule nisi.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Tuesday, May 27.

(Before Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD.)

Re LAMPAN.

Costs of a witness.

A person summoned to be examined touching property of a bankrupt supposed to have been concealed by him is not entitled to be paid his expenses before he is sworn or examined.

This party resided in the country, and had been summoned to attend a private meeting of the creditors of the bankrupt, in Basinghall-st. this day, to be examined touching some property of the bankrupt supposed to be in his possession, and to have been concealed by him. He refused to be sworn or examined unless his expenses were first paid. The Commissioner was appealed to.

His HONOUR.—When a party is summoned to be examined, upon the supposition that he has concealed property of the bankrupt, he must not be paid his costs before he is examined. If, after the examination is over, he applies to me, and I am satisfied with his evidence, and that he has not concealed property of the bankrupt, I will order his costs to be paid him.

Re HEMSWORTH, a Bankrupt.

Proof of debt.

The owner of one moiety of a vessel cannot prove against the estate of the owner of the other moiety, who has become bankrupt, for a moiety of the money paid by the solvent owner for stores supplied (previous to the execution of the transfer of the moiety to the bankrupt) for the use of the vessel on a certain voyage about to be undertaken at the joint risk.

A subsequent agreement by the bankrupt to be answerable for a moiety of such stores must be in writing.

Richardson and the bankrupt had each of them agreed to purchase a moiety of a vessel called the Arundel of Mr. Molesworth, the owner. But at the suggestion of the bankrupt, Molesworth, instead of conveying a moiety of the vessel to each of the purchasers, conveyed the whole to Richardson, and Richardson conveyed a moiety to the bankrupt; no money passed from the bankrupt to Richardson, but the bankrupt settled with Molesworth for his moiety. The transfer to Richardson was executed on the 6th, and that from Richardson to the bankrupt on the 23rd of December. The vessel was to sail, at the joint risk of Richardson and the bankrupt, on a speculation to China; Richardson was to have the command of the vessel on the voyage. Previous to the execution of the transfers, the vessel arrived in London, and was taken in the East-India Docks on the 27th of November, 1843. Richardson immediately commenced preparing the vessel and taking in stores for the voyage. The vessel sailed from London early in January, 1843, and was lost on her voyage down the Channel. Previous to the sailing of the vessel, Richardson's agent, who was also Molesworth's agent, had a conversation with the bankrupt as to the respective liabilities of Molesworth, Richardson, and the bankrupt respecting the vessel, when the bankrupt said, it was but fair that Molesworth's liability should cease, and his begin, from the time the vessel entered the Docks, and it was so arranged between them; Richardson had since died, the greater part of the stores had been paid for by him, and the administrator to his effects now proposed to prove against the estate of the bankrupt for a moiety of the expenses of the vessel from the time of its arrival in the Docks on the 27th November, 1843.

The bankrupt contended he was not liable for any of the expenses of the vessel, or for any thing supplied to the vessel previous to the day on which the transfer of the moiety to him was registered; and that the agreement alleged to have been made by him with Mr. Richardson's agent, was in the nature of a guarantee for Molesworth, and should have been in writing.

B. Talbot, in support of the proof.—It is quite clear that although the execution both of the bill of sale from Molesworth to Richardson, and of that from Richardson to the bankrupt, was subsequent to the time when much of the work was done for and the stores supplied to the vessel; yet, that in reality Richardson and the bankrupt were considered by all parties owners of the vessel on its arrival in the docks, and upon that understanding Richardson commenced preparing for the voyage to China. It is clear that the bankrupt considered the moiety of the vessel as his, in effect, from the day she entered the docks, or he would not have agreed with Richardson's agent for his liability to commence at that period. The agreement with Mr. Richardson's agent cannot be considered as an original agreement to become liable, or as a guarantee for Molesworth, but merely as an exposition of what was understood by all the parties to be the effect of the transaction between them. The work done, and the stores provided and paid for by Richardson, were all of them such as were necessary for the particular voyage contemplated, and were actually used on the voyage.

Mr. COMMISSIONER EVANS. — My opinion is, that the bankrupt is not liable in respect of the articles supplied to the vessel previous to the execution of the bill of sale to him. The agreement made by the bankrupt was an agreement to be answerable for the debt of another, and should have been in writing.

Re GARRAT.

Where a proposal is made by an insolvent to pay his debts by instalments, and the opposing creditor assents to the proposition, the Court will adjourn the granting of the final order from time to time until the debts are paid, and in default of payment of any of the instalments will dismiss the petition, the insolvent consenting to an order for payment under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, s. 19.

This was an adjourned meeting for the interim order, and for naming a day for the final order.

Cooke, for the insolvent (an attorney in considerable practice), suggested that it would be for the interest of the creditors that the insolvent should be allowed to continue his business, he agreeing to pay to the official assignee for the use of the creditors, on or before the 27th of August next, a dividend of 2*s.* 6*d.* in the pound, and a further dividend of 5*s.* in the pound on or before the first week in December, and after that time such further dividends as the Court should direct.

Phinn, for the opposing creditor, withdrew his opposition for the present, and consented to the proposed arrangement.

The COMMISSIONER.—Let this matter be adjourned until the day named for the first dividend; if the dividend is not then paid, I shall dismiss the petition; if it is paid, I will adjourn the meeting again until the next dividend, and so on from time to time until all the debts are satisfied. The insolvent must further consent to an order being made by the Court under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, s. 19, for payment of the instalments; and if the order is not obeyed, any creditor may proceed against the insolvent by attachment.

Meeting adjourned, and Order accordingly.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THE CIRCUITS.

FRIDAY, May 23.—Lord BROUGHAM wished to ask his noble and learned friend on the woolsack whether the commissioners appointed to arrange the circuits had recommended Liverpool to be added to the Norfolk Circuit?—The LORD CHANCELLOR said that the commissioners had not yet made any report. He would not anticipate what might be the intention of the learned commissioners, but at present they had not made any report.—Lord BROUGHAM wished to ask his noble and learned friend another question—whether, if the commissioners had made such a report, he had ever heard of any thing so absurd in his life?—The LORD CHANCELLOR had heard so many absurd things in his lifetime that nothing would surprise him. (Laughter.)

£20 CLAUSE—SMALL DEBTS BILL.

Lord BROUGHAM presented a report from the select committee appointed to inquire into the operation of the 20*l.* clause. In accordance with their recommendation, he proposed a Bill for the better securing the payment of small debts. The Bill was then read a first time, and the evidence ordered to be printed.

REAL PROPERTY REGISTRATION.

MONDAY, May 26.—Lord CAMPBELL presented a petition from the Governor of St. Bartholomew's Hospital against the Charitable Trusts Bill. The noble and learned lord would take that opportunity of laying on the table a Bill for the registration of all deeds and instruments relating to real property in England and Wales. This Bill was framed on the report of the real property commission, over which he had presided, and was founded upon the plan which had been proposed by Mr. Duval, one of the ablest real property lawyers that had ever adorned the profession. ("Hear, hear," from Lord Brougham.) That plan had been approved of by the real property commission. It had been considered for two sessions by the House of Commons, and had been favourably received in that House. The subject had not been mooted for twelve years, and he hoped the prejudices which had been entertained against it had died away. The Bill was then laid on the table and read a first time.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.

Lord COTTENHAM moved the second reading of the Ecclesiastical Courts' Consolidation Bill. The noble lord, after explaining that this was not a new measure, called the attention of the House to the multitude of these courts, and the anomalous nature of the matters subject to their jurisdiction, and proceeded to give an outline of the changes contemplated in his Bill. With respect to the jurisdiction exercised by these courts over wills, nothing could be more inextricable than the confusion into which the diocesan courts, and the lesser jurisdiction of decanal and vicarial courts had fallen, so that, de facto, almost all business found its way to the court of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The proposition he intended to make was, that a central court should be established in London, to which all wills should be sent, and that it should have surrogates acting in the towns where the diocesan courts were now held, who should grant probates when the amount of property was small, but be obliged in every case to send the will to London to be registered; so that in future time every man's testamentary dispositions might be found in the metropolis. In questions of divorce and excommunication this central court would retain the power of the old courts. In the matter of church-rates, over which the jurisdiction of these courts had caused so much ill will, he proposed an appeal to quarter sessions, where the rate had been illegally levied; and in that of tithes, he thought the power of these courts should be abolished altogether, and that pending suits should be transferred to the Court of Chancery. He intended also to do away the criminal jurisdiction of these courts, which now had the power of punishing for defamation, incest, and quarrelling and brawling in churchyards. None of these propositions were his own, for each was founded on some recommendation of the many committees appointed to investigate the subject. He had waited for Government measure, but as none had been brought forward, he hoped the House would sanction the one now before it.—The Bishop of LINCOLN objected strongly that the proposed court would be a lay and yet would have powers of divorce and excommunication. The feelings of members of the Church would be outraged if sentences of divorce were pronounced by a purely lay tribunal.—Lord BROUGHAM thought these objections unsound, because the jurisdiction in question had been exercised by laymen in the cases of Sir J. Nicholl and Sir W. Scott. It was right that such anomalies should cease, and that the Crown should appoint these judges as it appointed all others.—Lord WINCHILSEA doubted whether the new Bill would not give rise to more discontent than the old.—The LORD CHANCELLOR and Lord CAMPBELL expressed their approbation of the measure; and the Bill was then read a second time.—Several other Bills were forwarded a stage, and their lordships adjourned till Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THE CIRCUITS.—NEW JUDGES.

WEDNESDAY, May 28.—Mr. WATSON wished put a question to the right honourable baronet opposite, in consequence of a report which had got currency in the newspapers. It had been stated that a division of the northern circuit was about to be made, by taking one half of the business from the circuit, and putting it on the Norfolk circuit. He wished to know if it was true that any such absurd regulation had been recommended by the commission of inquiry, or was about to be adopted? He wished to know whether it was specified in the commission itself, or in the instructions given to the commissioners, that they were not to take into consideration the question of appointing two additional judges in Westminster Hall, and if they had been prevented from doing so? He wished to know, also, whether it had been well considered, with respect to the administration of the law, that the existing state of things should be altered, for he believed that no single client, or any human being representing clients, had ever made any complaint against the existing system?—Sir J. GRAHAM: I really am at a loss how to answer the honourable and learned gentleman's last question. The honourable gentleman said that no complaints had ever been made as to the existing state of things, and wished to know whether there was any intention of changing it. The term "existing system" is so general and vague, that it leaves me in doubt as to what part of it he means to direct his inquiries. With respect to the other two questions, I have no such difficulty. The first refers to the report of the commission to which the question as to the division of the circuits was referred. That report has been drawn up and agreed upon, but it, has not yet been presented. With respect to its subject-matter, I, not having official cognizance of it, must decline discussing the terms of a report which, as far as I am concerned, is unknown. The third question has reference to a restriction in the inquiries of the commission. It is quite true that a letter was addressed to me by that commission, inquiring whether it would be competent for them, in making their report, to contemplate an addition to the existing number of judges. I immediately informed them, as was indeed apparent on the face of the commission, that no such question as that of increasing the number of the judges would be referred by her Majesty to a commission. A measure of that nature would be taken by the executive government, if they judged it necessary, on their own responsibility. The sole question referred to them was, presuming the number of judges to remain unchanged, how in their opinion the existing circuits might be divided with the greatest advantage for the transaction of the public business.—Mr. ROEBUCK said it appeared that the question referred to the commission being how the business of the circuits, with the existing number of judges, might be best distributed, they were not to consider whether the existing circuits might not be better arranged by the addition of two new judges. If that question was altogether cut off from their consideration, then came the inquiry whether another commission should be issued, the real question being whether the judges were not necessary.—Sir J. GRAHAM: That is a question which I cannot contemplate being subjected to the consideration of any commission. I conceive it strictly within the province of the executive government.—Mr. ROEBUCK wished to be informed whether the right honourable baronet intended to submit to the House, or to any other tribunal, a re-distribution of the circuits.—SIR J. GRAHAM: I have had no opportunity of seeing the report of the commissioners, therefore I can only say that I am not prepared to recommend an addition to the number of the existing judges.

PRIVILEGES.

MONDAY, May 29.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL brought up the report of the select committee to which was referred the consideration of the position in which the privileges of the House were placed by the decision of the judges in the case of Howard against the Sergeant at-Arms. The report recommended writ of error, pending which damages might be allowed to be assessed and levied, according to the regular operation of law.—Mr. HUME, and other members, said that in that case there was an end to the privileges of the House of Commons, as the House of Lords would have the power of deciding in what form and to what extent they could be exercised.—After some further discussion, it was agreed that copies of the record, warrant, and other documents, should be produced, in order to enable the House to come to a decision on the question; and the discussion was postponed until the following day.

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Mr. HENRY BERKELEY moved for a select committee to inquire into the effects produced upon debtors and creditors by the operation of the Insolvency Act of last session.—Mr. KEMBLE seconded the motion.—Sir JAMES GRAHAM stated that a bill was now before the House of Lords, with the sanction of the Lord Chancellor, the object of which is to remedy the defects of the act of last session. Immediate legislation was preferable to protracted inquiry; and he thought they should wait till that bill came down from the other House. With all their professions for the welfare of the labouring classes they would badly evince their sincerity if they were to re-enact the old tyrannical power of imprisonment. It might be requisite to afford a more summary mode of procedure against the property of the debtor; and he believed this would be afforded by the measure before the other House.—Mr. PARKER deprecated any return to the old system of imprisonment for debt.—Mr. M. PHILLIPS and Mr. MASTERMAN were favourable to inquiry, in order to ascertain if means could be taken more effectually to protect the creditor from the fraudulent debtor.—Mr. HAWES was afraid that the appointment of the committee would have the effect of cushioning the bill coming down from the other House.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL was anxious to increase the security of the creditor, but suggested the postponement of the motion until the Lords' bill reached them.—After some further conversation, Mr. H. BERKELEY consented to withdraw his motion.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

WE understand that it is now certain that no new Law of Settlement will pass during the present session, and probably not for some years to come.

THE NEW BASTARDY ACT.

IT must be manifest to every one that Mr. LUMLEY is the fittest possible person to edit the new Bastardy Act, of which the object is to legalize Mr. LUMLEY'S forms, and render Messrs. SHAW'S stock saleable. Mr. LUMLEY has accordingly done so; act and forms—hen and chickens—reappear under the parent wing, and a thin tome (also brought forth by Messrs. SHAW) puts the world in possession not only of this new specimen of Parliamentary paternity, but likewise a prologue to the performance, most appropriately penned by Mr. LUMLEY. Nothing can be more pleasant than this prologue. It opens with a reproof of "Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN sitting in the Bail Court" for his decision in Reg. v. Bucks; with the inconsistency and ignorance of which Mr. LUMLEY is evidently quite shocked. He refers to the case of Reg. v. Lewis (8 Ad. & Ell. 881), whence, he says, he derived his form of an order in bastardy; and which he triumphantly cites as not containing any statement of the evidence being taken on oath, and which was nevertheless upheld. Unfortunately alike for vindication and triumph, the point was not taken at all in the argument in that case, nor so much as alluded to in the judgment ! ! !

Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN'S decision was based on two subsequent cases, in which the point did arise, and was determined against Mr. LUMLEY'S view! After this, we think Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN may, and probably will, hold up his head again! We venture even to hope that he may outlive the citation of a nameless case by Mr. LUMLEY (p. iv.), reported to him upon anonymous authority, in which Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN is said to have held a contradictory doctrine. Leaving this unfortunate judge to his fate, we hasten to give Mr. LUMLEY'S own account of the merits of his forms. It is delightful to learn that they have been selected by Parliament for adoption purely on account of their perfection! "Although of course many other forms (says Mr. LUMLEY) had been used by justices, yet, as those which had appeared under my name had been very extensively circulated, and had been publicly marked as defective, THOUGH EVIDENTLY CONTAINING EVERY ESSENTIAL PARTICULAR, they have been adopted by the Legislature, with some slight alterations." The strict meaning of this sentence is, that Parliament adopted the forms because they were marked as defective. But Mr. LUMLEY intended no such reflection, either upon Parliament or himself. The true spirit of the passage is,—The Legislature, impressed by the substantial merits of my forms and the stupidity of their assailants, made them models for legislation! Poor Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN! If it were not for Mr. LUMLEY'S modesty, it would be easy to name the next promotion to the Bench. Why does Mr. LUMLEY say in the next sentence, "It would have been better undoubtedly that some comprehensive measure should have been introduced?" Nothing could be better. Parliament found perfection ready to their hand, and made it law. The only mistake Parliament made was in allowing forms of like effect to be valid: they ought certainly to have made it penal to use any but Mr. LUMLEY'S forms: and we quite enter into the feeling in which Mr. LUMLEY says in his preface, "doubtless, justices will not deem it expedient to depart from the statutory forms where they are applicable." The disinterestedness of this remark is most striking, and it will of course counteract the pernicious liberality of the Act and secure the monopoly.

Why did not the Legislature, which is so alive to Mr. LUMLEY'S talents as a draughtsman, get him to draw the Act? If a gentleman of his distinguished competency had but cast a glance at section 2, would the signal blunder therein have passed into a law? Impossible. It is there enacted, that when any order "shall have been, or shall be, quashed for any defect therein, and NOT UPON THE MERITS, it shall be lawful for the mother, &c. to take proceedings for another order." Is there any greenhorn who has ever accidentally stumbled on a volume of Adolphus & Ellis, or lounged away an hour on a Crown Paper day in the Queen's Bench, who who does not know that of all the sources of doubt, difficulty and litigation in parochial law, the term merits is the rifest? Decisions the most conflicting have been given upon it; what is held to be merits in one case, is held to be form in another. Clever, indeed, the youngster doubtless thought himself, who thrust in the words "and not on the merits!" • The ingenuity of the most experienced parochial lawyer, could have devised no surer source of perplexity and strife. How very absurd, again we say, not to have consulted Mr. LUMLEY, and obtained the benefit of his revision of the Act, in order that it might, like his forms, be characterized by "every essential particular." As it is, we fear that where putative fathers choose to be litigious, they will have almost as much facility of escape afforded them by the Act, as by the untoward blindness of the learned judge who could not see the perfections of the Lumley forms, and failed to be guided by a case which did not decide the point before him.

NEW SETTLEMENT BILL.

WE have it on good authority, that this measure will not be proceeded with this session. This is a wise resolution. Until men and measures are better prepared for a wholesome and comprehensive measure, of which the abolition of removals is the principle, it is safest to let the present system alone. The competency displayed in the recent Poor Law performances in the way of legislation, do not invite further experiments by the same hands. S.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE Judges, it will be seen, have appointed their circuits. The lawyers are so busy in railway schemes, that a general dulness prevails in the courts. Whatever will endure postponement is put off till attorneys and counsel are released by the prorogation of Parliament from the immediate pressure of the committees. The Reports of the Term compel us to postpone many papers of interest for another double number.

USEFUL PRACTICAL POINTS.—No. I.

PRACTICE IN EJECTMENT.

A POINT of much interest, and which every practitioner should carefully note in his book of practice, arose in the recent case of Doe dem. Roberts and Others v. Roe (14 Law Journ. Rep. Exchequer, 102). The declaration was served on the 15th of October, 1844. A rule for judgment against the casual ejector was afterwards obtained, and no appearance was entered on the 29th of November, the day on which it expired. On that day two summonses were obtained by a party named Royle, claiming to defend as landlord; the one requiring from the lessors of the plaintiff particulars of the premises sought to be recovered, with a stay of proceedings in the meanwhile; the other for time to appear and plead. On the cases coming on for hearing before ROLFE, B. his lordship made an order on the first summons for a delivery of particulars, and on the second summons, that Mr. Royle should have a week's time to plead, after delivery of particulars, and to appear and defend as landlord for a portion of the premises. On the authority of the above case, the contributor of this point has frequently advised his clients to pursue the same course, and the judges have invariably allowed it on a summons. The practice, stripped of all technicality, is this:—When your client receives a declaration in ejectment, he may, if a tenant, and he desires to defend, obtain by summons a list or particular of the breaches of covenant, or other forfeiture, on account of which the action is brought, which summons should contain a clause staying proceedings until such particular be delivered, otherwise such summons will not operate as a stay of proceedings. Simultaneously with such summons, you may take out another for time to appear and plead. A landlord, also, when a declaration in ejectment is handed to him by his tenant, may pursue the same course. This practice has the great advantage of informing the defendant's attorney the grounds upon which the lessor of the plaintiff rests his right to recover, and also gives the practitioner time to get up his client's case, or to compromise before incurring the expense of appearing or taking out a consent rule. It is advisable to apply for the particulars or time, or both, before the commencement of the term in which the defendant is to appear, in order to prevent the plaintiff obtaining judgment against the casual ejector. GENERAL ORDERS AND RULES OF THE HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY,

ISSUED BY THE LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR,

Thursday, May 8, 1845.

Times allowed in procedure.

XVI. The times of procedure are to be the same in town causes and country causes; and in the cases hereinafter mentioned are to be as follow:—

1. The service of any subpœna, except a subpœna for costs, is to be of no validity if not made within twelve weeks after the teste of the writ.
2. The service of a copy of a bill upon a defendant under the 23rd of the orders of the 26th August, 1841, is to be of no validity if not made within twelve weeks from the filing of such bill, unless the Court shall give leave for such service to be made after the expiration of such twelve weeks.
3. If a defendant be served with a subpœna to appear to, or to appear to and answer a bill, he is to appear thereto within eight days after the service of such subpœna.
   If he does not, he becomes subject to the following liabilities:—
   1. An attachment may be issued against him.
   2. An appearance may be entered for him on the application of the plaintiff.
   3. If the bill prays for an injunction to stay proceedings at law, the plaintiff may obtain an order for the common injunction, if no injunction has been previously obtained.
4. In cases where a subpœna has been served in the manner specified by Order XXIX. and a defendant is in default for want of appearance, the plaintiff may, within three weeks after such service, cause an appearance to be entered for such defendant by a record and writ clerk, without special order.
5. A defendant, served with a copy of a bill under the 23rd of the Orders of the 26th August, 1841, may, within twelve days after such service, enter a common or special appearance under the 26th or 27th of the same orders.
   If he does not do so, he cannot afterwards enter either a common or special appearance without leave of the Court; and he is bound by the proceedings in the cause, unless the Court otherwise directs.
6. Any person or party having filed exceptions to any pleading or other matter depending before the Court for scandal, and any party having filed exceptions for impertinence, is to obtain an order to refer the same to the Master within six days after the filing thereof.

If he does not, the exceptions are to be considered as abandoned, and the costs are to be paid by the exceptant.

7. Any person or party having obtained an order to refer exceptions to the Master for scandal, and any party having obtained an order to refer exceptions to the Master for impertinence, is to obtain the Master's report thereon within fourteen days after the date of the order, or within such further time as the Master thinks fit to allow.

If he does not, the order is to be considered as abandoned, and the costs are to be paid by the exceptant.

8. Any person or party objecting to the Master's report that any pleading or other matter referred to him is scandalous, and any party objecting to the Master's report that any pleading or other matter referred to him is impertinent, has four days after the filing of the report, within which he may file and set down exceptions thereto and serve the order for setting down the same, before the scandal or impertinence is expunged.

If he does not do so, the scandalous or impertinent matter is to be expunged.

9. Any person or party objecting to the Master's report that any pleading or other matter referred to him is not scandalous, and any party objecting to the Master's report that any pleading or other matter referred to him is not impertinent, has four days after the filing of the report, within which he may file and set down exceptions thereto and serve the order for setting down the same.

10. A defendant may demur alone to any bill within twelve days after his appearance thereto, but not afterwards.

11. A defendant desiring to avoid the common injunction for default of answer has for that purpose only eight days after appearance, within which he is to plead, answer, or demur to a bill praying an injunction to stay proceedings at law.

If he does not plead, answer, or demur within such eight days, the plaintiff is entitled as of course to the common injunction.

12. A defendant who has appeared in person or by his own solicitor, and desires to shew cause against an order to revive being made, has for that purpose only eight days after such appearance, within which he is to plead or demur to a bill of revivor.

If he does not plead or demur within such eight days, the plaintiff is entitled as of course to the common order to revive.

13. A defendant is to plead, answer, or demur, not demurring alone, to any original or supplemental bill, within six weeks after appearance thereto has been entered by or for him.

If he does not, and if he procures no enlargement of the time allowed, he is subject to the following liabilities:—

1. An attachment may be issued against him;
2. He may be committed to prison, and brought to the bar of the Court; and
3. The plaintiff may file a traversing note, or proceed to have the bill taken pro confesso against him.

14. If the plaintiff amends his bill under an order for leave to amend obtained and served before answer, a defendant is to plead, answer, or demur, not demurring alone, to such amended bill, within six weeks after he is served with notice of the amendment of such bill.

If he does not, and if he procures no enlargement of the time allowed, he is subject to the following liabilities:—

1. An attachment may be issued against him;
2. He may be committed to prison, and brought to the bar of the Court;
3. The plaintiff may file a traversing note, or proceed to have the bill taken pro confesso against him.

At the adjourned sessions, on 12th May, 1845, Henry Thomas, esq. of Preswylfa, was appointed Deputy Chairman of the Quarter Sessions.

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY LORDS LIEUTENANT. MIDDLESEX.—The Right Hon. T. H. Jones Viscount Ranelagh, Sir I. L. Goldsmid, bart. and W. H. Bodkin, esq. to be Deputy Lieutenant. LANCASHIRE.—J. W. H [illegible] esq. to be Deputy Lieutenant.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

MR. CARUS WILSON.—We learn from authority that this gentleman is dissatisfied with the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, as to his removal [illegible] habeas corpus, and intends to [illegible] to a higher tribunal. To enable him [illegible] the definitively the question of [illegible] involved in his case a number of [illegible] formed themselves into a committee [illegible] subscriptions in order to prosecute the [illegible] with spirit; and we understand that [illegible] gentleman [illegible] the first proposition of further [illegible] at the head of the list of [illegible] of thirty guineas, [illegible] direct the curious and importa[illegible] We extract the following from the [illegible] of the 25th instant:—

The action against the jailer of [illegible] since [illegible] to [illegible] very speed[illegible] favourable to Mr. Wilson. The declaration [illegible] Mr. Kandich was required to plead, [illegible] forth the claim of 100*l*., and 200*l*. for not delivering to him a copy of the warrant on which he was detained, pursuant to the statue of 31 Charles II. cap. 2. When the day for filing a plea approached, the Jersey authorities went by counsel before Mr. Baron Platt, at chambers, and demurred, in law phrase, to the action; that is, they pleaded that supposing all the facts in the declaration to be true, the defendant Kandich was not liable, inasmuch as what he did was done in his capacity of officer of the Court of Jersey, &c. &c. Mr. Baron Platt took time to consult the other Barons of the Exchequer, and finally gave judgment against the demurrer, thus deciding that the defendant must plead to the action. He did not plead in time, and consequently, Mr. Wilson's solicitor has, as it is technically said, snapped judgment. As soon as the costs can be taxed, he will of course get execution; and then it remains to be seen whether that judgment can be enforced in Jersey. Any property Mr. Kandich may have in England is, of course, at once liable, as well as his person whenever he ventures it there. It is a great pity the viscount was not served. It is a great thing that the authorities of the island will be brought into collision with the Barons of the Exchequer. We are as yet only on the threshold of this great struggle—which must at last prove successful,—

"For Freedom's battle, once begun, Though baffled oft is ever won."

Sir John de Veulle and his board sitting in secret, no proof of offence offered, no defence permitted, have, in the absence of their victim, pronounced upon him a new sentence. They have condemned him to three days solitary confinement in his cell; have shut him up for three days in an oubliette, where he cannot even speak to his wife in the presence of the turnkey, nor be permitted to read his correspondence even after its violation by his gaoler. This infamous judgment was carried into execution on Saturday morning last. Mr. Wilson is this moment undergoing the cowardly sentence.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AUDIENCE OF ATTORNEYS AT QUARTER SESSIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Having opened the discussion on this subject in the LAW TIMES by my letter of the 24th of December, 1844, perhaps you will permit me to say a few more words upon it.

My letter was followed by a leading article from you, remarkable for its good taste, moderation, and candour. With reference to Lord Denman's dictum, it declared that you were unable to satisfy yourself of the meaning of the term pre-audience, as employed in the newspaper; that as regards the right of attorneys to practise as advocates where no barristers attend, there could be no doubt; and that on reference to the authorities, it appeared (taking Lord Denman's dictum as ambiguous) to be undecided whether attorneys could be heard at quarter sessions if there were barristers present (citing Talfourd's Dickinson's Quarter Sessions), but suggesting that it might be a question if they had the right, whether it would be advisable to exercise it; and then proceeded to state the reason for your conviction that it would not, and coming to the conclusion that Lord Denman's dictum, if correctly reported, would be of little practical importance to attorneys, unless it were to enable them to make more motions of course, which, you added, "we really see no reason why they should not be allowed so to do; it is, as in the case put by our correspondent last week, a hardship that an application merely formal cannot be made without a fee to counsel."

Relying upon Lord Denman's decision, taken in the sense in which it is clear the recorder of Lichfield understood it, and which, for the reasons aftermentioned, I think no doubt can now exist it was intended to convey, and referring, also, to stat. 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 114, entitled "An Act for enabling Persons indicted for Felony to make their Defence by Counsel or Attorney," I ventured to declare my belief that attorneys have a right to plead at quarter sessions in the presence of barristers; but I purposely abstained from making any remarks as to the expediency of their doing so generally, contending the point merely as to motions of course, in which you agreed with me; and I now see no reason for departing from my former view of the legal question of right, while on the jurisprudential question of expediency on which I suspended my judgment, I have certainly, on the best consideration I could give the matter, fallen in with your conclusions.

But in the LAW TIMES of last week there is, under the head "Correspondence" (but having all the prominence of a leading article), a letter signed "S." which undertakes to condemn the Flintshire justices and to lament over the attorneys; peremptorily to define, with the help of the passage from Dickinson, the meaning of the word pre-audience, which with the same light you declared your inability to explain when employed by Lord Denman, and declaring that pre-audience means "precisely" that when barristers are present, attorneys cannot be heard. Now, with deference, I think the word has no such precise meaning, but that, both in legal and ordinary discourse, its signification is much more limited.

Three terms are employed in this controversy—audience, pre-audience, and sole (or exclusive) audience. I think these terms have, as it were, a positive, comparative, and superlative sense. In common conversation, to use pre-audience for sole or exclusive audience would be an obvious solecism. What, then, is the meaning in legal parlance? A queen's counsel is said to have pre-audience of a stuff-gownsman. What does that mean? It means that the Q. C. has a right to be called on first: certainly not, that if the former be Q. C. Briefless, Mr. Stuff-gownsman Bagful must hand his briefs to him, or that while there are enough queen's counsel to hold all the briefs no stuff-gownsman can be heard. That would be sole audience, of which we have an example in the case of serjeants in the Common Pleas. What, then, the Flintshire justices, what Mr. Recorder Manning, and what Mr. Recorder Waddington understood Lord Denman to say, and decided accordingly (for it was the very question to be solved), is, that when counsel attend, the Bar must be first "gone through" before the attorneys can be called on, and if counsel have nothing to move, the attorneys must be heard. No one who reads attentively can possibly, unless wilfully, pretend to misunderstand what the difficulty and the solution of it was at Lichfield sessions. See the facts reported in the Staffordshire Advertiser of July 11th and Oct. 24th, published, with a letter from Mr. Eggington, in 4 Law T. p. 301, which was subsequent to the time when your leading article was written.

It is a gratuitous insult to suppose, that Mr. Waddington asked a question of Lord Denman unintelligibly, and that the latter gave an unintelligible answer; especially when we find that Mr. Waddington's inquiry was made for further certainty, after the decision of Mr. Serjt. Manning had been cited. It is rather travelling out of the record to suppose that Mr. Waddington's inquiry and Lord Denman's answer merely went to establish a fact never disputed, that attorneys might be heard at quarter sessions when barristers did not attend—a right which, it seems, extends even to Westminster Hall. "In the superior courts in Westminster Hall, when barristers attend, they only are permitted to act as advocates. Perhaps, if they did not attend, attorneys might be heard as advocates." (Per Littledale, J. in Collier v. Hicks, 2 B. & Ad. 670.)

"S." in his anxiety to make out a case to justify his "judgment" and "lament," evidently overlooked the plain facts, and confused his language to assimilate with his ideas. After making pre-audience and sole audience synonymous, he says, "So long as counsel sit unemployed, while attorneys are engaged, the pre-audience is with the latter," &c.; but the passage ought simply to read—as clearly results from the above explanations—"so long as counsel sit unemployed, whilst attorneys are engaged, the want of business is with the latter."

As "S." so frequently asserts that the decision of the Flintshire justices is "directly at variance" with Lord Denman's judgment, of which, however, he admits the learned recorder's decisions "were the echo," what, let me ask, were the facts of the Lichfield case?

"Mr. Breynton (barrister) conducted a prosecution, and on Mr. Passman, solicitor, appearing for the defence, both Mr. Breynton and Mr. Keyser protested against attorneys appearing as advocates when there were two barristers present, "who regularly attended the sessions." Is it not clear that the Oxford, Lichfield, and Flintshire cases are parallel? and yet we are told that the recorders w right, and the justices were wrong.

As to a mandamus to the Flintshire justices to hear counsel, I should think it would be a good return thereto, that they were and always had been willing to do so, but that they had nothing to move. And I am not inclined to think that the Queen's Bench can make an order on them not to hear attorneys; certainly not when appearing for a prisoner wishing to be heard by attorney, in the teeth of the statute 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 114, the provisions of which I consider strictly analogous to sec. 7 of the recent Act, 8 Vict. c. 9, which, in bastardy, enables the man or woman to be assisted, to appear and answer "by counsel or attorney." What does the statute of Wm. 4 mean by courts in which attorneys practise as counsel, when referring to courts competent to try felonies, if it do not mean courts of Quarter Sessions? And it is impossible to deny that court is one in which attorneys so practise. Laying the Act out of the case, I think that it would be entirely in the discretion of the justices to hear counsel or attorneys, both or either. "In the superior courts, by ancient usage, persons of a particular class are allowed to practise as advocates, and they could not be lawfully prevented; but justices of the peace, who are not bound by such usage, may allow any and what persons they please to act as advocates before them." (Per Parke, J., S. C. ubi sup.) If that be the common law, I can see no grounds in it for the mandamus, and certainly no privilege of exclusive audience can be derived to counsel from the terms of the statute. Of course a mandamus would lie under the statute for "counsel and attorney" to be heard for a prisoner; but, as I have shewn, this statutory right and the present claim of privilege are distinct things.

It has been said that it is ungenerous not to give motions of course to counsel. But I ask what sanction has an attorney for disbursing his client's money unnecessarily? Then there is the perhaps stronger case, where the client has not the means of feeing counsel, when I submit it becomes an imperative duty on the attorney to exercise his right.

For these reasons, looking to the legal question, I must still think the best of the argument is with the attorneys; as regards the expediency of insisting on their right, candour compels me to say that, with the modifications the LAW TIMES would admit, I think the reasons for introducing the advocacy of the Bar prevail. I remain, Sir, yours truly,

GEORGE JOHN DURRANT.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

Y. O. S. submits the following ingenious but, we think, impracticable suggestions for LAW REFORM:

England (inclusive of Wales) to be divided into five circuits or divisions; North, South, East, West, and Centre, giving as near as possible an equal extent to each circuit; each division or circuit to have a head-quarters or capital, where the judges of that division to reside and sit in banc, when not going circuit: central places for such capitals are Leeds, Salisbury, Bury, Newtown, and Leicester. 2. Judges to go circuit every quarter, to chief towns of county in their division. 3. Judge to remain at station for business; present fifteen judges to be removed to those circuit stations, giving three judges to each division or circuit: no alteration required as to this, they being merely drafted off to the country; all process to issue from the circuit stations, and all proceedings of suit there to be recorded and remain, instead of at London, each having a complete machinery; barristers and attorneys to elect at which district to practise, and there to be registered; not to change without leave and payment of fine; terms Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer to cease; terms Hilary, Michaelmas, Trinity, and Easter to cease; circuits gone by judges to be called Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter. For the metropolitan district, ten miles round Whitehall; three new judges to be appointed, who are to sit in Westminster-hall until new courts built in Lincoln-square; their courts to be named first, second, and third Chambers of the Civil Courts of the Metropolis; Criminal Courts of Metropolis to continue at Old Bailey; a High Court of Appeal, civil and criminal, to be formed of five judges, to sit in metropolis de die in diem: jurisdiction of peers and Privy Council to cease; Queen's Counsel only to practise in Court of Appeal; Courts of Chancery to remain as at present until entire reform of the law, but to sit only in Lincoln's-inn; Chancery and Common law Bar to be separated; dignity of serjeant to cease after present possessors; bankruptcy and insolvency to be assimilated; Courts of Bankruptcy to have jurisdiction in both cases; imprisonment for debt to be entirely abolished, but if fraud, or gross improvidence, then to be punished by determinate punishment criminally; cessio bonorum in all cases, whether guilty or not; a Board of Justice to be formed, to have surveillance in all law matters, under the orders of the Minister of Justice, to consist of twelve members; a registration of land in every county; use of Latin and French language to cease; one uniform paper to be used in law proceedings, with a stamp parchment not to be used; a civil code to be formed, with appendix of mode of procedure a criminal code also, with appendix of mode of procedure.

L. and C. submit to experienced practitioners the following question relative to MORTGAGOR AND MORTGAGEE—NOTICE:—

If mortgage-money be not repaid at the time mentioned in the proviso for redemption, is the mortgagee entitled to six calendar months' notice of the mortgagor's intention of repaying it, or to six months' interest in advance, presuming that he has done no act to preclude himself from objecting to the want of not

We believe it to be generally understood and acted upon by the Profession, that a mortgagee is so entitled, and it is laid down in Coote on Mortgages, p. 553, but contra to this, see Brown v. Lockhart (9 Law J. N. S. 167).

The subject is of great importance in practice, and perhaps some of your correspondents may examine the authorities, and clear up the doubts which the V. C.'s judgment in the above case raises.

A Correspondent under the signature of "PROSPECTIVE," submits the following suggestion relative to SHORT CONVEYANCES:—

As there appears but little chance, in the event of Lord Brougham's Bill for the shortening of conveyances passing into a law, that attorneys will be able, out of the profits of their profession, and with the present scale of charges, to maintain that position in society to which by their expensive education they are entitled, I would suggest that, with the sanction of the various Law Associations, fees for the preparation of such documents should be fixed, varying from 5*l.* to 20*l.* according to the amount of the purchase-money.

I do not think there can be any more difficulty in this than in the present arbitrary charge upon abstracts and other documents; nor do I consider there any injustice in compelling the wealthier portion of the community, who are the only parties requiring conveyancing, to pay for the support in respectable circumstances of those whom it is their essential and evident interest to maintain in such respectability.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, MAY 31, 1845.

LORD BROUGHAM'S NINE BILLS.

WE have applied, but as yet in vain, for copies of these Projects of Laws. But there will be time enough for reviewing them, and doing them ample justice. There is no chance of their passing for twenty years at least, and when they are put upon the statute-book, they will yield a fruitful harvest of litigation. The lawyers have no need to fear them.

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

ALTHOUGH receiving no aid from the press, with the solitary exception of the LAW TIMES, Justice has made herself heard at last. In both houses of Parliament the frightful injuries inflicted upon the industrious and honest by the Rogues' Indemnity Act, has been forced upon the attention of the members. In the Lords, a Bill has been introduced, with the sanction of the LORD CHANCELLOR, to amend the blunder of that memorable piece of patchwork, for which the country is indebted to Lord BROUGHAM'S rivalry of Lord COTTENHAM. In the Commons, although a Committee of Inquiry was refused to the motion of Mr. BERKELEY, Sir JAMES GRAHAM pledged himself that the subject should have the attention of the Government, and that every facility should be afforded to the passing of the Lords' Bill during the present session.

Up to the present time (Thursday night) we have made repeated but unsuccessful endeavours to procure a copy of this Bill, that we might submit its provisions to the consideration of our readers, the greater portion of whom are deeply interested in the question, and whose experience in the practical working of the law of debtor and creditor will give to their suggestions for its improvement a peculiar value. The primary requisites—the foundations, in fact—of such a measure must be, efficient and easy remedies against property of every kind belonging to the debtor, and punishment for improvidence in contracting the debt, and for fraud in evading its payment. No law that does not fully accomplish both of these objects can or ought to satisfy the mercantile community, for nothing less will give to them the protection to which they are entitled. It is easy for senators with large revenues, whose pockets are always overflowing with money, to talk against the system of credit, and assert that it is the fault of the creditor if he permits himself to be cheated, for he ought to give no trust. In a mercantile country, a great proportion of the business must be transacted upon credit, and there are few, even of the wealthy, so fortunate in the regular receipt of their incomes, that they are not sometimes compelled to ask credit. It is a necessary evil, and the law must meet it as best it can.

A favourite mode of parrying the question with those who seem to have some private unavowed motives of hostility to any thing that makes more stringent the law of debtor and creditor, is a howl against reviving imprisonment for debt. For the twentieth time we repeat, that there is no such project; nobody seeks it; the traders do not demand it; the lawyers do not advise it. All that on the part of the Profession and of our clients we claim of the Legislature is, that we shall be enabled to prove our debt readily, to seize the property of the debtor, if he have any, and if we can find none, that we shall be permitted to compel him to give an account of himself to an authority empowered alike to punish or protect, as the case may be; to make him shew why he does not pay, or why, being unable to pay, he contracted the debt. If he can do this satisfactorily, let him have the protection of the law, like other unfortunate insolvents; but if he cannot, let him be punished for his fraud, and let the imprisonment be avowedly inflicted, not for the debt, but for the fraud of contracting it, knowing he could not pay, or of evading payment.

This, in few words, is the demand of the Profession on behalf of their now much-wronged clients. How far the new Bill meets that demand we hope to be enabled to shew next week; and if it should fail to do so in any particular, we trust that we shall have the immediate and energetic aid of the Law Societies in an endeavour to urge upon the Parliament during its progress such amendments as shall make it in truth what it professes to be.

The real cause why so much of our legislation is impracticable and imperfect lies in this, that it is framed by men who are theorists only—who know nothing of the business of life, and therefore are unable to adapt their schemes to the actual circumstances of society. Half-a-dozen attorneys would construct a better law of Debtor and Creditor in six hours than the wisdom of the united Legislature could concoct in six months. What utter ignorance of the subject does every speech display as uttered in either House! How little practical wisdom; what entire misunderstanding of the facts! And, in truth, the meeting of the City merchants on Tuesday seemed to be almost as widely at sea with respect both to the principles involved and the manner of their application. All felt the grievance, but none appeared to have an accurate conception of the remedy.

THE NEW ORDERS IN CHANCERY.

Mr. Allnutt's edition of the New Orders in Chancery, prepared for the Verulam Society, will be ready in the course of next week. It will be very copiously noted and indexed, with a view to the actual wants of the Practitioner.

PROFESSIONAL MAL-PRACTICES.

Among the multitude of these which we have had occasion to bring under the notice of the Profession, there is none more gross than the following:

Mr. John Brindle, the secretary to the society, appears in the Law List as a certificated attorney, practising at Manchester.

According to the circular the plans are his. We have not the slightest doubt of it.

What are those plans?

Plainly a contrivance to obtain business by underselling. Mr. Brindle engages to write a legal letter for sixpence, and if that fails, to write a second for threepence!

But the circular will best tell its own tale, and we submit it and its concoctor to the judgment of his Professional brethren.

Address of the committee of the Manchester and Salford Mutual Protection Society, established January 15th, 1845, for the more easy recovery of debts and rents, and for protection against fraud, in Manchester, Salford, and their vicinities.

The recent alterations in the law of debtor and creditor render it necessary to establish the above society, having for its objects the more easy and economical collection of debts, and the security of the trader from being the dupe of designing persons who endeavour to obtain credit under false representations, and in various ways to evade the discharge of their obligations.

In order to effect this, it will be necessary that a considerable number of the trading classes should join the above-named society for mutual protection; and the originators of this society consider it quite possible that in such an extensive and densely-peopled district a very large number of traders and owners of property might be associated together for this purpose.

The other object stated above, namely, that of securing the members of the society from imposition, will be obtained in the following mode:

The secretary of the society will enter, in an alphabetical record-book provided for that purpose, the names, various residences, and other descriptions of all persons from whom he has found it impossible to obtain, by the ordinary methods, the settlement of their engagements; or who, by any dishonourable method, seek to elude so very obvious a duty.

This book will be accessible to members only of the society, at the times stated in the rules for the government of the same, and, by their assistance, will become, in a very short time, of the highest value as a guide in their various transactions in business.

The subscription, as arranged by the committee, is 10s. per annum, and 6d. for rules and member's card.

The committee have arranged the following scale of charges to be paid to the secretary:

1. Legal letter, application for payment of debt, 6d.
2. Legal letter, on a second or any subsequent application, where debtor neglects to pay according to promise, 3d.
3. Agency charge, after application is made, on payment of debt, 5 per cent, whether the amount be paid to the secretary or direct to the creditor.
4. That where the debt will have to be received by an agent in another town, besides the above fees, agent's charge extra.
5. If, after having made legal application without effect, members should find it impossible to obtain their accounts, and are inclined to take further proceedings, the Secretary will, in all unsuccessful cases, charge only the actual expenses paid by him.

The committee take leave to state that they have examined the secretary's plans; and from the peculiar method in which he proposes to keep his books, it will prove a most effectual means of detecting those dishonest persons whose constant study it is to cheat and defraud the honest trader.

As this institution presents features of a novel character, it is desirable that the utmost confidence should prevail, as regards the safety of accounts intrusted to the gentleman who conducts its business; and for this purpose, the secretary proposes to pay the same to the members applying on the first Friday in every month, between the hours of 10 and 1, and 3 and 5.

The following gentlemen formed themselves into a provisional committee, and respectfully and earnestly invite all who approve of the principles and objects of the society to join and co-operate with them.

Subscriptions will be received, and members admitted, on application to Mr. William Burton, Oldham-street, Treasurer; Mr. John Brindle, 5, St. Ann's-square, Secretary; or to the collectors, who are duly authorized, and will present the address, and are also supplied with members' cards and receipts.

By order of the committee,
John Brindle, Secretary.

SHAM-LAWYERS.

The following is a printed form, assuming all the official aspect of an Attorney's letter, and doubtless intended to frighten the debtor into payment of costs as well as debt. We have little doubt that an indictment might be sustained for money thus procured under the demand of costs by a sham-lawyer. At least, the law societies ought to try the question. Some such demand as this should be complied with and paid, and then a prosecution. Let an eye be kept upon Mr. B. Wood Beech.

Office, Longport, May 23, 1845.

Mr. William Peover,

Sir,—I am instructed by Mr. John Critchlow, of Alsager, farmer, to apply to you for payment of the sum of 12*l*. 10s. 0d. which you stand indebted to him; and I am farther to inform you, that unless the same be paid to me at my office, together with 5s. my charge for this application, on or before Saturday, the 31st instant, legal proceedings will be commenced against you for the recovery thereof; the unpleasantness of such a step I hope you will prevent; otherwise, a writ of summons will be served upon you. I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

CONDITIONS OF SALE.

ON THE LAW RELATING TO CONDITIONS OF SALE.

In reference to the sale of leasehold property under special conditions, and particularly under a condition restraining the purchaser from requiring production or proof of the lessor's title, "there is no doubt," says Lord Eldon (18 Ves. 512), "that purchasers upon such sales will not bid so readily, and will be very cautious and wary; but the necessity of requiring vendors to advertise what they mean to sell arises from this, that it is quite impossible for a Court of Equity specifically to perform the contract of a vendor, admitting that he did not choose to describe the subject as it was, lest an honest disclosure of its actual state should put it into the hands of the vendee at a lower price. A Court of Equity cannot lend its assistance to such a purpose. The answer, therefore, to all the difficulty said to be imposed on lessees selling their leases is, that there is no difficulty which they do not create themselves, by not advertising the purchasers how they can deal with the subject, when they come to execute the contract."

Trustees, however, and other vendors clothed with fiduciary characters, are embarrassed with another difficulty; for though they are not only at liberty but under obligation to sell under such special conditions as shall secure the contract from failure on account of gross or irremediable defects in the title, yet if they make a sale accompanied by conditions tending to depreciate the property, or to chill the competition of bidders at the sale, it will be deemed a breach of trust, and the loss thus occasioned to the trust estate will be thrown upon the trustees. "I very much doubt," said Sir William Grant, M. R., in Wilkins v. Fry (2 Rose, 371, 375), "whether assignees would be justified in clogging the sale with covenants and conditions, reducing the value of the property, which it is their duty to make the most of, for the benefit of the creditors." Every such case must of course be judged by its own special circumstances; and we apprehend that no general definition can be given of conditions which may be termed depreciatory. There has, however, been one recent decision on this subject, in the case of Hobson v. Bell (2 Beav. 17), where a reversionary interest in stock was put up to sale by the mortgagee; the special conditions were, that all objections should be stated and delivered within a limited time; that the purchaser should not require any other person than the vendor to concur in the assignment, and that all copies of deeds, &c. should be obtained at the expense of the purchaser. The Master of the Rolls was of opinion that those conditions were not of such a depreciating character as to amount to a breach of trust, or constitute an objection to the title.

There is great reason, however, to believe that sale is seldom or never damped by the mere terms of the conditions which accompany it. Few ordinary or unprofessional purchasers trouble themselves so much as to look at the conditions; and those who do are generally so incapable of estimating their effect, that they lay them aside as altogether unintelligible.

Conditions of sale are readily divisible into the following three classes: Conditions Preliminary; Conditions Concurrent; and Conditions Posterior. And we shall proceed to consider each of these three classes of conditions successively:—

I. Conditions preliminary usually relate, first, to the biddings, and, secondly, to the execution of the contract.

1. In conditions relating to the biddings, it is usually provided that no person shall bid less than a given sum at one time, or retract any bidding after it has been made; that the highest bidder shall be the purchaser; and that in case of a dispute between two or more bidders, the estate or property shall be immediately put up again for resale. Without a stipulation against the retraction of biddings, a bidder at common auctions has a locus penitentiæ until the auctioneer's hammer falls; for a bidding is merely an offer, and is not matured into an obligation until the vendor has accepted it. (Payne v. Cave, 3 T. R. 148.) In sales, however, of land a purchaser is further protected, and is not concluded by any offer until he has signed a written contract. (Malins v. Freeman, 2 Keen, 25.)

With reference to the obligation of biddings, it has been decided that where a party bids by mistake for one lot or estate instead of another, he will, upon satisfactory evidence of the mistake, be relieved from the contract. This occurred in Malins v. Freeman (2 Keen, 25), where the defendant intending to bid for one estate bid by mistake for the plaintiff's property, which was sold by the same auctioneer, on the same day, and at the same time and place: and, independently of a question whether the person by whom the contract had been signed as the agent of the defendant had sufficient authority for so acting, Lord Langdale, M.R. being satisfied with the evidence of the mistake, dismissed the plaintiff's bill for specific performance. "The defendant," said his lordship, "may be answerable for damages at law, without being liable to a specific performance in this court. In cases of specific performance the Court exercises a discretion, and knowing that a party may have such compensation as a jury will award him in the shape of damages for the breach of contract, will not in all cases decree a specific performance; as in cases of intoxication, although the party may not have been drawn into drink by the plaintiff........And the question here is not, as it has been put, whether the alleged mistake, if for the Court is not here called upon to relieve the defendant from his legal liability; but whether, if the mistake be proved, the Court will enforce a specific performance, leaving the defendant to his legal liability. And I think that if such a mistake as is here alleged to have happened be made out, a specific performance ought not to be decreed; and after giving to the evidence the best consideration in my power, I am of opinion that the defendant never did intend to bid for this estate. He was hurried and inconsiderate; and when his error was pointed out to him, he was not so prompt as he ought to have been in declaring it. It is probable that by his conduct he has occasioned some loss to the plaintiff: for that he is answerable, if the contract was valid, and will be left so, notwithstanding the decision to be now

But I think that he never meant to enter into this contract, and that it would not be equitable to compel him to perform it, whatever may be the responsibility to which he is left liable at law."

2. In consequence of the necessity of a written contract for the validity of a sale of lands, conditions of sale usually require the purchaser to sign within a limited time an agreement for the completion of his purchase; and this stipulation has been decided to be fulfilled as against a purchaser, by the entry of a memorandum in the auctioneer's book with the purchaser's name annexed; the auctioneer having been held to be by implication an agent duly authorized to sign a contract on behalf of the highest bidder. (White v. Proctor, 4 Taunt. 209; Kemys v. Proctor, 3 Ves. & B. 57).

THE LAW of NISI PRIUS, Evidence in Civil Actions, and Arbitrations and Awards: with an Appendix of the New Rules, the Statutes of Set-off, Interpleader, and Limitation, and the Decisions thereon. By A. J. Stephens, Barrister-at-Law.

"The Law of Nisi Prius has received from Mr. Stephens the most elaborate treatment to which it has yet been subjected. Not only has he collected a greater number of cases bearing upon it, but he has cited those cases at more length; and when he has occasion to set forth statute-law, he copies the very words of the legislature. Furthermore, in addition to the usual subjects treated of in works on Nisi Prius, he has introduced the subjects of evidence in civil actions, and arbitration and awards. There is a copious Appendix of the New Rules, and the Statutes of Set-off, Interpleader, and Limitation, with notes of the cases that have arisen upon them. Some idea of the vast array of legal lore gathered and classified in this laborious publication may be formed from this; that it consists of three volumes, large 8vo. closely but clearly printed, with no waste of margin; each volume contains upwards of 1,000 such pages; and the Index fills no less than two hundred and eight pages, which alone will entitle the work to the attention of all who know the incalculable value of a copious and well-digested index to a law book. The names of the cases cited fill one hundred pages, having three columns in each; and the list of text authors cited occupies eight columns."

From an article on Mr. A. J. Stephens's Law of Nisi Prius, in The Law Times of May 17, 1845.

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

TAYLOR v. WYLD.

Advancing appeal—Demurrer—Orders of 1841—Practice.

G. L. Russell in this case applied to advance the appeal, so as to be heard as if it had been a demurrer. One of the defendants to the bill had demurred to the bill, and that demurrer had been overruled; and then another defendant in the same interest had put in answer, which answered some immaterial parts of the bill, and then declined to answer all the rest of the interrogatories. This was a literal but not substantial compliance with the 38th order of August 1841, which declares "That a defendant shall be at liberty by answer to decline answering any interrogatory or part of an interrogatory, from answering which he might have protected himself by demurrer." The plaintiff contended that this was in substance a demurrer, and applied to have the appeal set down to be heard accordingly.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is the same in principle as a demurrer, and the hearing ought to be advanced.

DAMER v. LORD PORTARLINGTON.

Practice—Time to answer affidavits—Undertaking—Injunction—Appeal—Judicial discretion.

Where the Court permits a motion to stand over to enable one of the parties to answer an affidavit, that is an indulgence which will be granted on such terms as the judge in his discretion may think proper, and the question whether such discretion has been properly exercised or not, is not usually a subject of appeal.

This was a motion to discharge an order of the Vice-Chancellor of England, which direct a sum of 15,000*l.* standing in the London Joint Stock Bank, to the credit of three persons as trustees, Blount, Wright, and Mahony, should be paid into court, pending an application for a receiver, and an injunction to restrain Blount from receiving the rents of certain estates of Lord Portarlington in Ireland. The principal motion was being heard before the Vice-Chancellor of England, when James Parker and Rolt moved to discharge the Vice-Chancellor's order, on the ground that it was irregular; and they contended that it was an adjudication on a point not fully heard, which would prejudice their client, Mr. Blount, on the principal motion. The notice of motion before the Vice-Chancellor was given for Thursday, the 1st of May, and on the Monday previously the plaintiff filed a very long affidavit, to which Mr. Blount could not properly reply by the motion day. It was therefore asked that the motion should stand over, to enable Mr. Blount to answer the affidavit, which was allowed by the Vice-Chancellor, on his undertaking not to transfer the 15,000*l.* or receive the rents in the meantime. The trust was for securing 345,000*l.* advanced by fourteen different persons upon mortgage of Lord Portarlington's estates. The defendant disputed the plaintiff's title, and there was no statement of hazard to the fund in the banker's hands. When the undertaking had been given, Mr. Stuart, for Lord Portarlington, asked that the 15,000*l.* might be paid into court, and the counsel of the bank stating he did not object, the order was first drawn up as one made by the banker's consent. On that being objected to, and Green, for the bank, saying he had not consented, but only submitted, to such order as the Court might direct, the Vice-Chancellor made the order for payment into court as an adverse order against the bank and Blount, and on a subsequent day, on the minutes having been spoken to, the plaintiff's affidavit was entered as read. Mr. Blount's counsel objected that the effect of this order was an adjudication against him. After the undertaking had been given, it was irregular to make an adverse order against him.

Green, for the London Joint Stock Bank, did not consent to any order, but submitted to act as the Court should direct. The bankers were stake-holders, and could not be called upon to exercise any discretion.

Bethell and R. Palmer, for the plaintiff, contended that the order of the Vice-Chancellor to pay the money into court, was an exercise of judicial discretion which was not the subject of appeal. Mahony, one of the trustees, had done all he could to divest himself of the trust, and appeared and prayed that the money might be paid into court. Wright, the third trustee, had been a bankrupt, and was abroad. Under that state of things, the Vice-Chancellor held that the money ought to come into court. In fact the money had been paid into court. Most of the cestuis que trust assented to its coming into court, as it was obvious that, in the case of an estate so incumbered as that of Lord Portarlington's, some creditor might attempt to attach the funds in the hands of the banker.

Wilcock, for Mahony, the retiring trustee.

Wakefield and Lowndes, for Eyre, who had been selected as trustee in the place of Wright.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It is not in strictness an irregularity of which the defendant Blount complains; but it is a question whether the Vice-Chancellor exercised a sound discretion. It is a principle of this Court that it will not set aside what has been done by the Court below in the exercise of a discretion, unless it is clear to demonstration that the decision is wrong.

Jas. Parker, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The point is merely this. The defendant, having notice that an affidavit had been filed three days before the day for hearing of the motion, the 1st of May, was bound to be ready. Then he makes an application to postpone the hearing, on the ground that he had not had sufficient time to answer the plaintiff's affidavit. That was an appeal to the indulgence of the Court, which was granted on certain terms; one of those terms being that the money should be paid into court. It is a mere question whether the discretion of the Court below was properly exercised. The Court won't overturn that, unless it is made clear to demonstration that it is wrong.

Re PROSSER'S PATENT.

Re PINKUS'S PATENT.

Practice on applications for patents—Caveat against sealing patents—Cost

These were cross-petitions by two persons claiming rival inventions for atmospheric railways against the sealing of the patents. The Solicitor-General had reported in favour of both patents, and the Lord Chancellor had referred the matter back to the Solicitor-General, that he might report for his lordship's information more fully on the circumstances of the case.

Jas. Parker and Beales, for Prosser's petition, stated that the Solicitor-General had reported that both patents ought to be sealed, with a condition as to that of Pinkus's patent, that so much of it as was similar to Prosser's patent, which the report identified by reference to a drawing, should be withdrawn. It was now proposed, that both caveats should be withdrawn, and the patents sealed; but Prosser asked that his opponent should pay the costs which had been occasioned by his entering a caveat. If Pinkus intended to go into the question on the merits, he should have presented a cross-petition.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The original petition is in force, is any further petition necessary?

Parker.—It is, if the same practice is adopted as that which prevails in the Master's office. He could not oppose the confirmation of the Master's report without an express petition for that purpose.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The course in such cases as the present is this; I refer to the Solicitor-General, and he then reports to me what he has done for my information. The question is, whether I shall affix the great seal to the patents. The report of the Solicitor-General requires no confirmation. I ask what he has done, and he gives me the reasons for what he has done. It is in my discretion whether or not to affix the great seal.

His lordship then read the Solicitor-General's report, which stated in substance, that as he considered the whole of the questions between the parties might be better considered in a court of law, he had recommended that Prosser's patent should pass the great seal; and also that, if Pinkus consented to withdraw a part of his claim, his patent also ought to pass the great seal. This would leave the parties in a situation to litigate the matter in a court of law. And his lordship added, "There must be a strong case made after that report to prevent either patent passing the great seal."

Wakefield, for Pinkus, referred to the merits as shewn in the affidavits.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I cannot discuss the matter again. The Solicitor-General says that the patents ought to be sealed, and it is inconsistent with that opinion that it should again be discussed here. Is there any case in which the Chancellor has investigated such disputed questions on patents? It is a question for the jury to decide who was the original inventor.

Wakefield.—Then a caveat against sealing a patent is useless.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In consequence of such caveat, the matter has been referred back to the Solicitor-General, who has had the parties before him some times; and he reports that such conflicting evidence was offered to him, that he could come to no safe conclusion on the point. I therefore should be unable to come to any conclusion. It is now only a question of costs. I cannot be expected to undo what has been done by the Solicitor-General. The sealing the patents does not preclude further investigation in a court of law.

Parker then opened the case, in order to shew that Pinkus had surreptitiously obtained a knowledge of part of Prosser's invention. The facts were shortly these. Piati, a Milanese, had completed this invention, and secured it by patent in the Austrian dominions. Carcano, who was an uncle of Piati, came to England to secure the benefit of the invention in this country. On the 26th of Sept. 1844, he went with Count Del Monte, who understood English, to a patent agent named Prince, who said Pinkus had a great deal to do with inventions of this nature, and it was arranged that a meeting should be had with Pinkus. Such meeting afterwards took place at Prince's office, when Carcano shewed Pinkus a drawing explanatory of certain parts of the invention, which he examined and seemed to understand. Pinkus admitted that he had the drawing in his hands, but denied that he had acquired any knowledge of the invention. Carcano afterwards disposed of the invention to Pi[illegible] The case made by Pinkus was, that he was ignorant of the other invention, but he opposed Prosser's patent, because he believed that his own inventions covered every possible mode of applying compressed air to railways, and therefore he opposed the grant of all such patent.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If Pinkus has opposed the other patent without any reasonable ground, he must pay the costs of the other petitioner. I think that the reason given that Prosser could not use his invention without using some patent of Pinkus's, is not a reasonable ground of opposition. A particular drawing is referred to by the Solicitor-General: it lies on Pinkus to shew that it is not the same as that of which he obtained an inspection. I will communicate with the Solicitor-General before I determine the question of costs.

May 23. The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I find the interpretation I put upon the report of the Solicitor-General, on reference to him, is the correct one; that Mr. Wakefield's client has been guilty of gross misconduct, and that he had taken advantage of an inspection of Carcano's drawing to claim a part of his invention. It is reasonable that Prosser should have the costs of his caveat. On the other petition there will be no costs.

The LORD CHANCELLOR, after intimating that the amount required for buildings on so small a farm seemed to be large, made the order.

FLINT v. WARREN.

Will—Construction—Conversion—Charitable legacies.

A testatrix by her will gave and bequeathed certain legacies of a charitable nature and certain annuities. She then gave and devised to her executors and their heirs all her real powers and authority to conduct and manage her freehold messuages, lands, &c. in the event of her not otherwise giving and devising the same in any other manner or to any other person, so as the same and every part thereof might, at their or his discre-

The testatrix died in April 18[illegible]. The real estate had been sold [illegible] to the institution of the present suit; but the purchase-money had been wasted and misapplied by James Warren, one of the executors and trustees under the will, and the purpose of one of the [illegible] representatives, as he had caused the trust-moneys to be diminished. The personal estate of the testatrix was sufficient for the payment of all her legacies and annuities [illegible] the principal question of any consequence which [illegible] was, whether the testatrix had by her will so blended the proceeds of her real estate with the personalty as to form one common fund for the purposes of her will, that the charity legacies and annuities must fail in the proportion of the proceeds of the real estate to the amount of pure personalty.

James Parker and Lloyd appeared for the surviving trustee.

Cooper and Lewis, for the next of kin, contended, that the charity legacies ought to fail according to the proportion that the proceeds of the real estate bore to the personal [illegible] the testatrix had made one common fund for the payment of her legacies, there was a conversion [illegible] and the proceeds of the real estate with the personal constituted that common fund for the payment of those charitable bequests, which funds were equally bound to pay the debts and legacies.

The Vice-Chancellor.—Is not the [illegible] of the real estates left to the discretion of the trustees? If so, the word "discretion" may be capable of a two-fold meaning, referring to the time, manner, form, &c.; or it may amount to a discretion whether they shall sell or not.

Cases cited for the next of kin: Phillips v. Phillips (1 My. & K. 649); Green v. Jackson (5 Russ. 35); S. C. on appeal (2 Russ. & My. 258).

Bethell, for others in the same interest, contended that the charity legacies, had there been no personalty, would have failed altogether. That the undisposed of surplus was clearly not only personal estate, but the proceeds of the realty also. The charity legacies must therefore fail in proportion that the real estates bear to the personalty.

Wray, for the Attorney General.—I contend that the direction given by the testatrix does not amount to a conversion of the real estate into personalty, for there is a distinct and separate gift of these legacies. Neither are they charged upon the real estate. The power with which she invests her trustees as regards the management of her estates does not imply a conversion, it amounts to nothing more than an interim direction, as it were, to manage those estates. Unless legacies be clearly charged upon the realty, the [illegible] payable [illegible] [illegible] you cannot say that, in the event of the personalty being insufficient to pay those legacies, the real estates are rendered liable, and therefore I submit that the charitable legacies are not subject to apportionment.

The Vice-Chancellor.—It appears to me, looking at the whole scope of the will, that the testatrix virtually directed her real estate to be sold out and out. She nominates her executors, and then gives them and their heirs all lawful powers and authorities to conduct and manage her freehold messuages, &c., so as the sums, and every part thereof, [illegible] the [illegible] direction, be sold and converted into money, &c. Now, the [illegible] direction as to whether the trustees shall sell or not, that relates only to the time, manner, opportunity, &c. The testatrix then proceeds as follows: "And to prevent [illegible] and strife, any undisposed of surplus of money [illegible] be paid as I shall by any future writing or will [illegible] as it is my intention to do." It is evident by her use of the expression "surplus money," the testatrix considered that she was dealing with the whole in the [illegible] She appears to have contemplated [illegible] that the debts and legacies might by [illegible] exhaust the whole; but if not, then, what [illegible] there might [illegible] it should be paid [illegible] direct. [illegible] can be, that [illegible] realty [illegible] converted into personalty, and therefore there must be an apportionment of the charitable legacies.

ROLLS COURT.

Friday, April [illegible].

Re Burt, ex parte Nash.

On a reference to the Master to tax a bill of costs, leave to exhibit a special interrogatory to solicitors, "whether they or either of them had or have any and what papers, documents, &c. in their or his custody or possession," will not be granted. If they do not deliver up the papers, the application must be the subject of another kind of proceeding.

In this case there had been an order to tax, and five bills had been carried in in pursuance thereof; but the Master could enter upon only one of them, because the other four were jointly with other persons. The petitioner exhibited a special interrogatory in the Master's office, which he asked the Master to put. It was to this effect: "Whether you, or either of you, had or have any and what papers, documents, &c. in your or either of your custody or possession." The Master, however, disallowed it.

Kindersley now asked leave to exhibit it. It was sworn, and not denied, that there were other papers besides those produced in the joint custody of the solicitors, respecting the bills taxed, and the object was to have an interrogatory respecting them. [The Master of the Rolls.—It is a novel application.] The Master has said he has nothing to do with anything but the one bill referred to. [The Master of the Rolls.—The order is for the delivery of all papers, &c.] Yes, but this would only be for all papers in their possession, not in that of either. There is reason to believe that one of them has other papers, and the question is whether there may not be an interrogatory to that effect.

Torr.—This is an extraordinary application. [The Master of the Rolls.—Yes; but the affidavit that there are papers in the possession of them, or one of them, is unanswered.] The order is for taxation of all bills, &c. and production of all papers, &c. [The Master of the Rolls.—Yes, all relating to the bill before the Master.] And to be examined on interrogatories. [The Master of the Rolls.—Yes, on the papers so brought in.] And on payment of what is due to deliver all papers, &c.

The Master of the Rolls.—If the papers be in the possession of one of the parties, they are in their possession. I never heard of such an application. I cannot grant it. It is made too soon. It is obligatory on the parties to deliver up all the papers on being paid; if they do not, it must be the subject of another proceeding.

Barlow v. Gains and Others.

A mortgagee has a perfect right to proceed on all his remedies for the recovery of his mortgage-money; but, after a decree in a suit to redeem, and a reference to the Master to inquire as to in what character one of the mortgagees is in possession, whether the mortgagees can proceed in an action which had been commenced at law on the covenants, or can exercise the powers of sale contained in the mortgage-deed—Quære?

Kindersley, for the plaintiff, moved that the defendants, Sarah and Joseph Morris, should be restrained from exercising the powers of sale contained in a mortgage deed in their possession, or from prosecuting an action at law which they had commenced for the recovery of the mortgage-money. The suit by the plaintiff was to redeem various mortgages, and there was a question as to the parties liable to account as mortgagees in possession; and an inquiry was asked as to in what character one of the mortgagees was in possession. An action had been brought by one of the mortgagees, but it was discontinued till after a decree in the suit was obtained directing a reference to the Master, when notice was given to the plaintiff that it was intended to proceed with it, for the purpose of recovering principal, interest, &c. [The Master of the Rolls.—Is the mortgagee who brought the action a second incumbrancer?] No, it is not an ejectment he has brought, but an action to recover the money on the covenants. [The Master of the Rolls.—May not a mortgagee pursue all his remedies?] Yes; but if the Court has once made a decree, he will not be permitted to do so; the party may be entitled to recover possession, for the suit may result in a foreclosure. [The Master of the Rolls.—Has he not a right to proceed on the covenants? Are there any authorities?] The moment the decree is pronounced for an account, both parties are actors in it, and the mortgagee is estopped from proceeding in his action.

The Master of the Rolls.—The mortgagee has a perfect right to proceed on all his remedies. I shall consider what is to be done, and the matter must be postponed for further inquiries.

Tuesday, April 29.

Re Reeves.

A mortgagee take steps to recover his mortgage-money, and the mortgagor, desirous of stopping the action, agrees to pay principal, interest, and costs on a given day, and on the bill of costs, &c. being presented, items are objected to, but the bill after some days is paid, without protest, and a receipt accepted in full, except as to one item objected to, the consideration of which is reserved, there is no special ground for taxation, and a petition under those circumstances was dismissed with costs.

J. F. and Orlando Reeves are solicitors, in partnership with their father, and having with their father become entitled to certain mortgage securities on the property of the Glastonbury Canal Company, they instituted a foreclosure suit in the court of the Vice-Chancellor of England, and on the 4th December, 1841, a notice of motion was given for a reference to the Master, to take the accounts, &c. which was duly made on the 9th of the same month. This motion was successfully resisted, on the ground that a discovery of certain deeds which was required, had not been made. The Messrs. Reeves then gave notice to the tenants, and afterwards took some steps in bringing an ejectment; but on the 24th December, 1844, the solicitors of the company applied to them to accept payment of principal, interest, and costs, on a given day, and the 8th of January, 1845, was agreed on. Messrs. Holme, Loftus, and Young, the town agents for the solicitors of the company, and Messrs. Gregory, Faulkner, and Co. for the Messrs. Reeves, were appointed to make the arrangement. The bill of costs of Messrs. Reeves, amounting to 108*l*. 11s. was sent to Messrs. G. and Co. on the 6th of January, 1845, and by them to Messrs. H. and Co. the next day. Certain items were objected to, and the bill was taken away, but returned and left on the 10th, with an intimation that the expenses of a particular journey would be deducted. Another charge of 30*l*. was also objected to; this arose out of a claim of the assignees of one Platt, who became a bankrupt in 1840, to a debt due to him by the company. This debt the Messrs. Reeves purchased for 30*l*. and added that sum to their bill. But to stop proceedings on the part of Messrs. Reeves, it was agreed to pay all the costs of the mortgages as claimed. But a new difficulty arose, for it was now denied that any more than the professional cost of the expense of the journey, viz. 6*l*. 6s. was agreed to be deducted; and accordingly the bill was, on the 23rd of January, 1843, paid, without protest, with that deduction, and a receipt for the amount given, but reserving the question of the right to deduct 7*l*. 17s., the remaining part of the expenses of the journey. Under these circumstances, a petition for taxation was presented.

Kindersley (with him Freeling), for the petition.—There are items not chargeable, and the expenses of the journey have not been deducted as proposed.

[The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The additional costs on the settlement of the suit were to be paid for the sake of peace; all were aware of it.] Yes, the costs of the suit, and of the mortgages. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—It is more; it is the costs which they claim.] We must either allow the suit and action to go on, or pay the costs asked. It is not an agreement to pay a certain amount, it is only to pay the costs. There was a difference of opinion, and we say, Let the agents settle it, or take any third person; but they would not. We therefore paid under pressure.

Turner (with him Selwyn), contrà. -[The MASTER of the ROLLS intimated that he could not make the order, but had doubts as to the costs of the petition.] They agreed to pay all costs demanded, except 7*l.* 17*s.* which was to be the subject of consideration afterwards; and that without making any protest, or saying any thing about taxation. We are therefore entitled to costs of this petition.

Kindersley, in reply, as to costs.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—This is a petition to tax a bill of costs, which has been paid, not under circumstances which I am in the habit of calling special circumstances—not delivered and paid at the time of paying off the incumbrance, when, if it were not paid, the result would be great inconvenience and delay in closing the transactions. On the contrary, the bill was delivered on the 7th and paid on the 23rd of January, and therefore there was time enough for examination and a knowledge of the charges. There is nothing special in that, for there is no advantage taken; but not only is that so, but there is a suit in prosecution, which the defendant is desirous of putting an end to. I do not wish to make any observation to encourage persons to demand more than they are entitled to, but it was desirable to put an end to the suit. The bill was delivered and examined, and propositions were made to reduce it, which were not acceded to. It was then agreed to pay all the costs, &c. except part of a particular charge, and the receipt is for all the money charges of Messrs. Reeves, on the settlement of the suit. The town agent did not agree to the items, but to pay a sum on the settlement of the suit, being the best terms he could make. I had doubts about the costs; but the sum having been paid, they ask taxation on grounds which have entirely failed, that is, threats of a suit, and the matter being left to the town agents; but if the town agent is pressed, he may refer to his principal to ascertain whether he may make the arrangement. I think there is nothing to induce me to deny the costs of this petition, which I must therefore dismiss with costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Thursday, May 1.

ABERDEEN v. GIBBS.

Practice—Injunction.

An action commenced in the name of a trustee by his cestui que trust, was restrained by the Court, although the cestui que trust had sufficiently answered the bill.

Whether the injunction, which was obtained against the trustee alone, would prevent the cestui que trust from prosecuting the action, Quære?

The defendant Gibbs was a trustee to whom an annuity was payable by the plaintiff in trust for Mrs. Grimstead, another defendant in this suit. Gibbs having become bankrupt, Mrs. Grimstead, under the authority of the Court of Review, commenced an action in the name of Gibbs against the plaintiff in this suit for the amount of five half-yearly payments of the annuity, which were then due. The plaintiff then filed this bill against Gibbs and Mrs. Grimstead, and obtained the common injunction against Gibbs to restrain him from proceeding in the action.

Renshaw, on behalf of the plaintiff, moved to extend the injunction to stay trial. Gibbs had put in an answer which was altogether insufficient, and to which it was the plaintiff's intention to except. He cited Montague v. Hill (4 Russ. 128); Lord Portarlington v. Graham (5 Sim. 416); Imperial Gas Light Company v. Clarke (1 Young's Exch. Cases, 580), White v. Steinwacks (19 Ves. 83); Joseph v. Doubleday (1 V. & B. 497), and Thorp v. Hughes (3 Myl. & Cr. 742).

Willcock, for the defendant Gibbs, offered no opposition.

Wigram and Trower, for the defendant Mrs. Grimstead, cited Nanny v. Vaughan (8 Sim. 439); Lord Delvin v. Smith (Moseley, 204); and Wigsell v. Wigsell (2 Sim. & Stu. 374).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I decline deciding or intimating any opinion whether the injunction against Mr. Gibbs will prevent Mrs. Grimstead from continuing this action, but I think I must extend it to stay trial. I give Mrs. Grimstead the option to have inserted in the order that it is so extended, with liberty for her to come to the Court and move to dissolve the injunction against Gibbs.

Wigram declined to have the insertion made, and

The common order was accordingly made. Costs reserved.

THOMPSON v. COOPER.

Practice—Creditors' suit—Costs.

Where a creditors' suit has been properly instituted, and the fund applicable to the payment of the costs is insufficient, the creditors who have proved their debts must contribute according to the amount of their debts.

This was a creditors' suit, instituted by the plaintiff on behalf of himself and all other the creditors of Samuel Porter, deceased, against the defendant, who was the administrator of the effects of the deceased. The usual references to the Master to take the accounts having been made, the Master reported that the plaintiff had proved a debt of 138*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*; the defendant and his partner Vickers had proved a debt of 271*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*; and the defendant and Ann Caven and Robert Bell, as executors of James Caven, deceased, had proved a debt of 400*l.* The estate amounting only to 485*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.* the defendant retained the whole on account of the two debts proved by him. Before proving their debts, Ann Caven, R. Bell, and J. Vickers signed an undertaking in the Master's office to contribute to the plaintiff their proportion of the costs of the suit. After the decree on further directions, which provided for the payment of costs, there proved to be no fund applicable to the payment of the plaintiff's costs.

Russell and Shebbeare, on his behalf, moved that Caven, Bell, and Vickers should be ordered to pay to the plaintiff their proportions of the costs. They cited Shortley v. Selby (5 Mad. 147).

Koe and Prior, for the respondents, cited 2 Smith's Chancery Practice; Lechmere v. Brasier (1 Russ. 70), and Blodt v. Jessop (Jac. 243).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I think the petitioner's claim is not defeated or prejudiced by the circumstance that the Court has not hitherto recognized or noticed it, or has not, before the present time, been asked to recognize or notice it. Nor do I think the question of retainer is material to the present purpose. The retainer has merely decided that, in respect to certain debts which the administrator was interested in, he was entitled to retain them in full, which diminished the fund to be distributed among the general creditors. The Court, however, has decided that the general costs are to be paid out of the fund, that fund being the ultimate surplus of the estate in the hands of the administrator after making all just allowances, which is said to include the sums retained. This, therefore, exhausting the amount applicable, the costs cannot be paid out of the estate, and the other creditors are called on to contribute, from the circumstance of their having been paid their debts in full. In point of fact, they have come in and proved in the ordinary manner, and I am told that otherwise the benefit of the retainer would not have been allowed them. It cannot be just that in a creditors' suit, instituted on behalf of all the creditors, one alone should bear the loss, while others participate in the benefit. Where there is a creditors' suit properly instituted, and the fund is insufficient, those who have come in and proved, and on whose behalf the suit was instituted, must contribute to that loss which has been borne on behalf of all. The division also must be made according to the amounts.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

Thursday, May 1.

HENSON v. BLACKWELL.

In this case the plaintiff, being indebted to the defendant in the sum of 300*l.* assigned as a security for the debt the interest in certain personal property, to which he was entitled in right of his wife, but which interest was not capable of being reduced into possession. The defendant, subsequently to the execution of the deed of assignment, effected a policy of insurance upon the wife's life for the sum of 200*l.* but without any arrangement or understanding with the plaintiff for that purpose: in fact, it was alleged that the plaintiff was entirely ignorant of such a policy having been effected, and the policy itself comprised no reference to the deed of assignment. The plaintiff's wife died, and the defendant received the amount insured from the insurance-office, which circumstance coming to the knowledge of the plaintiff, he filed his bill for the purpose of having the money received from the office declared to be a payment pro tanto of the debt, and for the redemption of the mortgage upon payment of the difference.

His HONOUR said that two questions arose out of the facts of the case: first, whether the creditor had any insurable interest in the life of the plaintiff's wife, so as to make the policy valid; and secondly, whether the plaintiff could claim the benefit of the money paid by the insurance-office. These were questions for the opinion of a court of law; but as all interested parties were willing to abide by his judgment, he must say that the plaintiff's claim did not appear to him to be sustainable, for he had no doubt that the defendant had an insurable interest, and that the policy was a guarantee only against any loss sustainable by the wife's death.

Friday, May 23.

EARL v. HOLT.

Demurrer—Parties—Defendant—Pleading.

The drawer of a bill of exchange which had been indorsed over to third parties for value, held, under the circumstances, not to be a necessary party to a suit to have the bill delivered up to be cancelled.—The authority of Pentold v. Nunn (5 Sim. 405) impugned.

The question in this case is, whether a person of the name of Potts is a necessary party for the purpose of this suit.

The facts of the case are these. In the month of August 1843, the plaintiff being indebted to Potts in the sum of 50*l.* accepted a bill of exchange to that amount, drawn by Potts, who indorsed it over for value to the defendant Zachariah Goodyear. The plaintiff states that he has paid over the whole amount of the bill, by two separate payments of 25*l.* each, to Potts, as the agent of Goodyear, and the object of the present bill is to have the instrument which is so alleged to have been satisfied, delivered up to plaintiff. The bill states that the defendant Goodyear indorsed the bill of exchange without consideration to the defendant Holt, after it was overdue and satisfied, and that Holt was affected with notice of the previous mode in which the instrument had been negotiated and paid. Now, that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief he seeks, if the statement in his bill be true, I have not the least doubt. Primâ facie, Potts would be a necessary party, but the bill makes such allegations as render his presence on this record wholly unnecessary. The two defendants who have demurred on account of the absence of Potts, have admitted every equitable ground upon which the plaintiff rests his case; but upon the argument of this demurrer they have contended that, although they have admitted the statements of the plaintiff, yet, inasmuch as such admissions are not [illegible] he must be represented in this suit. Now such a doctrine is quite at variance with what I have always conceived to have been the rules of this Court. I shall only instance the case of Kemp v. Prior, which is reported in 7 Vesey, 237, where Lord Eldon says, "It is not enough, upon the argument of a demurrer, to conjecture that if the cause goes on there may be some ground for a decree; but the Court is bound to say that, upon the facts as stated in the bill, if proved or confessed at the hearing, a decree would be made." Applying this principle to the admission in this answer, I am bound to say that Potts is not a necessary party, by the defendants' own shewing. The defendants have mainly relied on the authority of the case of Pentold v. Nunn (5 Sim. 405), where it was held, upon demurrer, that the drawer of an accommodation bill was a necessary party to a suit by the acceptor against the holder to have the bill delivered up to be cancelled, the Vice-Chancellor observing, "that the demurrer admits the facts against the demurring party only." Now in that case the facts were different from the present, and even if [illegible] be accurately reported, I think there [illegible] rges and statements detailed in this bill, and admitted by this demurrer, [illegible] render this case [illegible] distinguishable from, and not to be con[illegible] by, the authority of Pentold v. Nunn. The [illegible] must be overruled, but upon the whole [illegible] opinion that it must be overruled without costs.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Saturday, May 15.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF GREAT BOLTON.

If a pauper states that she is "receiving relief from, and is actually chargeable to," parish A. that is sufficient evidence of chargeability.

If an appeal against an order be quashed on a point of form, subject to a case, the respondents may obtain a second order upon the same settlement, and they may waive their right to proceed with the case granted.

On appeal against an order for the removal of Ann Higginson, a pauper, from Great Bolton to Bradshaw, the order was quashed, subject to a case which—as far as it related to the points on which the judgment turns—was as follows:—

An order dated Aug. 17, 1843, had been made for the removal of the pauper, Ann Higginson, from the township of Great Bolton to the township of Bradshaw. An appeal against that order was entered and respited at the next borough sessions at Bolton, and in January 1844 the trial took place, when the Court quashed the order, upon the ground that "no copy or counterpart of the said order of removal has been sent to us (the appellants) by post or otherwise;" it being shewn that the signatures of the two justices had been omitted in transcribing the order in the copy sent. The order was, however, quashed, subject to a case for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench. The case states that "the respondents, however, took no steps towards stating such case, nor ever communicated with the appellants as to proceeding with or abandoning the said case, nor did they make any motion in the said court of quarter sessions relative thereto; but the pauper having since the quashing of the former order become again chargeable to and relieved by Great Bolton, the respondents obtained another order of justices for the removal of the pauper from Great Bolton to Bradshaw, which order was made upon fresh examination, and bears date of the 17th February, 1844, and is the order last appealed against. The settlement stated in the fresh examinations, as that upon which the second order of removal was made, was the same settlement stated in the examinations upon which the former order had been founded. A true copy of the order, dated 17th February, 1844, &c. was sent to the appellants."

An appeal was entered to the second order, and tried at the April sessions. The second ground of appeal was as follows:—"That the said order of removal, bearing date 17th of August last, was set aside as aforesaid, and that no settlement has been gained by the said Ann Higginson, nor has she in any way become entitled to any settlement in the said township since the 17th of August last."

The third ground of appeal was also as follows:—"That on such appeal as aforesaid the said order of removal, dated the 17th day of August last, was by the said Court of Quarter Sessions set aside, subject to a case to be stated for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench; and that the said order of the said Court of Quarter Sessions, holden, &c. has not been in any manner reversed or altered, but the same is still in full force and effect; and that it does not appear by the examinations on which the said order of removal of the 17th of February was made, that since the said 17th of August any fresh grounds for the removal of the said Ann Higginson from your said township, &c. have arisen, nor that any settlement since that time has been gained by the said Ann Higginson in our said township since the said 17th day of August last."

The fourth ground of appeal was as follows:—"That on such appeal the said order, &c. was set aside, subject to a case as aforesaid; and that at the time when the order of removal now appealed against was made, the said case had not been submitted to the said Court of Queen's Bench for their opinion, but that the same might have been taken up by your said township before or after the said 17th day of February last, and the judgment of the said Court of Queen's Bench might in due course of law have been obtained thereon; and if on such judgment the decision of the said Court of Quarter Sessions for the said borough of Bolton had been reversed, the said original order of removal, bearing date the 17th day of August last, would have been confirmed, and that the said order of the said 17th of February was illegally and improperly obtained."

The fifth ground of appeal was as follows:—"That the examinations, &c. do not contain the best or any sufficient evidence or proof that the said Ann Higginson was, previous to, or at the time of making, or at the date of the said order of removal now appealed against, actually chargeable to your said township of Great Bolton, no statement being therein made of any relief having been afforded to her, nor of any money or other thing having been given to her by your said township, nor any facts stated to prove her chargeability, the same being stated only by way of inference, and not by allegation of facts."

The statement of chargeability was contained in Ann Higginson's own examination: "I am unable to maintain myself, and am now residing in, and receiving relief from, and am actually chargeable to, the said township of Great Bolton."

The case was argued on April 30th, last Easter Term.

Wortley, Q.C. (with whom was Pickering) against the order of sessions.—The second order might have been properly made. The objection to the first order was merely to the effect that a magistrate's name was omitted in the signature of the copy of the first order, which is a mere matter of form, and the discharge of the appeal is decisive only as to the point then at issue. (Rex v. Osgathorpe, Burr. S.C. 261; 2 Str. 1256.) The sending of an order is merely the condition of removeability, and not the settlement itself; it may or may not be a proof of settlement: it is conclusive only as to the point which it decides, i.e. that, at the time when the order was made, the appellant parish was not bound to receive the pauper. (Rex v. Wick St. Lawrence, 5 B. & Ad. 526.) The removal may have been premature, as in this case. (Rex v. Wheelock, 5 B. & Cr. 511; Reg. v. Wye, 7 Ad. & Ell. 761.) Where the examination is deficient in a material point, the order is quashed conclusively (Reg. v. Charlbury Walcott, 3 Q.B. [illegible]); but here a new state of thing has arisen, and fresh chargeability has supervened, which entitle the respondents to remove again. (Reg. v. Penungabuloe, [illegible] 400; Reg. v. St. Pancras, 3 Q.B. 347.)

Pashley, in support of the order of sessions.—Here the respondents omitted to send a material part of the order, and it was incumbent on them to send the whole. (Reg. v. Outwell, 9 Ad. & Ell. 836.) The cases cited have nothing to do with the point here; the settlement remains the same; it is nowise changed. The sessions are the judges of what are merits, and of what was a final decision. (Ex parte Ackworth, 3 Q.B. 397, note a.) Here a case was granted; the whole record was before, or might have been brought before this Court. The first decision was conclusive. (Rex v. Justices of West Riding, 3 T. R. 776; Reg. v. Middlesex, 9 Dowl. 163; Reg. v. St. Pancras is distinguishable; Reg. v. Stamford, 1 Bit. & Sym. M. C. 163.) [Patteson, J.—This is much like this Court setting aside service of summons. Do you mean to say you could not issue a second summons?] Here the respondents had liberty to state a case, and chose to state none. The Court is confined to the point stated in the case. (Reg. v. Skeffington, 3 B. & Ald. 385; Reg. v. West Riding, 2 Q. B. 705.) The party here had the benefit of the judgment of a court of record, and should abide by it. Matter of record can only be got rid of by matter of record. Here there was lis pendens to be got rid of before a new litigation can begin. Pashley then cited Knight's case (2 Ld. Raym; 1 Nol. P.L. 58); Rex v. Warwick (2 Str. 991); R. v. Sparrow (2 T. R. 196); R v. West Riding Justices (1 A. & E. 606); R. v. Suffolk Justices (6 A. & E. 109); R. v. Northamptonshire JJ. (6 A. & E. 11); Co. Litt. 131 a; R. v. Oundle (11 L. J. M. 79); R. v. Brixham (8 A. & E. 375); Ex parte Thornton (11 Law Jour. 40; Co. Litt. 131 a; Sheppard's Touchstone; Fairbrass v. Pettit (12 M. & W. 453), &c. &c. Chargeability is clearly not sufficiently stated here. (Reg. v. High Bickington, 3 Q.B. 790, 1 Bit. & Sym. 1; Reg. v. Lydford, 1 Bit. & Sym. 50.) Relief is far too ambiguous a term; it may be any sort of relief—it may be in the atmosphere. It must be stated in some concrete form, not as a mere abstraction. Supposing the pauper had had relief from a Court of Chancery, would that be relief?

S. Wortley, Q.C. in reply.—All the cases were where the decision was that the same thing could not be twice decided; but there is no analogy whatever in this case. That of R. v. St. Pancras was a second removal, and there was no appeal, but that is only stronger in our favour, for the Court still held that they might refrain from availing themselves of that order, and obtain another, although the first order was still in force. Can the first order in this case derive greater force because it has been appealed against? But there has been a new state of facts. All that had been decided before, was that the pauper was not proved to be chargeable at that time.

Pickering (same side) cited Rex v. Barham (8 B. & Cr. 99), and Rex v. Willoughby (4 Ad. & Ell. 143). Suppose, after an order of removal, in point of fact a pauper had not been removed, would the one order prevent another order? On the contrary, the former order would make it only stronger. Whether the first order is quashed or confirmed, there is no sort of reason why there should not be another after abandoning the first. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Denman, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court. In this case it appeared that Ann Higginson, a pauper, was duly removed by the order of two justices on the 17th of August, 1843, from the township of Great Bolton, in Lancashire, to the township of Bradshaw, in the county of Lancaster. Bradshaw appealed to the Bolton borough sessions, and the said order of removal was quashed, on the ground that the removing township had sent to Bradshaw no notice of the chargeability; the copy of the order of removal omitting the signatures of the two justices. The Court of Quarter Sessions granted a case for the opinion of this Court upon the validity of this objection. No steps were taken in consequence by the respondents, but on the 17th of February, 1844, the pauper continuing to be chargeable, they procured a fresh order, with the same explanation of the pauper settlement, and thus abandoned their former of August 1843. At the quarter sessions for the borough of Bolton, on the 4th of July last, the last-mentioned order was quashed, subject to a case which raises three questions for our opinion: first, whether the statement of the pauper being chargeable was sufficient; secondly, whether it was competent for the respondents to obtain a fresh order of removal after having abandoned the order of the 17th August, as above stated; and thirdly, whether if the order of removal quashed was conclusive under the circumstances against the respondent township, so as to prevent a fresh order being obtained. The last and most material question we shall consider first. The rule that an order of removal quashed is conclusive between the same parties is always open to the question whether a fresh settlement had been made. This is founded upon a very clear and intelligible principle; the doctrine, however, in many cases that have been decided has been carried farther, at the head of which stands Reg. v. Wick St. Lawrence, in which the second point decided was, that after a case had been adjudicated, the first order is not conclusive, or, in other words, that the second order may be made, though no subsequent settlement has intervened. The case of Rex v. Wheelock, without mentioning any more, is a strong authority on the same point in the present case; and our opinion is formed on the particular fact that the first order was quashed on a matter as clearly a matter of form as can well be imagined. The omission in the order of the signatures of the two justices was not calculated, by any possibility, to mislead, or create the slightest doubt or uncertainty as to the case. Whether the objection so taken ought or ought not to have prevailed, it is unnecessary to offer any opinion; but it is obvious, if the appellants had any merits, and were disposed to try them, it would not have been taken. We think, however, there were other grounds to justify a second order of removal after the former one was quashed; how could the justices make an order of removal after the former order was quashed without a new settlement accruing? It is hardly possible to conceive a stronger case than the present to warrant such a proceeding; and resting on that ground, we are of opinion in this case the objection ought not to prevail. On the second point we think there was nothing final and conclusive in the respondent's having applied for and obtained from the Court of Quarter Sessions liberty to state a case, so as to preclude them from having recourse to any other form of proceeding. No attempt has been made to pursue both remedies at once; on the contrary, it is stated that no steps had been taken to bring up the case to this court; and they must be considered as having abandoned it altogether. The appellants, it must be observed, have been in no degree affected by the application to the sessions, and their having granted a case. Upon the last point, that of chargeability, the examination of the pauper is as follows:—"I am unable to maintain myself. I am now residing in, and receiving relief from, and am actually chargeable to, the said township of Great Bolton." We think this statement goes further than a mere allegation that the pauper was actually chargeable to the parish. It has been held that the mere receiving relief, in whatever shape, would make the pauper so receiving it actually chargeable. We think, therefore, the order of sessions must be quashed. Order quashed.

Friday, May 2.

The Corporation of Colchester v. Brooke.

The public have a right to pass and repass along a navigable river at all times of the tide, although in the exercise of this right vessels necessarily ground in the course of their passage. If there is a nuisance obstructing the passage, a person in exercise of the right of way is not justified in doing an injury to that which causes the obstruction, if he can exercise his right without such injury.

This case was argued after Michaelmas Term, 1843 (see 2 Law T. 188).

JUDGMENT.

Lord Denman, C.J. now (May 15) delivered the judgment of the Court.—In this case the first count stated the plaintiffs' possession of the fishery in a part of the river Colne, and a great quantity of oysters and oyster-brood lying in the bed of the river there; and it then charged that the defendant, by negligent and unskilful navigation of the ship under his care, at the times and in the states of the tide, unseasonable as he well knew, placed her there in the said part of the river, so that she struck against and settled and sunk upon and into the bed of the said river, made holes in it, and damaged the fishery, and destroyed large quantities of oysters and oyster-brood. The second count stated the plaintiff to be possessed of certain oyster-beds and oyster-grounds in a certain specified part of the said river, and of certain oysters being therein, the oyster-beds and grounds being covered with the water of the river; and that the defendant was possessed of a vessel in the said river, under the direction of his servant; that at certain states of the tide the water covering the oyster-beds was insufficient to float the vessel, as the defendant and his servant well knew; and then it charged that, by unskilful and negligent conduct, the vessel was conducted over the part of the said river, and was wrongfully kept and detained there until the tide was in that state and depth of water insomuch that she grounded on the oyster-beds; and then, for divers days next following, the defendant not only negligently and carelessly neglected and refused to remove her, as with reasonable care and skill he might; but he also so negligently managed her that she moved from one part to another of the oyster-bed, and so much injured and greatly damaged it, that many oysters were destroyed. To this the defendant has pleaded—1st, Not guilty; and, besides some pleas found for the plaintiff, the four following, namely, the 5th, 6th, the 9th, and 10th on the record. The 5th is pleaded to the first count, and the 9th as to the conducting and placing her along and upon the said part of the river, at such unseasonable and improper times in the month, to the conducting, detaining, and mooring the vessel, as in the said second count stated; and then they both allege the said part is open to the sea for a free passage thereunto and therefrom for ships and vessels between the flux and reflux of the tide, as in a public and common navigable river and the Queen's highway, for all the Queen's subjects, with their ships and vessels, to navigate, pass, and repass, upon and over every year, and at all times of the year, and states of the tide, at their free will and pleasure. The replication traverses this allegation, concluding to the country, and also new assigns, and on which last part of the pleadings no question arises. The sixth plea is pleaded to so much of the first count as relates to the oyster and oyster-brood, the tenth to the whole of the second count; and, after alleging the said part of the oyster-brood to be in all respects of the character stated in the fifth and sixth pleas, it alleges that the oysters, &c. were lying in an unlawful and improper manner, and in an unlawful and improper place and situation, and in unlawful and unreasonably large masses, diminishing the depth of the water in the said places and situations, thereby ng the navigation of the said part, to iance of the liege subjects. All these aversed by the replication, which con-

.ntry. The general issue was found it as to the first count, and for the
l. damages as to the second, and the issues on the fifth, sixth, ninth, and tenth pleas, for the defendant; and the plaintiff has applied to have a new trial, on the ground of misdirection in two or three particulars. Application was also made for judgment upon the whole, non obstante veredicto, which was properly abandoned on the argument; but it was contended that the plaintiff was entitled to enter a verdict on the pleas specified. The alleged misdirection was, first, that in summing up the evidence on the question of negligence, the learned judge did not give sufficient weight to what was adduced on the part of the plaintiff; but we see no ground for this, and so expressed ourselves on the argument. It was well contended that he had misled the jury as to the nature of the right which the public enjoy in the way of a sea, on a common highway of the description stated in the 5th and 9th pleas, and, under the circumstances, disclosed by the evidence. The pleas state it is the highway of the subjects, to navigate, pass, and repass at all times and states of the tide; the replication denies that. The evidence shews this to be a tidal river, and in the part in question so shallow at certain states of the tide, that vessels cannot float there, but necessarily ground. The plaintiffs contend, that the right to navigate, pass, and repass was merely a right to float along; and the facts shewed that in this part of the river such right could not exist at all times of the tide. The learned judge stated that a navigable river was so at all times; that the subject might go upwards and downwards, although he might not be able to reach the port, in the deepest water, in one tide, and without grounding; and that even if such grounding subjected him to compensate for injury done, it did not affect the nature of the right in respect of the time of enjoyment. We are of opinion that the learned judge was justified in so stating the law. No authority directly in point was cited at the bar, nor have we been able to find any, after considerable research. But upon principle, the matter seems clear. It cannot be disputed, the channel of a public navigable river is properly described as a common highway, although the analogy between it and a highway on land is not complete in all particulars; and there is o one circumstance which more directly fixes on a river the character of being public and navigable than the flow and reflow of the tide. Now if in such river it were to be held that the character did not extend higher up than the water or was suspended during such periods of the tide as left the channel so shallow, the rights of the public, invaluable in numerous rivers, would be abridged, or rendered in many particulars vexatiously uncertain, and in many cases be made nearly, if not entirely, useless. The present case is an illustration of this. On the evidence it appeared vessels of burden which usually had gone to Colchester, could not, except at spring tides, go up to the town in one tide. To say, then, that the river ceased to be navigable and ceased to be a highway at the ebb, and other state of the tide when such vessels could not float, is to have the effect to say that, except for a short portion of every month, they should not use the river at all for the purpose of trading with the town of Colchester. It is more reasonable to hold that the term "navigable" is a relative and comprehensive term, containing within it all such rights upon the water-way as, with relation to the circumstances of each river, are necessary for the full and convenient passage of vessels and boats along the channel; nor is this repugnant to any legal principle applicable to the case; but it does not interfere with the rights of individuals on the bank of the river. (See the case of Wall v. Harper, 3 T.R.) But the case stands on this broad ground, that the right to the soil in arms of the sea and public navigable rivers is with the Crown, primâ facie, and independent of any ownership in the adjoining land, must be considered in all cases as subject to the public rights of passage, however acquired; and every grantee of the Crown must accordingly take subject to that right. Nor is this inconsistent with the permanent loss of such right, as by the accumulation of filth or any other natural cause, the channel became choked up. The case of Reg. v. Montague (4 B. & C. 598) is in point. The law makes no provision for clearing such highway; and in such case the river ceases to be navigable, at least until such causes are by some means counteracted. In this large sense, and with this large exception, the river is navigable, and is a highway at all times and at all states of the tide. In any other sense, the public right becomes all but valueless. There is, therefore, no ground at all for questioning the accuracy of the learned judge. We now proceed to the consideration of the issues raised on the sixth and tenth pleas. The objection here is, that the learned judge made no distinction between oyster-beds and oysters; meaning by these last, oysters deposited artificially, and not attached to the soil; whereas it was said these last could not have obstructed the navigation, and could not, therefore, have been a nuisance; and for the injury to them the plaintiff was, at all events, entitled to damages, and the plea is not good. If this were undoubtedly true in fact, we should scarcely have thought the plaintiff entitled to a new trial for so unimportant an inaccuracy in a very complicated case, especially in regard to issues and an action manifestly framed and brought to try an important right. But we know not why it is assumed that unreasonably large masses of oysters deposited in a bed of a navigable river may not be a nuisance, and obstruct the navigation; on the contrary, it appears probable they would. We cannot say that the jury have not so considered them; and if they have, and found in the affirmative, we see no reason for disturbing their finding. All the grounds, therefore, on which the new trial was moved fail; but are the plaintiffs entitled to have a verdict entered for them on these four pleas, as not disclosing any answer to the grievances to which they are pleaded? The declaration charges the want of proper skill and care, and no more. In each count there is an allegation of knowledge, but not so distinctly annexed to the existence of the oyster-beds in the part in question, as liable to be injured, or to make the defendant's conduct wilful; nor does the declaration in direct terms charge a wilful injury. The first count complains of unskilful and careless navigation in the conducting and placing the vessel in and upon the said part of the river. The defendant in his fifth plea alleges the said part was a public highway at all times and seasons, and substantially, that he navigated and conducted, and placed her there, in the exercise of a right of a liege subject to use the highway, averring also the navigation, &c. complained of in the declaration. This is in truth a denial argumentatively of doing an act at unseasonable times of the tide, which may have been objectionable on demurrer, but is good after verdict. The sixth plea merely alleges the oysters and oyster-beds were so placed, and in such masses, as unlawfully to diminish the depth of water, and greatly to obstruct the navigation, to the common nuisance of the Queen's subjects; but it does not go on to allege that the vessel could not, with due care and skill, have passed up the river, or grounded without doing the injury complained of. Looking at the count and this plea by themselves, it may well be that there was abundant room of water for the vessels to have passed up without going near the alleged nuisance, and if that were so, however wrongful the act of the plaintiff was, as the defendant sustained no especial inconvenience thereby, he certainly could not have been justified in wilfully infringing upon or destroying the oysters, even for the purpose of abating a nuisance. It is important, for the sake of the public peace and to prevent oppression of wrongdoers at large, not to confound common and private nuisances in this respect. In the case of the latter, the individual may abate (3 Black. 5), "so as he commits no riot in the doing of it;" and a public nuisance becomes a private one to him who is especially, and in some particular way inconvenienced thereby, as in the case of a gate across a highway, which prevents the traveller from passing that way; he may therefore throw it down; but the ordinary remedy for a public nuisance is itself public—that is, by indictment; and each individual who is injured can, as one of the public, proceed to abate, or he can bring an action. If, then, the defendant could not have done this purposely and knowingly, the same principle shews that he was bound to use due care and skill in the navigation of his vessel, so as not to do it unwittingly by want of it. As a general rule of law, every one in the conduct of that which may be harmful to others shall so misconduct himself as not to use due care and skill, the wrong doer is not without the pale of the law. For this purpose, Davis v. Mann (10 M. & W. 546) is an illustration, if not an authority, for the proposition, although the plea there was held to admit that the plaintiff's donkey was lawfully in the road, because the judge's direction to the jury did not rely on that, but assumed it was neglect in him to have left it there. It was sustained by the Court of Exchequer. Parke, B. is there reported to have said, "Although the ass may have been wrongfully there, still the defendant was bound to go along the road at such a pace as should be likely to prevent mischief. Were this not so, a man might justify driving over goods left on a public highway, or even over men lying asleep, or purposely running against a carriage going on the wrong side of the road." We think on this ground the finding on that issue for the defendant was immaterial. The remarks we here make on the fifth and sixth pleas dispose of the question raised on the ninth and tenth pleas. The ninth shews all the acts complained of in the second count, which it undertook to justify, were done in the lawful exercise of a right of passing, grounding, and moving, as comprehended within the general rights of the public in a public navigable river; and it is therefore an answer. The tenth, for the reason just stated, falls short of that, and is therefore bad. On the whole record, therefore, the defendant has the plea of not guilty to the first count found for him, and the issue on the fifth and ninth. Under these circumstances, the plaintiffs ought not to have judgment on the bad pleas, non obstante veredicto; nor can the v upon those which, although upon were correct in point of fact. Th must be discharged. The ninth ple in terms to the whole, and if, there that count is covered by the plea, and tains the substantive cause of action itself, the plaintiff will be entitled to judgment non obstante veredicto, and on the tenth to so much, but we cannot find any such part.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF DERBYSHIRE.

Notice of an appeal against an order under the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, must be given within six days of the making of the order, although the order has not been served.

This was a rule calling on the justices of Derbyshire to shew cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue commanding them to enter continuances upon, and hear the appeal of, the surveyor of the highways of the parish of Hartshorne, against an order of two justices, dated the 23rd of April, 1844, whereby he was ordered to pay the sum of 100*l.*, a portion of the rate levied or to be levied under the Highway Act, to the treasurer of the trustees of a certain turnpike Act, to be laid out in the actual repair of such part of the turnpike road regulated by the Act as lies in the parish of Hartshorne. The order directed that the first payment should be made upon June 1. It was served upon the appellant on the 6th of July, and notice of appeal was given on the 11th of July. The 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, s. 3, gives to any person who shall feel himself aggrieved by any order, &c. an appeal to the next quarter sessions for the county wherein the cause of such complaint shall arise, "first giving to such justices ten days' notice in writing of the grounds of such appeal, within six days after such order, judgment, or determination shall be so made or given as aforesaid." All the material averments, and the order itself, when signed, were left in blank; but the only question was, whether the notice in appeal was in time, more than six days having clapsed from the making of the order, but not from the service. On the affidavits it appeared that the appellant had knowledge that the order was made, having been present at the hearing. Cause was shewn (May 1) by Whitehurst, Q. C. and Willmore.—In Rex v. Justices of Lancashire (8 B. & C. 593), which will be relied on by the other side, the words were, "after cause of complaint;" here, "after such order." Prosser v. Hyde (1 T. R. 411), R. v. Justices of Pembrokeshire (2 East, 213), R. v. Justices of Staffordshire (3 East, 151), were also cited.

JUDGMENT.

Thursday, May 15.—Lord DENMAN, C. J.—In the case of the Justices of Derbyshire a rule has been obtained for a mandamus to enter continuances and hear appeal against an order for the payment of money by the surveyor of the parish to the trustees of a turnpike road. The only question on such application is, whether the quarter sessions has done right in refusing to hear the appeal. Their refusal was grounded on the alleged insufficiency of the notice of appeal, which was served on the 11th of July. The order appealed from was recited to be made at a petty sessions holden on the 23rd April, and was dated on that day. In the notice of appeal it is described as an order dated the 23rd of April. The affidavits on which the rule was obtained stated that the order was in fact served on the 5th of July, the notice of appeal on the 11th; and further stated that the appeal was duly entered; but an objection was raised by the counsel for the respondent that the notice of appeal was not given in due time, and that the same ought to have been given within six days after making the order, instead of six days after the service thereof. The Court decided the notice was insufficient, and dismissed the appeal. This statement raises the point whether the order can be said to have been made on the 23rd April, when it was signed, or whether it was made on the day it was served. In the former case, the notice was too late, and the Court was right; in the latter case, it came in due time, and the appeal ought still to be heard. The order was made under the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, which gives power to the justices of special sessions to hear an information laid before them by the treasurer of the turnpike road, and after notice of such information to the parish surveyor, to examine the state of the turnpike funds and other matters, and order what portion, if any, of such highway-rate should be paid by the parish surveyor to such treasurer. The 3rd section gives the power of appealing, giving to the justices six days' notice after such order, judgment, or determination shall be so made or given as aforesaid. The learned counsel who opposed the rule relied on two cases as decisive authority in their favour. Rex v. Pembrokeshire (2 East), however, went upon no ground inconsistent with an opposite view. The order there was for stopping that was made in April, and appealed against at the Michaelmas Sessions. The three learned judges who held the appeal too late all observed that it was too late, at all events, for affidavits shewed it had been proved at the sessions that the appellant had notice of what was going on in the month of April. In Michaelmas Term following, the Court held, in Rex v. The Justices of Staffordshire, the time for giving notice of appeal against an order for stopping a highway must be reckoned from the order made, or proceeding had, and not from that of the notice to the party aggrieved. There the words of the statute were held imperative; Le Blanc, J. observed: "In the case of a highway, all the king's subjects may be said to be interested, and that there would be no end to appeals if the right was kept alive until every one who might think himself aggrieved had received personal notice." On the other hand, the case of Rex v. The Justices of Lancashire was cited, in which the Act gives an appeal against an order exactly similar to the present, only that the words are "cause of complaint," and the time for appeal dates from the cause of complaint, as this Act does from the period of time of the order made or given; and there the Court held that the cause of complaint arose at the time of making the order. The reasons assigned by Bayley, J. are perfectly applicable to the present case. They were agreed to by Holroyd, J. and Littledale, J. and we think them sound in principle. Those two cases before mentioned were referred to in the argument, but were not noticed in the judgment, probably because they are entirely dissimilar; but although we were much inclined to think the present case was ruled by that decision, there is an obvious distinction between the language of the two statutes. The cause of complaint may well be taken to mean something directly affecting the party appealing, or at any rate brought to his knowledge. The period fixed in the present Act is the making or giving of the order, judgment, or determination, which is too distinct and express to admit of being varied by any gloss of construction. We may add, the Act adopts some means for giving notoriety to the proceedings at the petty sessions, and even notice to the parties truly interested in the making of such an order. We are of opinion the Court of Quarter Sessions properly decided the order, so to be made at the petty sessions on the facts disclosed on affidavits, as having appeared before them, and that the period of the order made is that to which the Act of Parliament refers, and the time within which the notice is to be given; we think, therefore, the Sessions were right, and the rule must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

CANNELL v. GAUDY.

New Trial.

Kelly, Q. C. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict found for the plaintiff in this case should not be set aside, and a new trial had. It was one of many actions by which it had been sought to render the defendant a partner in a joint-stock bank. It was tried at Liverpool, before Wightman, J. and the main facts appeared briefly to be these: There had been originally a private bank in the Isle of Man, carried on by two partners of the name of Wood and Halls. In 1836 this private bank had been converted into a joint-stock bank. An instrument, under seal, had been drawn up, by which the various persons who entered their names agreed to carry on the bank under the name of the Isle of Man Joint Stock Bank. There were to be 10,000 shares of 5*l.* each. The shareholders were to be enabled to sell their shares, and the buyers were to succeed them as partners in the firm. The defendant became a subscriber for 500 or 600 shares, but never interfered in the management of the concern, which was carried on by an acting manager and a body of five directors, except that for a time he was one of two trustees appointed to hold property for the use of the general body of subscribers, which trustees, however, were not necessarily themselves subscribers. The business was carried on until 1843, when the bank stopped payment. Three years before that time, in February 1840, the defendant had parted with all his shares to Forbes, the manager, and from that time, or from a time immediately subsequent, all his interest in the concern was gone. Under these circumstances the question was, whether the defendant was liable as a partner now or at any time after all his interest in the bank had ceased. The plaintiff had opened an account with the bank in 1839, and up to February 1840, he had an undoubted right to look to the defendant as a partner; but, it was submitted, he had no right to do so after that date. Were joint-stock banks to be regarded in the light of ordinary partnerships? and did the rule of law apply to every holder of a share in such a concern that he must give public notice of the termination of the partnership? As far as any authority could be found, the courts of law had recognized a distinction between the two cases. But without reference to authority, common sense required this distinction to be drawn. In an ordinary partnership, no one could leave without the consent of the other partners, and in each change the dissolution and reconstruction of the firm were necessary. This circumstance gave the customers a right to a notice. In ordinary partnerships, again, the individual members were trusted, but in joint-stock banks the individual subscribers were not known; so the knowledge of one partner was held to be the knowledge of the whole; but could such a rule apply to the thousand members of a joint-stock bank? He then referred to Bramah v. Roberts (3 Bing. N. C. 971); Fox v. Clifton (9 Bing. 119), and the unreported case of Chappel v. White. Secondly, it was submitted, if the distinction above taken were not concurred in, that at any rate defendant was only a dormant partner. He also moved on the ground that evidence as to the defendant's liabilities had been improperly received. (Ponfield v. Smith, 12 Mee. & W. 405.)

Rule nisi.

BERNAY v. READ.

A rule of court making an agreement of reference a rule of court, is not evidence of the agreement to refer.

This was an action of trespass, and one of the pleas was, in substance, that the matter in dispute had been settled by a previous arbitration and award between the parties. The replication traversed the reference to arbitration and award. At the trial, the only evidence of the reference was the rule of court making the submission a rule of court. By this it appeared that there were two attesting witnesses, and it was objected at the trial that they ought to have been called. The evidence, however, was admitted, and a verdict found for the defendant. Watson, Q. C. had obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, against which Byles, Serjt. and Gunning now shewed cause.—The submission was made a rule of court by consent, and therefore the production of the rule is evidence of the submission; and since it has become matter of record, it is the best and only evidence of it. It is either the order itself or an office copy; in either case it suffices. In Still v. Halford (4 Camp. 17) an office copy of the rule of court, making a judge's order of reference a rule of court, was held by Lord Ellenborough sufficient evidence. Brazier v. Jones (1 B. & C. 126), which was cited when this rule was obtained, is no authority against the present case; because there it was an action between strangers to the submission. When the submission is made a rule of court, an affidavit of the due execution is necessary.

Watson, Q. C. contrà.—There was no evidence of the submission. The replication having traversed the reference and award, the defendant was bound to prove the submission. In Compton v. Chandless (4 Esp. 18) a rule of court setting aside a warrant of attorney was held to be no evidence of the warrant. [WIGHTMAN, J.—There the rule did not set out the warrant, and it was necessary to prove its existence. PATTESON, J.—Here the agreement is incorporated in the order.] The allegations in a rule of court do not prove the facts alleged. (Woodroffe v. Williams, 6 Taunt. 18.) [PATTESON, J.—A rule nisi is no evidence of facts contained in it; but it is said that here the rule of court absorbs the agreement.] Brazier v. Jones shews that it was necessary to prove the execution. You cannot dispense with an attesting witness. (Call v. Dunning, 4 East, 53; Abbott v. Plumtre, 1 Dougl. 216; Fox v. Waters, 12 A. & E. 43.) [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Have you any authority where the document has been changed into a record?] No; but here this is not so. In Still v. Halford (4 Camp. 17), all the proceedings were in court: it was a judge's order of reference; here only an ex parte affidavit. The policy of the law invariably requires proof by the attesting witness.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

May 15.—Lord DENMAN, C. J. delivered the judgment of the Court. The question in this case was whether it was necessary for the defendant to prove an agreement of reference. The only evidence of it was a rule of court in which it was recited and incorporated; but the recital shews it to have been attested by two subscribing witnesses, neither of whom was called on at the trial. The evidence was received subject to a motion for entering the verdict for the plaintiff on the issue or for a new trial, and on the argument no authority in favour of such evidence was brought before us but that of Still v. Halford (4 Camp.), where Lord Ellenborough gave credit to a rule of court, reciting the judge's order whereon it was founded. Now a judge's order is itself a judicial act, and when made a rule of court, its character is not altered; and in a case of arbitration, a submission becomes a submission by rule of court, just as if it had been so without a judge's order, and a rule of court is proper evidence of such submission; but a submission by written agreement is clearly requisite to be proved, like any other contract whose existence is to be made out. It is true that by statute it may be made a rule of court, which is only to enforce the performance in a summary manner. The character of the document is not altered by its being made a rule of court, nor does the rule give to it a binding effect on the two parties. Then as to making it a rule of court, that is entirely an ex parte proceeding; and a rule obtained by one party behind the back of another can never be a good contract as against the other. We are of opinion the evidence was wrongly admitted, and the rule must be absolute for a new trial.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF BRIGHTHELMSTONE.

The removal of the pauper's father upon an order unappealed against, is evidence of the settlement of the son.

This was an appeal against an order for the removal of a pauper, in which the sessions quashed the order of removal, subject to a case. The examinations set forth an apprenticeship of the father of the pauper in the year 1793, and residence under it; the emancipation of the son in the year 1822; and the removal of the father, in the year 1843, to the parish to which he would have been entitled by reason of the apprenticeship, under an order, not appealed against; and they excluded the acquisition of a settlement by the pauper himself. The question for the opinion of the Court was, whether there was evidence of a derivative settlement ex parte paternâ.

Creasy, in support of the order of sessions, contended, first, that there was not sufficient evidence of a derivative settlement ex parte paternâ, and cited R. v. Catterall (6 M. & S. 83); R. v. Yeoveley (9 A. & E. 806); secondly, that as the sessions had decided on a question of the sufficiency of the evidence, this Court would not review their decision, unless it clearly saw that the decision was wrong. (R. v. Edwinstowe, 8 B. & C. 671; R. v. Yarwell, 9 B. & C. 894; R. v. Charlbury, 3 Q. B. 378.)

Pashley and Johnson, contrà, were not called upon.

By the COURT.—There is not any doubt about this case; the evidence is sufficient to shew primâ facie the settlement of the son. The order for removal of the father is acquiesced in, and the settlement is thrown back by reference to the time of the apprenticeship. In the interval, the emancipation of the son takes place; and he excludes the acquisition of a settlement by himself. The order of sessions must be quashed.

Rule absolute.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF STOCKTON-UPON-TEES.

An order of removal commencing "Upon the complaint, &c. made to us, two justices for the borough," is bad, for not shewing that the complaint was heard within the jurisdiction of the removing magistrates. "Is residing and has become chargeable" is sufficient statement of present chargeability in a notice of chargeability. Semble, an illegitimate child, within the age of nurture, need not be named in an order of removal for the mother.

This was a case for the opinion of the Court, brought up from the Quarter Sessions for Kingston-upon Hull, and submitting three questions to the Court. At the sessions it appeared that the order of removal varied from the usual form in the statement of the complaint, which was as follows: "Upon the complaint of the overseers, &c. to us, two of the justices for the borough of Kingston-upon-Hull," &c. &c.; the rest of the order being in the usual form. The order was to remove Elizabeth Goldie and her illegitimate child (naming her), aged five months; but the notice of chargeability was, as "that Elizabeth Goldie, together with ———, now residing at, &c. &c. has become chargeable," &c. Three objections were made at the sessions. 1. That that the order of removal was bad, for not shewing that the complaint of chargeability was made to justices acting within their jurisdiction. 2. That the notice of chargeability was bad, it not shewing present chargeability, and not naming the child. 3. That therefore the order must be quashed altogether, as the effect of confirming it as to the mother would be, or at least might be, to separate her from her child. The sessions quashed the order as to the child, but confirmed it as to the mother, subject to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench.

Pashley, in support of the order.—The notice is good as to the mother. "Has become" is perfect present, and can mean nothing else but existing chargeability. It is bad as to the child, if it be necessary to name the child at all. A bastard under seven years has its mother's settlement, and cannot be removed from her. There was no necessity, therefore, to mention the child; and whether the order is quashed or not as to her, the effect will be the same, for she will be removed with her mother. (Skeffreth v. Walford, 2 Sess. Cas. 89; Reg. v. Birmingham, 13 L. J. 1 M. C.) There is therefore no necessary separation, or any separation at all, in consequence of this order. The order of removal also shews the jurisdiction. It is admitted that all except the commencement is in the usual form. It was given then within their jurisdiction, and the statement upon the complaint must mean at the same time. "Upon reading the affidavits" is a similar expression. (See Johnson's Dictionary.)

Archbold (with whom was the Solicitor-General), contrà.—The 79th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act forbids removal of any poor person without a proper notice of chargeability, and here there was none as to the child. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—That is no removal under any order of removal; but by the common law the child must continue with its mother.] There might be a separation here, as there was no power of removing the child. It can only be by virtue of an order. (R. v. Cuckfield, Burr. S. C. 290, and R. v. Birmingham, 13 L. J. M. 1, were cited.) [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The overseers would incur serious risk in refusing to receive the child, whether named in the order or not.] The order is clearly bad for not shewing the jurisdiction of the justices who heard the complaint. No intendment will be made in favour of the jurisdiction. It must not be shewn by doubtful words. (Reg. v. Toke, 8 A. & E. 233.) Here "in" is left out. The justices who heard the complaint, even granting that it was on the same day, might as well have been in Devonshire, or certainly out of the borough of Kingston-upon-Hull. "Upon" defines no time or place. It means only after. It cannot be presumed that the justices would only act within their jurisdiction. (Reg. v. Spakeman, 2 Q. B. 301.) The margin will not aid the statement of the complaint. The notice is also bad for not shewing present chargeability. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—What else can "has become" mean?] A. B. has come to London, means that he is still there.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The order of removal should shew that the complaint was made to the removing justices within their jurisdiction. There is usually no date or place by which this can be shewn, except the word "in" have that effect, and I believe that is invariably used in these orders. I see no reason to depart from the usual practice, especially when that practice has been adopted to shew the jurisdiction. The order, therefore, is defective in that respect.

PATTESON, J.—I can see no ground for inferring that this complaint was made to the justices within their jurisdiction. "This day" is not even inserted. They might well have heard the complaint out of the jurisdiction, and then gone within it to make the order.

WILLIAMS, J.—"In" is correctly used. "For" is descriptive of the authority; and "in" must be surplusage, unless it means the locality.

COLERIDGE, J.—The principle is admitted; but the only question is, whether "upon" imports that the complaint was made upon the same day, and therefore within the same place, as the order. There is nothing in "upon" to point out the time. It means merely sequence. It is adopted from the 13 & 14 Chas. 2, c. 12. Order of sessions quashed.

Pashley asked that it might be entered as "quashed upon the insufficiency of the order of removal," but the Court gave no such direction.

Thursday, May 29.

REG. v. KILLERBY.

Where applicants rely on a variance in the examination, they must specifically set it out.

The sessions had confirmed an order subject to a case.

The examination set up two classes of settlement; one, hiring and service with Thomas Booth, and service thereunder in the appellant parish for two years, from November 1819 to November 1821; the other, hiring and service with James Booth, the son of the said Thomas Booth, and service thereunder in the said appellant parish, for a year, "after the expiration of the said service with the said Thomas Booth." The examinations also shewed that the pauper had married in March 1822. The grounds of appeal traversed the first class of settlement; they also traversed the second class of settlement in the words of the pauper, that he did not gain a settlement, &c. by hiring and service, &c. "after the expiration of the said service with the said Thomas Booth," &c. At the trial, it appeared that the service with Thomas Booth had been from November 1817 to November 1819, and the first ground of settlement was abandoned. The appellants then contended that the variance vitiated the second ground of settlement as stated in the examination, and that their ground of appeal let in the objection. The sessions thought that the grounds of appeal did not let in the objection, and confirmed the order. The question for the opinion of the Court was, whether the sessions had decided aright.

Grey, in support of the order of sessions.—The statement of the second ground of settlement is not so connected with the statement of the first as that the variance affects both. Then, if the appellants meant that the date of the commencement of the said service ought to have been given, they should have said so; and as they have not done so, there is an end of the matter. (R. v. The West Riding Justices, 10 A. & E. 685.)

Grainger, contrà. — If the pauper meant by "after," immediately after, then the variance does affect the second settlement; if he did not mean "immediately after," then the date ought to have appeared, because the fact that the marriage took place in March 1822 shews that the year from November 1821 to November 1822 could not have been meant. This must import some averment of time; whatever it may be, it is traversed by a traverse in the words of the pauper.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The question is, whether the objection founded on the variance was open to the appellants on their ground of appeal to the second settlement. The issue raised is, whether the pauper did serve, and for a year, under a contract of hiring and service with James Booth, after the expiration of the service with Thomas Booth; and nothing is said about any particular year. That being so, I cannot think that a traverse in the very words of the pauper lets in an objection that is founded on a variance from a year said to have been stated.

PATTESON, J.—Unless we give a very strict interpretation to the word "said" in the phrase "said service," we must hold that the sessions have done right. I think that the word "said," applies to "service" only, and does not include the particular date of the first service set out in the statement of it.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion. If the appellants relied on the variance, they should have pointed it out.

COLERIDGE, J.—Mr. Grainger's argument is not to be supported unless the statement of a specific service included the statement of a specific year. The foundation for that fails altogether, because no date at all is given. Rule discharged.

EDWARDS v. PINNIGER.

De injuriâ is a good replication to a plea of justification by assistants of a constable, or peace officer acting under a justice's warrant, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, although it alleges that the person who obtained the warrant was seised of the premises in question, which is a traversable fact.

This was an action of trespass. Two of the defendants justified under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74 (Small Tenements Act). The plea set out the various facts to bring the case within the statute, and alleged the seisin in fee of the landlord; that the warrant was duly issued, and that one of the defendants was the constable who executed it, and the other aided and assisted him.

The plaintiffs replied de injuriâ, to which the defendants demurred.

Willes, in support of the demurrer. De injuriâ is inapplicable, according to the second resolution in Crogate's case (8 Rep. 67); Jones v. Kitchen (1 B. & P 76). The defence depends upon the title of the landlord, here stated to be a seisin in fee. It is also bad for multifariousness, if de injuriâ can be bad on that ground. One of the defendants, although acting in aid of the peace officer, was bound to shew the jurisdiction of the magistrate, and his allegation of title is therefore traversable. The 5th section of the Act does not protect persons aiding the constable or peace officer. If the plea is bad as to one defendant, it is bad as to both. (Morse v. James, Willes, 122.)

Bull, Q. C. contrà, cited Pridden v. Cole (12 Mod. 178); Selby v. Bardons (3 B. & Ad. 2); Taylor v. Marten (Yelv. 157), and section 5 of the Act.

Lord DENMAN, C. J. Assuming that the fifth section of the Act does not apply, is the replication good? It is so unless the resolution in Crogate's case, about interest, is against it. Admitting that resolution to the fullest extent, the replication does not fall within it, for the defendant does not claim any interest at all. It is stated, and it will be necessary to prove, that the relation of landlord and tenant existed; but no claim of right is set up. To hold that it was bad, we should extend Lord Chief Justice Eyre's language in Jones v. Kitchen very much, which I am not inclined to do.

PATTESON, J.—The defendants here are not the servants of the party obtaining the warrant, but of the magistrates. They are obliged to set out the circumstances necessary to give jurisdiction, and therefore to shew that the relation of landlord and tenant existed. If then, we hold de injuriâ bad, we must say that wherever an interest is alleged in anybody, which is necessary to be proved as part of the justification, then de injuriâ cannot be replied; and I cannot consider that the resolutions in Crogate's case are to be so extended. It is unnecessary to decide whether the 5th section would apply or not.

WILLIAMS and COLERIDGE, JJ. concurred.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

REG. v. EAST RAINTON.

Hiring and service settlement.

Where a deed is produced before the removing justices, a copy of that deed must be sent to the receiving parish, together with the examination; its omission is fatal to the order, and not cured by sending it afterwards.

On appeal against an order for the removal of J. Spence, a widow, and children, in virtue of a derivative settlement alleged to have been gained by the husband of the pauper, as a pitman in the colliery of the Marquis of Londonderry, the case stated that, at the examination before the justices, a witness produced a pit bond, by which the pauper's husband and other workmen were engaged for one whole year, from the 5th of April, 1829, to the 5th of April, 1830, "to hew, drive, and put coal," at 24s. per fortnight, with a lesser scale of payment when unemployed. No copy of the pit bond was sent with the examination until after notice of appeal. The sessions confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of this Court.

Otter, in support of the order.—The question arises on the 9th to 13th grounds, that the evidence should have set forth a copy, and that the respondents should have sent the copy. It is a general proposition, that all the papers produced before the justices must be sent to the other parish, according to the case of Reg. v. Outwell. But this does not extend to all documents, and, if so, then only to such documents as the respondents have power over. In case of an estate settlement, there is no power which enables a parish to obtain the title deeds of such estate. If the Court construes the Act strictly, we must send all [illegible]tary evidence. [WILLIAMS, J.—Suppose the deed had not been before the justices at all. Here they had the deed before them, and, therefore why not send a copy?] If examination in the Act means all the evidence, documentary and oral, then all must be sent; and the case of secondary evidence does not arise, and no excuse can be offered if every word be not sent. But now, who knows that we did not send copies? The Court is a competent Court: the examination is attested by their names. It is to be presumed that they did send all that it was material to send. The copy was not served till after the grounds of appeal were served, but previous to the trial of appeal. The sessions, however, have confirmed the order, and by so doing have found it to be sent in time. [By the COURT.—Not so; they might have confirmed the order, though no copy had been sent.] But the fact is not found either way. But the evidence of production of bond is a copy of the bond, and there is no evidence the other way. [PATTESON, J.—But the bond contains a great many conditions.] But it is not shewn that that was the same bond. [WILLIAMS, J.—But the examination traces the settlement to a certain service particularized in the bond, with which the date and fact agree. Why are we to presume that it is another bond?] The justices have decided the on sufficiency of the evidence. (Reg. v. Kesteven, 1 Bit. & Sym. 50.) [COLERIDGE, J.—They in effect say that the copy was not sent, for they say "afterwards" a copy of the bond was sent.] If the order of sessions is quashed, the order of removal is good.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We think this case free of doubt.

COLERIDGE, J. I think that there is no excuse for not sending a copy of bond. The Court does not wish to go beyond that. Order quashed.

REG. v. ST. MARGARET, WESTMINSTER.

Where it clearly appears that there is a settlement subsequent to the one relied on, it must be inquired into, otherwise the prior settlement will not support the order.

On appeal against an order for the removal of a pauper, named Henrietta Matthews, from St. Margaret's, Westminster, to St. James's, Bath, the order was quashed. It appeared from the case that a good maiden settlement was made out by the renting of a tenement described as No. 3, Hot-bath-street, in the parish of St. James, Bath; but the evidence went to shew that the pauper's father had subsequently rented another house, described as being "No. 8, in Hot-bath-street aforesaid." The first question was, whether the word "aforesaid" applied to the parish, and sufficiently stated that No. 8 was in the parish of St. James, Bath. The second question raised by the case was, whether the first settlement was good in the event of the last renting being held to be insufficiently stated; then, whether the first settlement can take effect, it being shewn by the examination that a subsequent settlement had been gained.

Phin.—I contend that the word "aforesaid" applies to the name of the street, and clearly not to the parish. No. 8 may be in one parish, and No. 3 in another. There is a case where a man slept with his head in one parish and his feet in another. The parish, in the second alleged settlement, is not stated, and no settlement, therefore, is made out at No. 8. [By the COURT.—We think that the word "aforesaid" does not specify the parish.] But the respondents cannot revert to a maiden settlement, where it appears on the face of the examination that a subsequent settlement existed, though it does not appear in what parish. (Rex v. Beverley, 1 B. & Ad. 201; Reg. v. Yelvertoft, 1 Dav. & Mer. 310; Rex v. Harberton, 12 East.) It was the duty of the respondents to go on and make inquiry, and state the last settlement, wherever another settlement appears to have existed by the evidence laid before the removing justices.

Bodkin, contrà.—The ground of appeal on which they rely is, that the settlement of the mother cannot be set up, as a good settlement appears elsewhere, though the examination does not shew in what parish. How can a good settlement be shewn without shewing a parish? It does do so; but the Court is asked to assume a highly improbable fact, that No. 3 and No. 8 are not in the same parish. [Coleridge, J.—Why is that highly improbable; the line must pass somewhere?] But even if the parish be not stated, the respondents have a right to rely on which settlement they choose. Reg. v. Latchford (1 N. S. C. 387) shews, that if the respondents state more than one settlement, they are at liberty to rely on either. Here there is a good settlement set forth by the residence of the mother in No. 3, Hot-bath-street, which is stated to be in the parish of St. James, and that suffices, and is a good settlement.

Lord Denman, C. J.—We think that in this case the sessions did right. If one settlement only had been stated, they might have rested there; but here another appears, and the respondents were bound to inquire into it, and state it properly. No parish appears to be stated, and all England being parochial, with the smallest possible exceptions, the parish should have been stated; and the sessions were right in saying that the respondents must shew the last settlement, and where it was.

Patteson, J.—Here it clearly appears that there was a settlement of the father somewhere else.

Coleridge, J.—Reg. v. Latchford merely goes to this length, that a party shall not be stopped at one settlement, but may go on, and prove another, where two or three are stated. Here the objection refers not to what took place before the justices, but to the settlement itself. Order confirmed.

Doe dem. Corporation of Richmond v. Morphett.

A notice to quit "on the 13th May, or such other day time in the current year, for which you now hold the same," will not enure as a good notice for the following year of the tenancy.

Doe dem. Cullcford overruled.

This was an action of ejectment with two demises, the first in October 1, 1843, the second in November of the same year. At the trial, the plaintiff was nonsuited, on the ground that there was no notice to quit in fact, and that even if there was, the notice having been given by an agent of the corporation, it was not good without he was authorized under seal, and that a subsequent ratification of his authority was insufficient. The arguments upon the first point are alone reported, as the judgment of the Court was given upon it without noticing the others.

The defendant held under a Martlemas tenancy, and in October 1842 notice to quit was given as follows:—"I hereby give you notice to quit (naming the premises) on the 13th of May next, or on such other day or time as the current year for which you now hold the same" shall expire.

Addison now shewed cause against the rule obtained by Bliss to enter a verdict for the plaintiff.—Doe dem. Huntingtown v. Cullcford (4 D. & R. 248) will be relied upon by the other side, but it is distinguishable, for the words were there ambiguous. Here it is "the current year for which you now hold the same." The notice could not refer to the following year.

Pashley, contrà.—Doe v. Cullcford is exactly in point, and is supported by Doe dem. Williams v. Smith (5 A. & E. 350), where the words "present year" were used.

Lord Denman, C.J.—It is unnecessary to notice the other points, as the nonsuit may be supported on the short ground that the notice to quit is insufficient. The notice would have been good for the current year, had it expired six months afterwards; but here it expired in November 1842. Bayley, J. in the case cited, said, that it would not be intended as a notice for that year when only a few days remained of it; but I do not concur with that reasoning. A new notice was necessary.

Patteson, J.—We are asked to read this notice as if it contained the words, "at such other time or times as the present year's holding shall expire after the expiration of half a year from this notice." I do not see why we should do this, and I consider Doe dem. Culleford to be bad law.

Williams, J. and Coleridge, J. concurred.

Rule discharged.

Gibson v. Caul and Others.

Where it is sought to charge a member of a partnership upon a bill of exchange, and the partnership is not correctly described, it is a question for the jury whether the defendants are bound by such an acceptance through their knowledge that it is the usual or frequent mode of acceptance.

This was an action upon a bill of exchange, drawn upon the Low Light Brewery, North Shields, and accepted by three persons as directors of the Low Light Brewery, North Shields. It was sought to charge the defendants as partners; but it appearing at the trial that the correct designation of the company was the Low Light Joint-Stock Compan[y], Coltman, J. upon the authority of Kirk v. Blurton (9 M. & W. 234), directed the plaintiff to be nonsuited. A rule for a new trial had been obtained, upon the ground that it [ou]ght to have gone to the jury whether the defe[ndant]s were not liable upon such acceptance, by reason of their knowledge that it was the usual mode of acceptance.

Watson, Q.C. and Grainger now shewed cause, citing that case and Faith v. Richmond (11 A. & E. 339), and Bult v. Morrell (12 A. & E. 745).

Knowles, Q.C. contrà.

Lord Denman, C.J.—It would have been better to have submitted the question to the jury; but the judge considered the case of Kirk v. Blurton conclusive, and acted upon it. I think, therefore, there should be a new trial. Rule absolute.

Reg. v. Inhabitants of Totley.

A statement that A B is the child of C. D. imports that he is the legitimate child.

The sessions had quashed the order of removal, on the ground that the examination did not shew with sufficient certainty that the paupers, John Booker, Sarah Booker, &c. &c. children of the late George Booker, who were removed to their father's place of settlement, were entitled thereto as his legitimate children. The examination on which the objection arose was as follows:—

"This examinant saith, the said George Booker, deceased, was my brother, and died on the first day of May, 1843, at Totley aforesaid. The said George Booker's wife died the previous day also at Totley, leaving eight children; namely, Mary, John, Elizabeth, Sarah, Anne, James, George, and William; the said children were all residing with their said parents, George Booker and his said wife, until their deaths as aforesaid; and none of the said children has since done any act to acquire a settlement in his or her own right. The said George Booker, deceased, never did any act to gain a settlement, but derived his settlement from his father, John Booker; and his settlement as derived from his said father was in the township of Unston, in the said county."

The ground of appeal objecting to this was as follow:

That the examination of William Booker (of which a copy is annexed to the copy of the order of removal delivered to our said township of Unston), is not sufficient to warrant the said order of removal, as it does not shew that the paupers in the said order named are the legitimate children of the said George Booker, deceased, or that the said George Booker, deceased, was ever married to the mother of the said children; or that he was ever married to her before the birth of the said children.

Clarke, Serjt. (with whom was Denison), in support of the order of sessions.—There is no information given here as to when they were married, or where. [Lord Denman, C.J.—Are we to presume the children were born out of marriage?] Reg. v. Bakewell (see supra, 53) governs this case. The sessions have decided that there is not sufficient information, and the Court will not interfere, however wrong they may have been. Bastardy is not to be presumed where the question of legitimacy is in issue, and an injury would be done; but here it is only a collateral question. The children must be settled somewhere. Perjury could not be assigned in this affidavit.

Wilmore, contrà, was not called upon.

Lord Denman, C. J.—It is argued that the case of Reg. v. Bakewell absolutely rules this. But it is not so. We decided that strictly upon the question of facts as to the means of inquiry, and the quarter sessions can only judge of the fact. But here the question was decided subject to objection. The case is stated for us to determine whether they were wrong. The objection is, that the examination of William Booker is not sufficient to warrant the order of removal, as not shewing that the children were legitimate, and that the said George Booker had ever married the mother, or married her before the birth of the said children. We must say that it is sufficient. A statement that a person is the child of another is the same as saying that he is the legitimate child. The law does not contemplate the relation of an illegitimate child at all. The examination was therefore sufficient, and the order right. Order of sessions quashed.

Reg. v. Melksham.

Sufficiency of statement of settlement by estate.

This was a derivative settlement by estate, from the grandfather of the pauper. The statement was nearly as follows:—

"My grandfather lived in the cottage for several years, and on his death, my father inherited it, and lived there eighteen years. Upon his death I took it, as the eldest son, but have never occupied it or resided forty days. My aunt, at my request, has continued to reside there."

It was objected at the sessions, that this was insufficient, for not shewing what estate the grandfather had. They decided against the objection, but granted a case, and also upon an objection for want of certainty in the averment of relief, which it became [un]necessary to consider.

Pashley, in support of the order of sessions.

Hodges (with whom was Merewether), contrà.

Lord Denman, C. J.—The sessions were quite right in every thing but in granting a case.

Order confirmed.

SITTINGS AFTER TERM.

Tuesday, June 3.

Lord Denman, C.J. said that, owing to the arrears of business, the Court was anxious to sit as often as possible after the term, but that as their attendance would be much wanted in the House of Lords, they would give notice of the days on which specific cases would be taken.

Wednesday, June 3.

Whitehead v. The Queen.

Upon a conviction for stealing in a dwelling-house above the value of 5l. under 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 1, the prisoner cannot be sentenced for seven years' transportation, or any other punishment not mentioned in the statute.

Semble, per Patteson, J. that the 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, ss. 20, 21, do not apply to an indictment in which the statement that the jurors are good and lawful men of the county is wholly omitted.

This was a writ of error upon a conviction for larceny from a dwelling-house, and judgment awarded of seven years' transportation. The indictment omitted to state that the jurors were lawful men of the county.

The Court called upon

Waddington to support the conviction.—The objections here are—1, that it is not stated that the jury were good and lawful men of the county; 2, that the punishment awarded is not warranted by the statute. 1. The record does shew sufficiently that they were good and lawful men of the county, although not stated in terms. The commission is to inquire by the oaths of good and lawful men within the county of York. Then the venue of the indictment is "Yorkshire to wit;" and it is stated that it was by the oath of A, B, and C, presented, &c. The Court will not presume that they were not lawful men. [Patteson, J.—How can it be collected that they were?] At any rate it is cured by 7 Geo. 4, c. 66, s. 21. This is only a misdescription of the jurors. 2. The punishment is warranted. The statute which now regulates the offence is 6 & 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 90. By the previous statute, 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 62, it was enacted, in terms, that the offender "shall be transported for life," which was the only punishment that could be awarded. Here it is only "shall be liable to be transported for any term not exceeding fifteen years, and not less than ten years." The offence is divisible, for it includes simple larceny; and if it appears upon the whole record that an offence has been committed, an offence to justify the judgment, it will be supported. [Patteson, J.—Is there any case of conviction for the whole offence, and judgment for part? Coleridge, J.—He is liable to transportation for not less than ten years, and he is only liable for a term included in this enactment. Lord Denman, C. J.—I recollect an action tried before Gibbs, C. J. because the sentence of whipping had been omitted, and he directed the jury to give plaintiff all the damages he had sustained by not being whipped.] The case of Rex v. Fletcher (Russ. & Ryl. 58) shews that it is a subject of great doubt whether a sentence may not be given in part only.

Lord Denman, C. J.—There is no doubt that the judge only had power under the statute, and the statute requires that he shall be transported for not less than ten years.

Patteson, J.—It is quite as imperative as the former statute. I would not, however, be supposed to say that the first objection is not good. I doubt very much whether the 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, can apply.

Bliss was to have argued contrà.

Judgment reversed.

Reg. v. St. Mary, Lambeth.

An order of examination quashed, because it does not disclose a settlement upon the face of it, is a quashing upon the merits.

The question submitted to the opinion of the Court in this case (besides one not decided) was, whether the sessions had rightly confirmed an order upon an appeal, two prior orders having been quashed upon appeal. The entry as to the first order was, "Quashed because the examination of the pauper disclosed no settlement upon the face of it." The entry as to the second order was, "Quashed because the examination of the pauper disclosed no settlement upon the face of it, and because subsequent to the date of a prior order not previously abandoned."

Godson, Q.C. (with whom were Prendergast and Howarth).—The appeal was entertained by the sessions, and they have therefore decided that the former orders were quashed not upon the merits. If an order is quashed, and an entry made as quashed upon the merits, it is conclusive; but if no special entry is made, the Court of Quarter Sessions may inquire and decide whether it was quashed upon merits or not. (Reg. v. Justices of Lancashire, 3 Q. B. 367.) It might here have been a formal mistake. Then as to the second order, it is clear that there need be no actual abandonment. Reg. v. St. Pancras (14 Law J.), and R. v. Kingsclere (3 Q.B. 389) were also cited.

Pashley, contrà.—Ex parte Ackworth (3 Q.B. 397) is clearly in point, supported by the cases of Reg. v. Charlbury (ibid. 378), and R. v. Kingsclere (ibid. 388). The decision was touching the settlement on the point of settlement. In R. v. Kingsclere the Court did not interfere, because without materials for inquiring into the propriety of the decision. He was then stopped.

By the Court.—We agree with you; the point of settlement is decided, which, under the circumstances, is upon the merits.

Order of sessions quashed.

Reg. v. Rothwell.

A statement that the pauper was, at the time of his father being settled in a parish, an unemancipated member of his father's family, and that he never acquired any settlement of his own, is an intelligible statement that he was entitled to the derivative settlement of his father.

The only question submitted to the Court in this case was, whether a statement that the pauper was an unemancipated member of his father's family was sufficiently certain.

Pashley contended that the term "unemancipated" was unknown to the English law, citing Reg. v. Cold Ashton (Burr. S. C. 444).

Hall, contrà.

By the Court.—The term "emancipation" is certainly borrowed from the Roman law; but it is perfectly well understood by the justices, and was so by the appellants themselves, and by every one at all acquainted with parish law. Order of sessions confirmed.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Friday, April 18.

Gibbs v. Tunaley.

The Court will not grant a new trial to the plaintiff on the ground that the damages are small, even though the Court may conceive they are smaller than what is reasonable, unless the judge at the trial is dissatisfied.

Byles, Serjt. (Gunning with him) moved for a rule to shew cause why a new trial should not be had, on the ground of the verdict being against evidence. The action was tried before Parke, B. at the last Norfolk Assizes, and was brought to recover damages from the defendant for unskilful treatment as a surgeon in curing a wound of the plaintiff, caused by an accident on a railway. Plea—Not guilty. Damages, one farthing. The rule was moved on several affidavits. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Tindal, C.J. now (May 8), delivered the judgment of the Court.—This case was an action against a surgeon for negligence, in which the plaintiff had a verdict, with one farthing damages. A motion was made by brother Byles for a new trial, on the ground of the inadequacy of the damages, and upon affidavits in contradiction of the evidence given on the defendant's part by his groom. It is not usual for the Courts to grant a new trial on the ground that damages are smaller than the Court may, perhaps, think reasonable. (Rendall v. Hayward, 7 Scott, 407; and Hayward v. Newton, 2 Strange, 940.) The Court said it was never done. At any rate, a new trial ought not to be granted on such a ground, unless the judge who tried the cause is dissatisfied with the smallness of the damages,—which, as the learned judge has informed us, is not the case in the present instance. In regard to the second ground on which this application was made, it is to be observed that the evidence given by the witness whose testimony is impeached cannot be looked upon as evidence coming from the surgeon, seeing that this evidence directly impeaches the issue the plaintiff came to try, and being such as he ought to have been prepared to rebut; we ought, therefore, not to grant a new trial, unless it is made out that on the second trial the position would have been materially different from that in which it was at the former trial. On examining the affidavits in support of the application, it appears to us that the only affidavits which state any material facts, or which appear to rest on any solid grounds to impeach the testimony of the defendant's groom, are the affidavits of the plaintiff himself, which cannot be used on a second trial, and that of the plaintiff's mother, who was examined on the plaintiff's behalf on the last trial, and who might on that occasion have given in court the evidence she now tenders on affidavit. We therefore think there is in this case no sufficient ground for granting a rule. Rule refused.

Wednesday, May 28.

Joseph Marriage v. Francis Marriage.

The defendant being indebted to the plaintiff in 2,000l. executed a bond conditioned for the payment half-yearly of 100l. during the lives of the plaintiff and his wife, and which payment the plaintiff agreed to accept in satisfaction of the debt; but in case of failure of making the payments for twenty-eight days after the same should be due, the same having been demanded, the bond was to be in full force; and also in case of failure in making the payments, the bond was not to be taken as a discharge of the debt of 2,000l., but the same should forthwith become due.

A plea of payment of one of the half-yearly payments after the twenty-eight days, and before action, alleging that no demand had been made when the payment became due, or within twenty-eight days next after, was held bad, as not sufficiently shewing a payment of all that was due within stat. 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 12.

Held, secondly, that the bond was not an annuity bond within the meaning of 49 Geo. 3, c. 121, s. 17.

Quære, if an antecedent debt is a good consideration for an annuity?

Debt on bond.—Defendant craved oyer of the bond and condition. The following was the condition:—

"Whereas the above-bounden Francis Marriage is indebted to the above-named Joseph Marriage in the sum of 2,000l. of lawful British money: And whereas the said Joseph Marriage has, at the request of the said Francis Marriage, agreed to accept and take from the said Francis Marriage interest for the same at the rate of 5l. per centum per annum, payable during the lives of the said Joseph Marriage and Hannah his wife, at such times and in such manner as hereinafter mentioned, in full satisfaction and discharge of the said debt or sum of 2,000l. provided the same be regularly paid as hereinafter mentioned. Now, the condition of the above-written bond or obligation is such, that if the above-bounden Francis Marriage, his heirs, executors, or administrators, shall well and truly pay or cause to be paid unto the said Joseph Marriage, his executors, administrators, or assigns, during the lives of the said Joseph Marriage and Hannah his wife, and the life of the survivor of them, the sum of 100l. of lawful British money, clear of all deductions, by half-yearly payments, &c. (being on certain days and in manner therein mentioned); then and in such case the above-written bond or obligation shall be null and void; but in case of failure in payment of all or any part of the said interest for the space of twenty-eight days next after each or any half-yearly payment of such interest shall become due, the same having been demanded by note in writing or otherwise, the said bond or obligation shall be and remain in full force and virtue; and the above-bounden Francis Marriage doth hereby expressly declare and agree that, in case of failure in making the said several payments aforesaid, or any of them, within the respective times aforesaid, this bond, or any payment or payments made under the same, shall not be construed or taken as a discharge of the said debt or sum of 2,000l. or any part thereof; but the same shall forthwith and immediately after such default shall happen, become due and payable to the said Joseph Marriage, his executors, administrators, or assigns, and recoverable under and by virtue of the said bond and obligation."

The defendant then pleaded, first, Non est factum.

Secondly. That the said writing obligatory was made and entered into by the defendant to the plaintiff after the passing of a certain Act of Parliament, passed in the 53rd year of his late Majesty King George the Third, and that the annual sum in the said condition mentioned was granted upon and for a pecuniary consideration in that behalf, to wit, for the debt of 2,000l. in the recital of the condition of the said writing obligatory mentioned, and that the said writing obligatory was made and entered into by the defendant to the plaintiff for the pecuniary consideration in that behalf as aforesaid, and that no memorial of the said writing obligatory was enrolled in the High Court of Chancery within thirty days after the execution thereof, according to the directions of the said Act, whereby the said writing in the said declaration mentioned was and is null and void.—Verification.

Thirdly. That after the making of the writing obligatory, and when the first half-yearly payment of the said annuity or yearly sum of 100l. in the said condition mentioned became due and payable, to wit, on the first day of July next after the making of the said writing obligatory, the defendant then paid to the plaintiff, who then accepted from the defendant, the full amount of the first half-yearly payment, to wit, the sum of 50l. in payment, satisfaction, and discharge of the first half-yearly payment of the said yearly sum of 100l.; and that payment of the second half-yearly payment of the said annuity or yearly sum of 100l. in the said condition mentioned, was not demanded by a note in writing or otherwise by the plaintiff from the defendant on the first day of January A.D. 1844, when the same became due, or at any time within twenty-eight days next after the same became due; but that the defendant, after the expiration of the said twenty-eight days, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on the 6th day of February in the year last aforesaid, paid to the plaintiff, who then accepted from him the full amount of the said second payment of the said annuity or yearly sum, and full moneys payable in respect of the same. And the defendant avers that no other instalment of the said annuity or yearly sum of 100l. had become due and payable under or by virtue of the condition of the writing obligatory, at any time before the commencement of this action, and that no sum of money whatever at the time of the commencement of this action was due or owing from the defendant to the plaintiff for or in respect of any part of the said annuity or yearly sum of 100l. or of any interest in respect thereof.—Verification.

The plaintiff demurred specially to the second and last pleas.

Manning, Serjt. for the plaintiff, in support of the demurrer, first, as to the last plea, objected that the statute of 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 12, provides only for a plea of payment where the action is brought upon a bond conditioned to be void upon payment of a lesser sum at a day or place certain, and the obligor has, before action, paid to the obligee the principal and interest due by the condition. Here it was not pretended that the principal had been paid. The statute, therefore, did not apply to a case like this; it was intended only in cases where the whole debt was discharged. Another objection was made to the plea, on the ground of its setting up two defences, inasmuch as, if the plea was correct in saying that there was no demand within twenty-eight days, then an independent answer was set up; and it was also objected that it was uncertain whether, from the plea or not, the whole 2,000l. had revived.

Byles, Serjt. for the defendant, contended that the first plea was a good plea of payment, by virtue of the statute of 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 12; that that statute applied to cases where sums were to be paid periodically. Secondly, that it applied to an annuity for lives as well as for years; and lastly, that the sum of 2,000l. mentioned in the condition, was in the nature of a penalty as much as if it had occurred in the bond itself, and that the same had not been forfeited. Bridges v. Williamson (Strange, 814); Wyllie v. Wilkes (2 Dougl. 519); and Hodgkinson v. Wyatt (3 Law J., N. S., Q. B. 73), were cited. In the last case, it is said, by Patteson, J. "any payment which, if made at the very day, would be pleadable as a defence at common law, may, if made after the very day, be pleaded under that statute." As to the second plea, it was contended, that this bond required enrolment under the Annuity Act, 53 Geo. 3, c. 141; that the present fell within the definition of an annuity given by Lord Coke, 144 b, where he says, "An annuity is a yearly payment of a certain sum of money granted to another in fee for life, or years, charging the person of the grantor only," and thus the forbearance to sue for the antecedent debt of 2,000l. was a pecuniary consideration within the meaning of the Act.

The following cases were cited: Shove v. Webb (1 T. R. 732); Ex parte Fallon and Wife (5 T. R. 286).

Manning, Serjt. in reply, submitted that the present was not an annuity; and if it was, then that it was not one founded on a pecuniary consideration, within the meaning of the Annuity Act; and he relied on Blake v. Attersoll (2 B. & C. 875); Hick v. Keats (4 B. & C. 69); Cumberland v. Kelley (3 B. & Ad. 602); and Frost v. Frost (3 B. & Ad. 612, note a).

Tindal, C.J.—I am of opinion that the right construction to be put on this bond is, that it is not a grant of an annuity within the Annuity Act, and that, therefore, no memorial thereof was required to be enrolled, and judgment on the second plea must be given in favour of the plaintiff. In the first place, we have no right to put a different construction than that which appears on the face of the contract itself. If we refer to the recital and agreement as set out on the condition to the bond, it appears that there was a debt to the obligee, who is content, on payment of certain interest, to forego the original debt. Probably there was some relationship between the parties, and therefore the obligee was willing to give up his demand of the principal debt. This is not an annuity properly so called, nor is it within the object of the Annuity Act, which was meant to prevent the raising of money at an extravagant rate of interest. I always understood, that in an annuity, the money advanced was irrecoverably gone (though there might in some cases be a clause for redemption by the borrower), and the lender had nothing but his annuity. Here, however, it is provided, that if not paid, the original debt is to become due, and the parties to be remitted to their former situation. In Hunter v. Mouseley (2 B. & A. 802) the principle was laid down, that a mere stipulation for the payment of interest for the forbearance of a certain sum is not an annuity within the meaning of the Act. It certainly would be very difficult to state such a consideration under the Act; and, therefore, for these reasons, it appears to me this is not an annuity, within the Annuity Act. As to the third plea, it is a plea of payment when one half-yearly payment became due; and secondly, of payment, after one became due; but there does not appear to be inserted in it sufficient to bring it within the statute of Anne. It is quite consistent with this plea, that a demand of payment may have been made before the commencement of this action, and therefore the 200*l.* may not be all that was due on the bond; and certainly the statute does not apply, unless there has been a payment of all that was due when the payment was made.

COLTMAN, J.—I have great doubt whether a bygone consideration is within the meaning of the Annuity Act. Kelfe v. Ambrose (7 T. R. 551) only determined that if the deed required enrolment, the one then before the Court was sufficiently enrolled; and Ashurst, J. there seems to be of opinion that unless there was an advance of money at the time, the annuity was not within the statute. All he says is, that where an annuity is granted for a money consideration, it is not necessary that the money should be paid down at the instant. But here there is nothing to shew on the face of the bond, otherwise than that the party entitled to receive principal and interest is content under certain circumstances to forego the principal. As to the other question, it is not necessary to allude to what my brother Patteson has said; because to have raised the question as to the payment being within the statute of Anne, it should have been so pleaded.

MAULE, J. delivered a similar judgment.

CRESSWELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. There was nothing here but a forbearance of the original debt for the consideration of the payment of the interest. I think this bond was, therefore, neither in its terms nor spirit, within the Act. There are also strong observations, both by Littledale, J. and Parke, J. in Frost v. Frost, as to a bygone debt not being a sufficient consideration within the meaning of the Annuity Act. Both say that it would not be unless where it was part of the contract under which the annuity was granted. With respect to the other question, to bring it within the statute of Anne, defendant must shew that he paid all that was due, and this he has not done in his plea; therefore the plea is bad. Judgment for the plaintiff.

DAVIES v. ASTON.

The Court will take judicial notice what are beasts of the plough and implements of husbandry.

Case for excessive distress, with several counts, the sixth being a count in trover for goods and chattels of the same number, quality, description, and value as those in the first count. The goods and chattels in the first count were, inter alia, corn, carts, horses, cows, and other cattle; tables, cheese-presses, tubs, hair sieves, carpet chairs, writing-desks, weather-glasses, bedsteads, feather beds, mattresses, bolsters, pillows, &c.

Plea to the sixth count—That the goods in the sixth count mentioned were taken and distrained for two quarters' rent.

Replication thereto—That at the time when, &c. the plaintiff was a husbandman, and carried on and exercised the business and calling of husbandry, and that the said goods and chattels in the said last count mentioned were the cattle and beasts of the plough and the implements of husbandry of the said plaintiff, by him then used in and upon the said last-mentioned lands, tenements, and premises, in and about his said business and calling, and wherewith respectively he gained, tilled, and cultivated the said lands, tenements, and premises in the said last plea mentioned. The replication then went on to allege that there were on the premises other goods sufficient to satisfy the rent and costs of distress which the defendant ought to have taken.

To this replication there was a special demurrer, assigning, amongst other grounds that it was not pleaded to any particular part only of the plea, but professed to be an answer to the whole plea to the sixth count; whereas that complained of a conversion by defendant of many things which could not possibly be either cattle and beasts of the plough or implements of husbandry.

Channell, Serjt. (Welsby with him), in support of the demurrer, relied on the grounds stated in the special demurrer.

Talfourd, Serjt. contrà, contended that as they were laid under a videlicet, plaintiff was not bound to prove the goods specifically; besides, the Court could not take judicial notice that the goods did not all relate to husbandry.

The COURT however said that the replication was bad for professing to answer the whole, when in fact it was only an answer as to part; and it was impossible for the Court to consider that beds and some of the other articles mentioned had any thing to do with husbandry. Judgment for defendant.

FRANKLIN v. CARTER.

A plea of payment by a tenant of a sum of money assessed on the premises in respect of the property thereof, was held sufficient on general demurrer, without express mention of the Income Tax Act, where the Court could, from the plea, see that that statute was meant to be referred to.

A plea to the further maintenance of an action for rent, that before the rent became due the plaintiff had broken a covenant in the lease he held of the premises, which created a forfeiture thereof, by reason whereof the lessor brought ejectment before the rent was due, and judgment was given against the plaintiff after the present action, and the now defendant compelled to pay the rent to the lessor of the plaintiff in such ejectment: Held, a substantial answer to the further maintenance.

Declaration in covenant on an indenture of lease, dated February 6, 1839, demising certain premises to the defendant at the rent of 70*l.* a year.

Breach—Non-payment of a year's rent.

Plea, as to the sum of 2*l.* 0s. 10*d.*, parcel, &c.; that, after making the said indenture, and whilst the defendant held the said tenements thereunder, as tenant thereof to the plaintiff, whilst the plaintiff was entitled to the said annual sum of 70*l.* reserved by the said indenture, and before any part of the rent in the declaration mentioned had accrued due; to wit, on, &c. a large sum of money, to wit, 2*l.* 0s. 10*d.* being at and after the rate of 7*d.* for every 20s. of the annual value (to wit, 70*l.*) of the said messuage, tenement, shop, and premises, was duly, and according to the form of the statute in such case, made and assessed on the said messuage, tenement, shop, and premises, in respect of the property thereof, for the year then next ensuing; which said sum of 2*l.* 0s. 10*d.* was payable by four quarterly instalments, that is to say, on the 20th day of June, the 20th day of September, the 20th day of December, and the 20th day of March, then next ensuing; and afterwards, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on, &c. the defendant then being the occupier and tenant of the said messuage, tenement, shop, and premises, paid to Thomas Casey, then being the collector of the said tax, the said sum of 2*l.* 0s. 10*d.*; and the said sum of 2*l.* 0s. 10*d.* so paid by the defendant was and is 7*d.* for every 20s. of the said sum of 70*l.* the annual rent payable by the defendant to the plaintiff under and by virtue of the said indenture for the said messuage, tenement, shop, and premises; and the defendant has never made any payment to the plaintiff on account of the rent of the said messuage, tenement, shop, and premises, since the payment of the said sum of 2*l.* 0s. 10*d.* Verification.

The second plea was pleaded to the further maintenance of the action as to the sum of 52*l.* 10s. parcel, &c. and was, that before and at the time of making the indenture of demise in the declaration mentioned, Robert John Smith was possessed for a term of years therein mentioned, and then unexpired, of and in the said message and premises in the declaration mentioned. The plea then set out an indenture of lease between Smith and the plaintiff, by which the pr... ... demised to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff covenanted with Smith inter alia, to insure the premises against fire; and a power of re-entry was reserved in favour of Smith, in case of non-performance by the plaintiff of the covenants contained therein. The plea then stated, that the plaintiff entered and became possessed of the premises for the term; and that afterwards, and before any part of the rent to which the plea was pleaded accrued due, the plaintiff broke his said covenant to insure. The plea then stated, that by means of the pre... es aforesaid, after making the indenture in the declaration mentioned, and before any part of the said sum of 52*l.* 10s. parcel, &c. became due and payable, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on, &c. the estate, term, and interest of the plaintiff in the said demised premises became and was ended, forfeited, and determined; and further, that by reason and in consequence of the said forfeiture, John Doe, on the demise of the said Robert John Smith, afterwards, &c. The plea here set out proceedings in an action of ejectment, to which the plaintiff appeared and defended as landlord, and in which, after the commencement of the present suit, judgment was given against the now plaintiff. The plea then stated that R. J. Smith afterwards gave notice of the premises to the no... called upon and required him to attorn tenant to him, the said R. J. Smith, of the said messuage, tenement, shop, and premises, and to pay and satisfy him for the proceeds, issues, and profits of the said messuage, tenement, shop, and premises, from the day of the demise to the said John Doe, in the said declaration mentioned; and that the defendant then attorned tenant to the said R. J. Smith of the said messuage, tenement, shop, and premises, and paid and satisfied him for the said profits, issues, and proceeds of the same, a large sum of money, to wit, 52*l.* 10s. Verification.

The plaintiff demurred generally to the first, and specially to the second plea.

Channell, Serjt. (Petersdorff with him), in support of the demurrer.—The first plea assumes to set up as a defence the payment of a property-tax, and right to deduct the same from the rent, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, s. 60, rule No. 9; but it is impossible for the Court, by this plea, to take notice of that statute, there being no words in such plea confining the allegation to any particular statute. The statute gives a right to deduct only out of the first payment to be made on account of the rent; but there is here no allegation of payment of any rent subsequently to the plaintiff. (Tinckler v. Prentice, 4 Taunt. 549.) As to the second plea, if this is a plea of eviction, it not being until after suit, it ought to have been shewn to have been an eviction before the rent became due. [CRESSWELL, J.—The plea shews that before rent became due, the plaintiff had forfeited his lease from Smith, by not insuring unless the same was waived; but so far from there being a waiver, it is shewn that the landlord brought ejectment. The judgment in ejectment is, therefore, founded on a forfeiture alleged to have occurred before the rent became due.] It was necessary to shew more than a forfeiture. It does not appear that the judgment has been ever forfeited by a writ of possession.

Byles, Serjt. contrà.—As to the first plea, the question only is, whether the Court will not see that the plea refers to the property-tax of 5 & 6 Victoria. [TINDAL, C. J.—It cannot be under the repealed Act; it must therefore be under some statute by which 7*d.* for 20s. was assessed on the messuage and premises, in respect of the property thereof. There can scarcely be a doubt then that the statute referred to is the Income-tax Act.] Then as to the second plea, it is a good plea, shewing that the landlord's title has been determined; there is sufficient to shew that the ejectment was in consequence of the forfeiture alleged to have been before the rent was due, namely, it is "that by means of the premises," the plaintiff's interest determined, and that "by reason and in consequence of the said forfeiture," the ejectment took place.

Channell, Serjt. in reply, contended that the words "by means of the premises" referred only to the breach of covenant immediately preceding, and that the words were only an inference of law, and not traversable.

TINDAL, C. J.—The tenant is at liberty to shew that his landlord's title has expired. The second plea, I am of opinion, is no more than an argumentative statement that the original landlord elected to proceed on a forfeiture of the plaintiff's lease. But no objection as to its being argumentative is pointed out by the special demurrer. Looking at the ground of forfeiture for which the original landlord was entitled to proceed, the plea states a declaration in ejectment in the name of John Doe on a demise, lated 1st January, 1844, and that the same was before any part of the three quarters' rent became due. Therefore, in a proceeding to which the plaintiff was a party, and before the rent became payable, another person than the plaintiff, that is to say John Doe, was in possession of the premises; then a judgment is given afterwards that the said John Doe shall recover (that is from the 1st January, 1844) his said term. Judgment not having been signed in the ejectment until after action, it could not be pleaded in bar; but the plea is a substantial answer to the further maintenance.

COLTMAN, J., MAULE, J. and CRESSWELL, J. were of the same opinion.

Judgment for the defendant.

BRADLEY and ANOTHER v. COPLEY, Bart.

Where goods were mortgaged to the plaintiffs subject to redemption on payment of the mortgage debt, on demand, and the mortgagor was to retain possession until default, and the goods, whilst in his possession, and before demand had been made, were taken in execution by a creditor of the mortgagor;

Held, that the plaintiffs could not maintain trover against the execution creditor, as they had not the right to the possession.

Action on the case, with a count in trover to recover the value of certain furniture and effects taken by the defendant as sheriff of the county of York, under an execution against one John Boulton, at the suit of one Robert Taylor.

Pleas—Not guilty, and Not possessed.

By the order of Mr. Justice Coltman, a case was stated for the opinion of the Court to the following effect:—

The plaintiffs being possessed, for the residue of an unexpired term, of a certain inn at Rotherham, in Yorkshire, called the College Inn, and of the furniture and effects in the same inn, in August 1842 let the inn and sold the furniture and effects to the said John Boulton, and accordingly, on the 10th August, 1842, Boulton was let into possession.

On the 22nd of August, 1842, a bill of sale under seal was stated in the case to have been bonâ fide executed by Boulton and the plaintiffs, a copy of which was set out in the case, and was an indenture between the said John Boulton of the one part, and William Bradley and John Newton Mappin of the other part, by which, after reciting that Boulton was indebted to Bradley and Mappin in 196*l.* 6s. 5d Boulton assigned to Bradley and Mappin absolutely, inter alia, the furniture, fixtures and effects, crops and tillages, of him the said J. Boulton, subject to a proviso for redemption on payment to Bradley and Mappin of the sum of 196*l.* 6s. 5d. and interest, on demand; and in default of payment thereof on demand a power of sale was given to Bradley and Mappin. The indenture contained a covenant by Boulton with Bradley and Mappin to pay, on demand, the said sum of 196*l.* 6s. 5d. and interest; and also the following viz.:—

"If default be made in payment of the said sum of 196*l.* 6s 5d. and interest, in manner aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said William Bradley and John Newton Mappin, their executors, administrators, and assigns, immediately thereupon or at any time thereafter, to seize and take possession of all and singular the said furniture, goods, chattels, stock, crops, tillages, and premises, and hold and enjoy the same to and for their own absolute use and benefit, for ever discharged from the aforesaid proviso for redemption thereof and all equity thereupon, without any hindrance from or by the said John Boulton, his executors, administrators, or assigns, or any other person whomsoever, and that freed and discharged from all former and other charges, liens, and incumbrances whatsoever."

Then followed a covenant for further assurance, and the following proviso:—

"Provided always, and it is hereby declared and agreed, that until default shall be made in payment of the said principal sum of 196*l.* 6s. 5d. and interest, contrary to the covenant hereinbefore contained for payment thereof, it shall be lawful for the said John Boulton, his executors and administrators, to hold, make use of, possess, and enjoy all and singular the said furniture, goods, chattels, stock, crops, tillages, and premises, without any hindrance or denial from or by the said William Bradley and John Newton Mappin, their executors, administrators, or assigns."

The case then stated that Boulton, before he entered upon the above-mentioned inn, or executed the aforesaid bill of sale, was indebted to the said Robert Taylor in 90*l.* 3s. 2d.; for which, on the 11th of August, 1842, he bonâ fide gave a warrant of attorney to Taylor, payable by instalments. Judgment was signed thereon on the 9th of May, 1843, and a writ of fieri facias, under which writ the defendant, as sheriff, seized in execution all the goods and chattels at the College Inn comprised in the said bill of sale given by Boulton to the plaintiffs. At the time of the seizure the case stated that the said goods and chattels were and continued in the possession and under the control of Boulton, under and subject to the said bill of sale and the claims and rights of the plaintiffs under the same, and the debt mentioned in the said bill of sale remained unpaid. The plaintiffs, on the 15th of May, 1843, gave Taylor and the defendant notice that the goods seized were the property of the plaintiffs; but, notwithstanding, the goods were sold, and the proceeds received by the defendant, to recover which the action was brought.

The question for the opinion of the Court (which was to be at liberty to draw all the inferences which a jury might), was whether, under the circumstances above detailed, the plaintiffs, as against the said Robert Taylor, were entitled to the said goods and chattels taken in execution by the defendant.

Manning, Serjt. for the plaintiffs, contended that, as the case expressly found that the bill of sale had been bonâ fide given to the plaintiffs, it was good against the execution creditor. The Court then called on Channell, Serjt. (Overend with him) for the defendant, who submitted that the plaintiffs were not entitled to maintain trover, as no demand had been made on Boulton for payment of the said sum of 196*l.* 6s. 5d. and therefore, under the terms of the bill of sale, the plaintiffs were not, at time of the alleged conversion, entitled to the possession.

Manning, Serjt. submitted that the effect of Taylor, the execution creditor, taking possession under the writ of execution was the same as an absolute assignment to him of the goods by Boulton, which put it out of the power of the latter even to restore them to the plaintiffs, which destroyed therefore the bailment, being equivalent to a conversion by Boulton himself. The case of Gordon v. Harper (7 T. R. 9) was referred to and distinguished; Sir Anthony Main's case (5 Rep. 20) was cited.

TINDAL, C. J.—Ever since the case of Gordon v. Harper, it has been held that the plaintiff must have the right of possession, as well as the right of property, to maintain the action of trover. That case has been followed by several others, and I cannot distinguish that case from this, except that there the right of possession was parted with for a certain time; here it was for an uncertain time. The right of the plaintiffs to the possession is only if default be made in payment of the debt on demand; but no demand appears to have been made, and therefore they were not in a situation to have the possession of the furniture at the time of the conversion, and consequently cannot recover them in trover.

COLTMAN, J.—The case of Cooper v. Willomatt (suprà, p. 173) was decided by us a few days since, and arose under circumstances somewhat analogous to the present. That was where goods were demised to a party who was to deliver them up to the plaintiff on demand, and the party had himself wrongfully disposed of the property by selling it out and out. We held that the plaintiff might maintain trover without having made a demand, but it was expressly on the ground that the bailee had himself determined the bailment. Sir Anthony Main's case, though not there cited, would have been an authority which would have expressly distinguished that case from Gordon v. Harper. Here, as my lord in the course of the argument has pointed out, the plaintiffs' right to the possession on demand was subject to the option of the other party, of paying instead the mortgage-money.

MAULE, J.—The present case cannot be distinguished from Gordon v. Harper, which has been always acted on, and cannot be overruled by us.

CRESSWELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. The bill of sale did not give the plaintiffs a present right of possession to the goods, and this has not been altered by a sale by the sheriff. In order to entitle the plaintiffs to recover, there must have been a demand and a failure of payment; but here neither has happened. Judgment for defendant.

GULLIVER v. COSENS.

Money had and received will not lie to recover a sum of money paid, in order to obtain the release of cattle distrained for damage feasant, though the sum paid greatly exceed in amount the damage done.

Debt for money had and received. Plea—Never indebted.

At the trial before Alderson, B. at the last Spring Assizes, at Lewes, it appeared that cattle of the plaintiff having trespassed on certain lands of the defendant, the latter had distrained them. The plaintiff afterwards applied to have his cattle restored, but made no tender of any sum for the injury the cattle had committed. The defendant demanded the sum of 2*l.* 15s. 9d. which the plaintiff paid, under protest, in order to obtain his cattle. The plaintiff contending that the damage done was to an amount far less than the sum so paid, brought the present action to recover the excess. The learned judge at the trial nonsuited the plaintiff, with liberty to move the Court to set the same aside, and enter a verdict for him for 2*l.* 10s. 9d. the jury finding that the damage actually done by the cattle was not more than 5s. A rule nisi for that purpose having been obtained, Channell, Serjt. now shewed cause, and contended that the law had in this case given a specific remedy, namely, replevin, where cattle have been improperly distrained, and that this form of action did not lie.

Cases cited: Sheriff v. James (1 Bing. 341); Browne v. Powell (4 Bing. 230); Lindon v. Hooper (Cowp. 414); Knibbs v. Hall (1 Esp. 84); Skeate v. Beale (11 A. & E. 983); Ashmole v. Wainwright (2 Q. B. 846).

Dowling, Serjt. (Bovill with him), in support of the rule, submitted that the present differed from Lindon v. Hooper, as the distress there was wrongful, whereas here it was otherwise, and the plaintiff must have failed in the replevin suit. The defendant had done wrong in demanding an exorbitant sum for the damage done, and no tender by the plaintiff was necessary.

Cases cited: Smith v. Sleap (12 M. & W. 585), Shaw v. Woodcock (7 B. & C. 73), and Jones v. Carleton (9 M. & W. 675).

TINDAL, C. J.—I am of opinion that this rule for entering a verdict for the plaintiff ought to be discharged. The question is one which is to receive its decision from the consideration on which of the parties the law has imposed the necessity of making a sufficient tender. The plaintiff was the wrong-doer, it was his sheep which had committed the trespass on the defendant's property; undoubtedly, therefore, the law put on the plaintiff the danger of tendering the right sum by way of amends, and not on the other party the danger of making the right demand. The law cannot be stated clearer than it is in The Six Carpenters' case (8 Rep. 290), where it is said, "That if the lord or his bailiff comes to distrain, and before the distress the tenant tenders the arrears upon the land, then the distress taken for it is tortious. The same law of damage-feasant, if before the distress he tenders sufficient amends;"—"that tender upon the land before the distress makes the distress tortious; tender after the distress and before the impounding makes the detainer and not the taking wrongful; tender after the impounding makes neither the one nor the other wrongful." That clearly shews on whom the law imposes the necessity of making the tender. It is impossible to get over the case of Lindon v. Hooper without saying that that case is not law; but I never heard that it was doubted from the time it was decided down to the present. This case does not fall within those where it has been held that money may be recovered in this form of action, which has been paid under duress of goods; but it is to be governed by that of Lindon v. Hooper, followed by Knibbs v. Hall.

The rest of the Court concurring,

The rule was discharged.

NEEDHAM v. FRASER.

In an action against a witness for not obeying a subpœna, the declaration alleged that the plaintiff had a good cause of action in the action in which the defendant was subpœnaed as a witness, and that the testimony of the defendant was material evidence for the plaintiff; neither of which allegations was traversed by the defendant in his pleas. The declaration also averred that the defendant did not appear as witness, and that by reason thereof the plaintiff was obliged to withdraw the record.

Held, that on these pleadings the defendant was estopped from reading at the trial the record in the original action, for the purpose of shewing that the plaintiff had therein no cause of action, and therefore sustained no damage by withdrawing the record.

Case.—The declaration recited an action on the case for slander, brought in this court by the present plaintiff against one Dowling, and a writ of subpœna ad testificandum directed to the now defendant to give evidence on the trial of the issue in such action the part of the now plaintiff. The declaration, after alleging service of such writ of subpœna on the now defendant, contained the following averment: that the said action came and was called on to be tried at the time, to wit, &c. and at the place, &c. and that the plaintiff had a good cause of action in the said action; and although the defendant could and might, in obedience to the said writ of subpœna, have appeared at the trial of the issue in the said action when the same was so called and came on to be tried as aforesaid, and could and might, in obedience to the said writ of subpœna, have testified the truth according to his knowledge at the time and place aforesaid at the said trial of the said issue; and although his testimony of the truth according to his knowledge was material evidence for the now plaintiff at the trial of the said action, whereof the defendant then had notice, yet the defendant, not regarding, &c. did not nor would appear as a witness at the time and place, &c.; by reason whereof, and because the plaintiff could not proceed to the trial of the said issue without the testimony of the now defendant, he, the plaintiff, was then, to wit, on, &c. forced and obliged to withdraw, and did then withdraw, the nisi prius record of the said issue. The damages in consequence were stated to be the liability of the plaintiff to pay to the said Dowling the costs incurred by reason of the withdrawing the record, and money which the plaintiff had paid for the trial of the issue and costs of suit.

Pleas—First, Not guilty; second, Leave and license; and third, that the plaintiff could have proceeded to the trial of the said issue without the testimony of the defendant; concluding to the country.

At the trial before Lord Denman at the last Surrey assizes, the plaintiff gave evidence of defendant's absence as a witness, and as part of the proof of the withdrawal of the record in the action of Needham v. Dowling, put the record itself in evidence. The defendant's counsel thereupon insisted that he had a right to read that record, and certain affidavits referred to and set out in the declaration contained therein, in order to shew that the plaintiff in Needham v. Dowling had no cause of action, and therefore was a gainer, and not a loser, by withdrawing the record. Lord Denman was of opinion that this could not be done, and that the plaintiff was entitled to costs incurred by any culpable absence of the defendant; but his lordship wished it to be referred to the Court as to the admissibility in evidence of the record and affidavits, to shew that for want of any cause of action no damage had been sustained, and for the Court also to say what class of costs the plaintiff might be entitled to. A verdict was then taken by consent for the plaintiff for the damages in the declaration, subject to a reference to the Court. A rule nisi having been obtained last Easter Term for a nonsuit or a new trial,

Shee, Serjt. now shewed cause, and contended that the admission by the defendant upon the pleadings in the now action that the plaintiff had a good cause of action in the action of Needham v. Dowling, and that the testimony of the defendant was material evidence for the plaintiff at the trial of such action, estopped the defendant from shewing at the trial that no damage had been sustained by the plaintiff in the former action, by reason of his not having therein any cause of action.

Channell, Serjt. (with him Bramwell) contra.—

The averment in the declaration that the plaintiff had no good cause of action was an immaterial one, and therefore not admitted. [MAULE, J.—The defendant would then be seeking to be allowed to prove an immaterial matter.] It was submitted that, as in this action, which did not arise out of a breach of contract, the plaintiff could not recover for the tort unless some damage had resulted to him in consequence, the defendant was at liberty to shew that the plaintiff had in fact sustained no damage. [CRESSWELL, J.—If the allegation in the declaration, that the plaintiff had a good cause of action were struck out, would the plaintiff be shewn to have sustained an injury sufficient to sustain the action?] Yes, it is submitted there would; the allegation that the testimony was material evidence has been held to excuse the absence of the words that the plaintiff had a good cause of action. (Masterman v. Judson, 8 Bing. 224; Mullett v. Hunt, 1 C. & M. 752; Amey v. Long, 9 East, 473; and Davis v. Lovell, 4 M. & W. 678.) It would be difficult to maintain that the action could be supported without either, but it is submitted that one is traversed. The third plea traverses what at least is equivalent to the allegation, that the testimony was material, and the defendant was therefore entitled to use this evidence.

COLTMAN, J. (a)—The defendant endeavoured to put in the affidavit for the purpose of shewing that the plaintiff in the original action had no good cause of action; but I am of opinion that such evidence was not admissible, as it would be contradictory to matter alleged on this record. Then it was urged that if this evidence was not admissible, yet, at any rate, the defendant had a right to look at the record in the original action, and that the record, when looked at, shewed on the face of it that a judgment thereon would be liable to be arrested, and, probably, there is little doubt but that the declaration in such action was insufficient, and would have been open to objection in arrest of judgment. Still, a party is not entitled therefore to say that there was not a good cause of action, when there is an admission by him on his plea that there was a good cause of action in that original suit. The plaintiff, therefore, in my opinion, is entitled to recover the amount of the costs he was put to, and also the costs he became liable to in consequence of the defendant's absence.

MAULE, J.—I am of the same opinion; the defendant cannot be allowed to prove what would be inconsistent with his own admission.

CRESSWELL, J.—It has been contended by my brother Channell that the averment that the plaintiff had a good cause of action was not admitted, because it was not a material allegation. It may be true that a declaration may be framed so as to be good without any such averment; various issues may be shewn to have existed, for which the evidence of the witness may have been material, and that the plaintiff sustained damage in consequence of the absence of the witness; but when the matter rests on an averment that the plaintiff had a good cause of action, surely such averment was a material one. Then, respecting receiving in evidence the former record; although the record was evidence for the purpose for which it was received, namely that there was such a record, it was not evidence for the purpose of contradicting what was admitted on this record. The measure of damages the plaintiff will be entitled to are the costs which have been wasted by the defendant's culpable absence.

Rule discharged

STEPHENS v. LOWNDES.

An appearance entered by the plaintiff for an infant defendant is not a nullity, but error. The Court however will set aside the same without costs, to save the necessity of bringing error.

Shee, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the appearance filed for the defendant, declaration and judgment, and execution thereon, should not be set aside for irregularity. The action was brought against an infant of the age of 18, on a bill of exchange accepted by him for 60*l*. The defendant not appearing, the plaintiff, on the 4th February last, entered an appearance for him under the statute. Judgment was signed on the 24th February last, and on the 12th April the defendant was taken on a ca. sa. If this was only a mere irregularity, it was admitted that it had been cured by the lapse of time. The cases of Roberts v. Spurr (3 Dowl. 551) and Nunn v. Curtis (4 Dowl. 729), cited on moving for the rule, were referred to, and it was contended that they did not shew that such an appearance was a nullity, and that the statute enabling plaintiffs to appear for a defendant applied equally to infant defendants.

Byles, Serjt. in support of the rule, submitted that whether it was a nullity or error or not, it was clear that it was what could not be done. Tidd, 9th ed. 99; Chitty's Arch. 7th ed. 893, shew that a common appearance cannot be entered by the plaintiff for the defendant, but that it is necessary to have a judge's order, which must be served on the infant before it can become absolute, so that the defendant would have two notices of the action.

(a) TINDAL, C. J. was absent.

The COURT expressed a strong opinion against the appearance being a mere nullity, and after referring to Comyn's Dig. Plead. 2, C. 2, where he says, "In an action against an infant, he must appear only by guardian, for he has not knowledge of his own affairs, or to choose a man to plead well for him, and may have an action against his guardian if he loses by mispleading," said that it seemed to shew that the law looked upon its being essential that an infant should appear only by guardian, and that if he appeared otherwise, error might be brought, and that therefore the case of Nunn v. Curtis applied.

WILKES v. HOPKINS.

An admission under a judge's order, in which a bill of exchange is described as a bill "drawn upon, and directed to, the above-named defendants, as the Newbridge Coal Company," and to be accepted by "one Henry Bishop, for the defendants, as the Newbridge Coal Company, payable at Messrs. Jones, Lloyd, and Co. bankers, London," is evidence that the defendants constitute such company; that the bill is accepted by Bishop for the company, and that it is payable at a London banker's. Where, however, it appears from the defendants' affidavits that they have been taken by surprise by the extent of their admission, and that they have been prevented from entering into their real defence at the trial, the Court, on payment of costs, will give another opportunity of trying the case.

Talfourd, Serjt. and W. J. Alexander, Q.C. on a former day, shewed cause.

Byles, Serjt. and Gray, contrà.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This was an action upon a bill of exchange drawn by the plaintiff "on the Newbridge Coal Company, Forest Dean, Gloucestershire," and accepted "at Messrs. Jones, Lloyd, and Co. for the Newbridge Coal Company, Henry Bishop." The defendants pleaded, amongst other pleas, that they did not accept; and at the trial before me at the last Summer Assizes for the county of Gloucester, it was objected by the defendants that there was no evidence that Henry Bishop, who had signed the acceptance, had any authority to accept for them. The plaintiff, however, contended, that by the form of the admission entered into by the defendants, they were prevented from taking this objection, which appeared to me to be the case. And the question which has been argued, on a motion for a new trial, has been whether the bill of exchange was properly received in evidence. The admission was given under a judge's order, made in the usual form under the general rule, Hil. Term, 4 Wm. 4; and the argument for the defendants has been, that admissions given under such order do, by the very terms of the order, bind the party to admit no more than that the documents therein mentioned to be originals are written, signed, and executed "as they purport respectively to have been," and that as the bill of exchange, when produced, purports to be drawn by the plaintiff on the Newbridge Coal Company, and to be accepted for the Newbridge Coal Company by Henry Bishop; so, nothing more is admitted than that the acceptance for the Newbridge Coal Company is in the handwriting of Henry Bishop; but there is neither an admission that the defendants are the persons who constitute the Newbridge Coal Company, nor that Henry Bishop had any authority from them to accept bills on their behalf. How far this might have been the case if the bill had been set out in the notice to admit in the precise terms in which it purports to have been drawn, that is, if it had been described as a bill drawn on the Newbridge Coal Company, and it had been accepted for the Newbridge Coal Company by Henry Bishop, we are not called upon to determine. For in this case the bill is described in the notice to admit as a bill "drawn upon and directed to the above-named defendants, as the Newbridge Coal Company," and to be "accepted by one Henry Bishop for the defendants, as the Newbridge Coal Company, payable at Messrs. Jones, Lloyd, and Co. bankers, London;" so that the facts, that the defendants constitute the Newbridge Coal Company—that the bill is accepted by Henry Bishop for the defendants—and that it is payable at a London banker's,—these facts not appearing on the face of the bill, are plainly and unequivocally admitted under this notice. A defendant undoubtedly may, if he thinks proper, bind himself by the form of his admission, more largely than he could be called upon to do under any ordinary notice to admit, and this, we think, the defendants have done upon the present occasion, and that it would be giving them an unfair advantage, after an admission in these terms, which imports, in its natural and ordinary sense, that Bishop had authority to accept for the defendants, if they should be allowed at the trial to set up the want of such authority. As, however, we see reason to believe, from the affidavits, that the defendants were themselves taken by surprise by the extent to which their admission had been carried; and as they allege themselves to have been prevented thereby from entering into their real defence at the trial, we think it reasonable that there should be an opportunity of new-modelling their admission; and that, therefore, a new trial should be had on payment of costs by the defendants.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Friday, May 30.

RAWLINSON v. CLARKE. (a)

Action for breach of contract.

A covenant not "to carry on or exercise the practice or profession of a surgeon or apothecary, either by residing or visiting any patient," is not broken by visiting several patients with the knowledge and assent of the party covenanted with, if done to assist him, and not adversely to his interests.

This was an action brought against the defendant, who was a surgeon, for a breach of covenant. At the trial, it appeared that the defendant, having sold his business to the plaintiff, who was also a surgeon, had covenanted, under a penalty of 500*l*. "not directly or indirectly, by himself or in copartnership with any other person or persons, to carry on or exercise the practice or profession of a surgeon and apothecary, or either of them, either by residing or visiting any patient within three miles of the then place of residence of the said T. Clarke, in Park-street, Camden-town." There was also a clause in the deed by which it was covenanted that Clarke should continue to reside in Park-street, and continue to carry on the business to assist Rawlinson, and introduce him to the patients, for the space of one year, receiving one moiety of the profits for that time. This the defendant did; but some short time after the year had expired, he was sent for by a lady whom he had always been in the habit of attending to attend her during her confinement, which he accordingly did; but all the medicine ordered was sent from Rawlinson's, and Rawlinson himself was cognizant of the fact, and attended the lady once himself. There was also one similar case of attendance by the defendant proved; but it was shewn to be at the request of the plaintiff; and in this case it appeared that there was a payment by the patient to Clarke of fourteen guineas.

Three questions were left to the jury: first, whether attending the lady as an accoucheur was acting as a surgeon; secondly, whether the patients were attended to assist Rawlinson; and, thirdly, whether, at all events, they were attended with his knowledge and assent. The jury found all these questions in the affirmative, and assessed the damages at fourteen guineas, as being the sum received from the patient; the learned judge, however, who tried the cause directed the verdict to be entered for 500 gs. giving the defendant's counsel leave to move to enter a verdict for the defendant, if the Court should be of opinion that no breach of covenant had been committed, or to reduce the damages to 14 guineas, if they should think the proviso in the deed could be treated as a penalty, and not as liquidated damages.

Crowder, Q. C. having obtained a rule last Term on the first point only,

Watson, Q. C. and Henderson now shewed cause, and contended that the attending patients within the prescribed distance was a clear breach of the covenant, and that its having been done with the knowledge of the plaintiff could not alter the question. [ROLFE, B —It seems to me that the words of this covenant clearly import an adverse carrying on of the business, either individually or in copartnership. Now here the jury have found that this was done to assist Rawlinson.] Then leave and license by parol will be no excuse for breaking a covenant by deed. [ALDERSON, B.—Yes, but the only question here is, whether or no this covenant is broken by the defendant helping Rawlinson.] The finding of the jury, it is submitted, is substantially that he did break the contract by visiting a patient; besides, he had the fourteen guineas. [POLLOCK, B.—Yes, but then comes the question of whether he received it adversely to Rawlinson. I may be that he took it for him and held it on some question of account between them. The question is, was this a carrying on the business by Clarke adverse to Rawlinson.]

Crowder, Q. C. and Charnock appeared to support their rule, but were not called on by the Court.

POLLOCK, C. B.—The question here is, whether the defendant is guilty of a breach of contract. Now all the facts proved on behalf of the plaintiff at the trial were, that on several occasions the defendant visited sick persons; but not only was such attendance known to the plaintiff, but requested by him and was evidently done to keep the patients together, and the jury have found that he did so to assist Rawlinson, and not with a view of carrying on the business and profession of a surgeon for himself. But then it is said that he received fourteen guineas. I do not think that at all alters the question. It may be that he is liable to account to Rawlinson for it; or it may be, that there are disputed accounts between them. I think, however, it is clear that the defendant was not carrying on business on his own account.

ALDERSON, B.—I am of the same opinion; it seems to me to be a mere question of fact, whether or no there has been a breach of contract. Now I agree that leave and license would be no answer if pleaded; but I think that it is very material evidence to shew, that, in fact, there has been no breach, as the acts constituting the supposed breach were done to assist Rawlinson. The rest of the Court concurring, Rule absolute.

BENBOW v. JONES.

Action against a stakeholder.

The decision of a steward at a steeple-chase is final, although made without hearing the parties.

This was an action against a stakeholder for a certain sum of money, being the amount of the stakes to be run for in a steeple-chase of which the plaintiff claimed to be the winner. It appeared that, by one of the rules and regulations under which the race was to be run, no paid riders were to be allowed to ride; another of the rules was, that the steward was to decide all disputes.

At the trial it was proved that, some little time before the race, a dispute arose whether or not a man named Walker, who was to ride the plaintiff's horse, was a paid jockey or not; and the steward told the plaintiff, that if Walker rode his horse, "it would be no horse in the race." Walker, however, did ride the horse, and it came in first. Disputes again arising as to whether the plaintiff was entitled to the stakes, a case was submitted by the consent of both parties to the editor of Bell's Life in London, who decided that Walker was not a paid jockey, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the stakes. The steward, however, directed the money to be paid to the owner of the second horse, on which the present action was brought against the stakeholder, two questions were left to the jury: first, whether Walker was a paid jockey; second, whether there had been any proper decision by the steward. Both these questions having been found in the negative, the learned judge directed the verdict to be entered for the plaintiff, giving the defendant leave to move to enter a nonsuit. A rule nisi having been obtained by Talfourd, Serjt.

Whately, Q.C. and T. W. Smith shewed cause, and contended that the steward had never properly decided the point, as it was never properly before him, and he had not heard the parties. Then the fact of there having been no decision was shewn by all the parties agreeing to be bound by the opinion of the editor of Bell's Life. Both points having been left to the jury at the trial, and found for the plaintiff, there was no ground for this rule.

Talfourd, Serjt. in support of his rule.—The conditions of the race were that the decision of the steward was to be final; and before the race he decided that if Walker rode the plaintiff's horse, it was to be no horse in the race; and it cannot be contended that it was necessary for him to have all the parties before him before he could make his decision. The very object of his appointment was to have a decision on all disputes at once. Stopped by the Court.

By the COURT.—The question reserved here seems to have been whether this decision of the steward, made without hearing the parties, was good in law, and we are of opinion it was, and that the steward had a right to decide the question at once. Then that he did decide is evident, as he directed the money to be paid over. Rule absolute to enter a nonsuit.

HEATH v. DURAND and OTHERS.

Pleading—New rules—Several pleas.

Where it is doubtful that a plea sought to be added to those already pleaded raises the same defence as one which is already on the record, or is sought to be added, the Court will make a rule absolute to add it, leaving the other party to come to the Court to strike it out, if he can satisfy them it is essentially the same as the other, and raises the same defence.

This was a rule obtained by Jervis, Q.C. calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the defendant should not be at liberty to add certain pleas. It appeared that this was an action against the underwriters on a policy of insurance on a vessel; and the plaintiff declared for a total loss. The defendants pleaded twenty-six pleas, and subsequently took out a summons before a judge for leave to add three others, but the learned judge only gave them leave to plead two, giving them leave to make their choice. The present rule having been obtained, Crowder, Q.C. now shewed cause, and contended that the first and third of the three new pleas sought to be pleaded were, in fact, the same, and raised the same defence; and, therefore, under the new rules, could not be pleaded. [POLLOCK, C.B.—The difficulty is this, are the pleas the same in substance or not? For if there is any doubt about it, the Court will allow them.] Jenkins v. Treloar (1 M. & W. 16) is in point; and there the Court held they had no power to allow two counts claiming the same subject-matter on different contracts. Now, here, it is submitted, that the same defence is sought to be set up, only in a different form.

Jervis, Q.C. (Greenwood with him) in support of his rule, was stopped by the Court.

ALDERSON, B.—As it seems to be doubtful whether or not the plea sought to be added does raise the same defence essentially as the other, I think this rule should be made absolute. The plaintiff can then, if he think fit, come here and obtain a rule to strike it out, if he can satisfy the Court that it is essentially the same as the other. Rule absolute.

BAIL COURT.

Saturday, May 31.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

REG. v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE TOTNES UNION, Devon.

Mandamus to guardians of a poor-law union, commanding them to give out-door relief, pursuant to an order of justices.

Greenwood moved for a mandamus commanding the above guardians to administer out-door relief to one Elizabeth Perrin, a pauper aged 76, pursuant to the order of two justices, made under the 27th section of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 72 (the Poor-law Amendment Act). Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF BIRMINGHAM.

Quære, whether a news-room is within the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36 (an Act to exempt from county, borough, parochial, and other local rates, land and buildings occupied by scientific or literary societies)?

Archbold moved for a rule calling upon the above justices to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue, commanding them to issue their warrant to levy a distress for poor-rates due in respect of the Birmingham news-room. It appeared that the news-room in question had been duly assessed, and the proprietors not paying the assessment, they were summoned to shew cause why a warrant should not issue to levy the amount. When before the magistrates they claimed exemption for the premises, under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, s. 1, which enacts, "that from and after the 1st October, 1843, no person or persons shall be assessed or rated, or liable to be assessed or rated, or liable to pay to any county, borough, parochial, or other local rates or cesses, in respect of any land, houses, buildings, or parts of houses or buildings, belonging to any society instituted for purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts exclusively, either as tenant or as owner, and occupied by it for the transaction of its business, and for carrying into effect its purposes, provided that such society shall be supported wholly or in part by annual voluntary contributions, and shall not, and by its laws may not, make any dividend, gift, division, or bonus in money, unto or between any of its members; and provided also, that such society shall obtain the certificate of the barrister-at-law or lord advocate, as hereinafter mentioned." The news-room in question had been duly certified, but the proprietors were in the habit of receiving advertisements, which were posted in the room, and for which a payment was made to the society, the members of which paid an annual subscription of 2*l*. 2*s*., and there being no rule that no dividend, gift, division, or bonus should be made amongst its members. The exemption thus claimed was resisted on the grounds,—1st, that this was not a building instituted for purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts exclusively; and 2nd, that there was no law of the society to forbid the making of any dividend, &c. amongst its members. Upon the hearing, the justices declined to issue their warrant without the authority of this Court. The present application was made upon the two grounds above mentioned. Rule nisi.

REG. v. PAYNTER, Esq.

Rule nisi to permit parties interested to amend return to a mandamus.

C. Clark moved for a rule to shew cause why Mr. Chasemore, one of the shareholders of Putney Bridge, should not have liberty to make a return to the mandamus herein, or amend the return already made by Mr. Paynter.

A rule nisi having formerly been granted calling upon Mr. Paynter, a magistrate of the Police Court at Wandsworth, to shew cause why he should not issue his warrant of distress to levy upon the goods of Mr. Chasemore the sum of 48*l*. 10*s*. being the amount assessed upon him jointly with others in and by a rate made for the relief of the poor of St. Mary, Putney, in respect of Putney Bridge, cause was shewn on the the 7th of May inst. (see 9 Justice of the Peace, 311), when the rule was made absolute.

A return has since been made by Mr. Paynter, stating certain objections as respects himself, but not raising the objections upon which the shareholders were desirous of relying. A similar rule had been granted and made absolute in Reg. v. Ackerley and Another, Justices of Kent (9 Justice of the Peace, 83). Rule nisi.

SIDNEY v. MACGILL.

Affidavit of service of rule, insufficiency thereof.

Cross moved to make absolute a rule to compute on an affidavit of service, which stated that the deponent "did, on the 24th day of May instant, serve the above-named defendant with the rule hereunto annexed, by delivering a true copy thereof to a female of the name of Bates, in her dwelling-house, Mount Pleasant, in Liverpool, aforesaid, and in which said dwelling-house the said defendant now lodges or occupies apartments." This affidavit was sworn on the 27th of May inst.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The affidavit will not do; it does not state that the defendant was residing at the house at the time of the service, nor does it shew that the woman was in any way connected with the defendant.

Monday, June 2.

DOE dem. ANSON v. ROE.

The tenant in ejectment may move the Court to stay proceedings before entering into the consent rule.

This was a rule of considerable length, the real object of which was to compel the lessor of the plaintiff to elect upon which of two ejectments he would proceed, and to pay the costs of the other ejectment.

Martin, Q. C. shewed cause, and submitted that the tenant, on whose behalf this application was made, was not in condition to make any application to the Court, as he had not appeared or entered into the consent rule, citing Doe dem. Crocket v. Roe (1 Hall, 351); Doe dem. Greenacre v. Roe (2 Jurist, 568). He submitted, secondly, that the Court would not interfere in this case, as the ejectments were both brought bonâ fide, the first under the statute 1 Geo. 4, the second at common law, in case they should fail to bring themselves within the provision of that statute.

J. W. Smith, contrà, submitted that the Court would interfere. With regard to the objection that the tenant was not in a condition to come before the Court, he submitted that the general practice, and a whole chain of authorities, were at variance with the Bail Court decisions referred to by his learned friend, citing Doe dem. Fielden v. Roe (8 T. R. 645); Doe dem. Standish v. Roe (5 B. & A. 878); Adams on Ejectments.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The rule must be absolute without costs. Rule absolute accordingly.

In the matter of the Arbitration between THOMAS ANDREWES, WILLIAM ANDREWES, JOHN ANDREWES, and ROBERT ANDREWES.

An award was to be made within one calendar month "next after the reference;" the reference was on the 1st March, and the award on the 1st April: Held, in time.

The affidavit for the attachment alleged a demand of payment directed by the award, and a refusal to pay, but did not sufficiently negative the fact of the money not having been paid: Held, sufficient. And where an award directs a conveyance by A B, a tender of the necessary deed must be made to A B, in order to found an application for an award, although it may be the duty of A B to prepare the conveyance.

Where the rule was for an attachment against A and B jointly for non-performance of an award, and the affidavits shewed a non-payment of one sum by A, and of another sum by B, due from them severally, the Court discharged the rule.

Henderson shewed cause against a rule calling upon John Andrewes and Robert Andrewes to shew cause why an attachment should not issue against them for non-performance of an award. He submitted—first, that the award was not made in time. The award, which was to be made within one calendar month next after the reference, was not made until the 1st of April, the reference being on the 1st of March. It was submitted that the day on which the reference was made was to be included in the month, and that the last day for making the award was, therefore, the 31st of March. He admitted that it would be different if the words had been next after the day of the reference. Secondly, he contended that the affidavit was bad for not sufficiently shewing a breach. The affidavit stated a demand of payment and refusal, without alleging that the money was still due at the time of the demand. And, thirdly, he contended that there were substantial grounds upon the merits why this rule should be refused. The award directed two things to be done; it directed a joint execution of a certain deed by both the defendants, and also payment of two sums of money, to be paid by the two defendants severally, the one by John Andrewes and the other by Robert Andrewes. With regard to the execution of the deed, there was no sufficient tender, nor had the arbitrator power to direct an assignment of debts. With regard to the non-payment of the money, the grounds of complaint were several, and could not, therefore, form the subject of a joint attachment.

WIGHTMAN, J. requested Stock, who was on the other side, to direct his attention to the third objection. He thought there was nothing in the preliminary objections With regard to that as to the time, it had been decided that from an act meant the same as from the day of an act. (Hardy v. Ryan, 9 B. & C.)

Stock then submitted that it was not necessary to tender the deed at all, as the parties were bound to make the assignment. (Doe dem. Clarke v. Stilwell.) He was therefore entitled to the rule as to the deed. With regard to the non-payment of money, the Court might mould the rule, and grant separate attachments against each. At any rate, he was entitled to the rule as against one.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I think it is quite clear that you cannot have an attachment for not executing a deed without tendering it. Doe v. Stilwell is not in point: that was a case of surrender of a copyhold. There no conveyance was necessary, and there was a demand of surrender and refusal. With regard to the other part of the award, the rule shewed in which the breach of the award consisted, and alleged it was for non-payment of the money. I might perhaps grant separate attachments against each, but I cannot do so, as the rule is general for breach of the award. Rule refused.

Tuesday, June 3.

Ex parte MATTHEW GALE.

Discharge of a prisoner on a habeas corpus for defect in the warrant of commitment.

Bramwell having on a former day obtained a writ of habeas corpus to bring up Matthew Gale, who was a prisoner in the Durham gaol, to which he had been committed for an alleged offence against the 25th section of the Mutiny Act, the 8 Vict. c. 8, now, on an affidavit of the due service of notice of the writ on the committing magistrates, on the Secretary-at War, and the general agent for the recruiting service in London, applied for the discharge of the prisoner, who was brought up in custody of the gaoler, no cause being shewn by any other party. The offence with which the defendant was charged was that of assisting one Thomas Watson, a deserter from the Coldstream Guards, to conceal himself; the latter part of the 25th section running in the following words: "And any person who shall assist any deserter, knowing him to be such, in deserting or concealing himself, shall forfeit for every such offence the sum of 20*l*." By a subsequent section all offences for which any penalties or forfeitures are imposed not exceeding 20*l*. may be determined, and the penalties recovered before a justice of the peace, under the provision of 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, and the 5 Geo. 4, c. 18 and it provides that, in all cases where there shall not be sufficient goods whereon any penalty or forfeiture can be levied, the offender may be committed and imprisoned for any time not exceeding six months. The objections to the warrant of commitment were as follow: 1st. That it did not allege that there was not sufficient distress whereon to levy the penalty, but merely recited that the said Matthew Gale had been directed to pay the said penalty of 20*l*. or to be imprisoned for six months, and that he had made default in immediate payment of the said sum not averring that there was no sufficient distress. 2nd. That it was not alleged that the offence had been proved upon oath, the expression being "that it was duly proved." (R. v. Lewis, 1 D. & L. 822.) 3rd. That it was not alleged that the hearing was in the prisoner's presence nor that he was called upon for his defence, nor that he had notice of the charge. 4th. That there was no express adjudication that any offence had in fact been committed. Prisoner discharged.

Wednesday, June 4.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF LANCASHIRE.

Under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101 (An Act for the further Amendment of the Laws relating to the Poor in England), the justices are bound to hear the application of a woman applying for an order of bastardy; and it is no answer to such application that the guardians of the union had previously, under the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, and 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85, made an application for an order on the same party in respect of the same child, which order, on a hearing on the merits, was refused.

Martin, Q.C. and Gray shewed cause against a rule obtained by Archbold, calling upon three justices of Lancashire, to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue, directing them to proceed upon an application made before them by Ann Openshaw for an order upon William Porter Holt, as the putative father of a male bastard child.

It appeared that on the 9th of August last an application was made under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85, s. 1, to the justices assembled in petty sessions at Bury, in Lancashire, by the guardians of the Bury union, for an order upon the said W. P. Holt, whom they charged with being the putative father of a male child, then lately born a bastard of the body of the said Ann Openshaw, a single woman, who was then legally settled in a township within the said union, and which child, by reason of the inability of the mother to support it, was chargeable to the said township; that at the said petty sessions the said W. P. Holt declaring that he was desirous that the charge should be heard and determined at the general quarter sessions, entered into the recognizances required by the Act, and the hearing was accordingly referred to the quarter sessions; that at the next quarter sessions, held on the 21st of October following, the application was by consent adjourned to the then next quarter sessions, to be held on the 6th of January 1845, at which sessions the application was heard upon the merits, when the sessions refused to make any order, that on the 18th of January a notice was served on the said W. P. Holt under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 2, summoning him to attend before the justices to answer a charge made by the said Ann Openshaw, who had made complaint that she had been delivered, within six months of the passing of the said Act, of a male bastard child, of which the said W. P. Holt was the father, and who sought for an order to be made upon him for its support; that on the day appointed (the 31st of January) the said W. P. Holt appeared before the justices at petty sessions, and contended, that, as an application for an order had been made by the guardians of the poor of the Bury union under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85, which the Court of Quarter Sessions had on the merits refused to grant, such adjudication was final and conclusive, and that the justices in petty sessions had no power to hear an application for an order made by the woman herself; and the justices being of this opinion, refused to hear the application, whereupon this rule was obtained.

It was now contended, in opposition to the rule, that inasmuch as it was not in dispute that the two applications were in respect of the same child, the decision of the quarter sessions upon the application by the guardians was conclusive of the question, and that the mother had no legal right afterwards to apply for an order on her own behalf. (Rex v. Tenant, 2 Ld. Raym. 1423; 2 Stra. 716; Pridgeon's case, Cro. Car. 341, 350; Rex v. Jenkins, Ca. tem. Hard. 301.) That notwithstanding the proceedings at the quarter sessions were at the instance of the guardians, the application was in substance the same as that afterwards made by the mother; that the legislature never contemplated a double remedy—one by the guardians and one by the mother; and that if this rule were to be made absolute, it could only be made so upon the ground that the mother had a distinct right to apply, independently of the former application by the guardians, so that if the guardians had been successful, she could still on her own behalf have applied, which would be permitting two orders to be made in respect of the same child.

Archbold, contrà.—There has been no adjudication by the quarter sessions on the application by the guardians, the sessions merely refused to make an order, so that it would be impossible to set that decision up as an answer to the application by the woman. Under the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, and the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85, the woman was no party to the application; she was merely a witness, and derived no benefit from the order on the putative father; but under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, she is the party who alone has a right to complain, and she herself receives the amount ordered to be paid. The justices by the latter Act have no discretion upon the subject; they are bound to hear the application of the mother.

WIGHTMAN, J.—This seems to me, according to the words of the Act of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, to be free from doubt, and I think I am bound to make the rule absolute. The Act says, "that any single woman who may be with child, or who may be delivered of a bastard child after the passing of this Act, or who has been delivered of a bastard child" within the period of six calendar months before the birth of such child, or at any time thereafter, upon proof that the man alleged to be the father of such child has, within twelve months next after the birth of such child, paid money for its maintenance, make application to any one justice of the peace acting for the petty sessional division of the county, or for the city, borough, or place in which she may reside, for a summons to be served on the man alleged by her to be the father of such child; and if such application be made before the birth of the child, the woman shall make deposition upon oath stating who is the father of such child." Now that enables the woman undoubtedly to make the application; and then the Act goes on, "and such justice of the peace shall thereupon issue his summons to the person alleged to be the father of such child to appear," &c.; and afterwards the justices are directed to "hear the evidence of such woman and such other evidence as she may produce, and shall also hear any evidence tendered by or on behalf of the person alleged to be the father," &c. Now it seems to me that the Act obliges the justices to hear the case. It is said that there is some difficulty in the matter, as it may be that there has already been an order obtained on the putative father, at the instance of the guardians, and that the defendant may so be liable under two orders; but whether or not such may be the effect it is not material to consider, as I think the justices have no discretion; and I am bound, therefore, to make this rule absolute. Rule absolute.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Thursday, May 22.

(Before Mr. Commissioner FONBLANQUE.)

Re MARY ANN M'KENZIE.

The Court cannot entertain the petition of an insolvent where a vesting order has previously been made in the Insolvent Court.

The insolvent had filed a petition in this Court, and now came up, according to the practice of the Court, for an order for her discharge from custody. She had been in custody since the early part of 1842, upon an execution for damages and costs in an action of trespass. Afterwards, in the same year, a vesting order was made by the Insolvent Court at the instance of the plaintiff in the action, who was the detaining creditor; but the insolvent had not filed her schedule in that court.

Cooke, for the detaining creditor.—The subject-matter of this petition being now before the Insolvent Court, and a vesting order having been made therein, this Court has not power to discharge the insolvent from custody, but must dismiss her petition.

Hughes, for insolvent.—There is no clause in any of the Acts of Parliament relating to insolvents, which deprives this Court of its jurisdiction in such a case as the present. This Court has a concurrent jurisdiction with the Insolvent Court.

Mr. Commissioner FONBLANQUE.—I have no power in this case to make the order. All the property of the insolvent passed from her under the vesting order in the Insolvent Court. The authority of this Court to entertain the petition of an insolvent, depends upon the first clause of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116. That clause presupposes that the insolvent has some estate to be distributed. Here there is not any estate.

Petition dismissed.

Re LACEY and YATES' bankruptcy.

Proof of debt.

Where a bankrupt had agreed to accept a composition from a debtor, and give him a release, and the debtor had subsequently become a creditor of the estate, before such creditor can prove, he must produce the release.

Stodds tendered a proof against the joint estate for a debt of 25*l.* upon an accommodation bill. He produced in evidence a letter from the bankrupts, promising to take up the bill when due, which they neglected to do, and he was obliged in consequence to take it up himself. At the time the bill in question was drawn, the now claimant was a debtor to the bankrupts, but they had agreed to accept 10*s.* in the pound, and, when paid, to give a release for the remainder. The claimant swore that the composition had been paid, but the release had not been executed. He was entered in the bankrupt's balance sheet as a debtor to the estate for 21*l.* 10*s.*, and the debt was there marked as a bad debt. He had proved at a previous meeting a debt of 3*l.* 10*s.* being the difference between the 21*l.* 10*s.*, his debt to the estate, and the 25*l.* the amount of the accommodation bill.

His HONOUR refused to admit the proof, unless the release from the bankrupts was produced.

Monday, May 26.

(Before Mr. Commissioner SHEPHERD.)

Ex parte LAWRENCE & Co.

If a trader who has been summoned under the 5 & 6 Vict. cap. 122, sec. 11, does not file an affidavit, as required by the said Act, he will not be entitled to have the summons dismissed, or to be allowed his costs of appearance.

Messrs. Lawrence & Co., solicitors, had summoned a trader who resided at Liverpool to this Court, under the 5 & 6 Vict. cap. 122, sec. 11. The particulars of demand delivered to the defendant consisted of a bill of costs for business alleged to have been transacted by the plaintiffs as solicitors for the defendant. The defendant did not file an affidavit as required by the Act, but on the day named in the summons appeared in court, and took an objection that the plaintiff's bill of costs had not been taxed.

His HONOUR adjourned the hearing of the summons to a given day, and ordered the bill of costs to be taxed in the meantime. Upon taxation the bill of costs was very considerably reduced in amount, and the defendant immediately paid to the plaintiffs the amount allowed. This being the day to which the summons was adjourned, Braynton, for the defendant (no person appearing for the plaintiffs), moved that the summons be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Commissioner SHEPHERD.—The defendant has not filed an affidavit, as he is required by the Act to do previous to his having the summons dismissed. I cannot therefore dismiss the summons, or give the defendant costs. And as nobody is here to support the summons it will drop.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Wednesday, May 7.

Ex parte HARRIS, re CLOSSON.

Clerk's salary—5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 21.

Where, during the three months previous to the bankruptcy, a clerk had been absent from business, on account of illness, and with the concurrence of the bankrupt, he was held not to be thereby precluded from claiming under the above section.

By an agreement made upon the loan of a sum of money, the borrower engaged the lender as his clerk, at a large salary, the necessary duties of the lender being confined to the cash transactions of the business. There was an actual service in this capacity for a short time previous to the bankruptcy. Held, that the lender was entitled to 30l. under the above section.

This was an application for the reversal of an order made by Mr. Commissioner Fane. The petitioner Harris had, on the 24th of June, 1844, advanced to the bankrupt 550*l.* at 5 per cent. interest. In the agreement made upon that loan being effected, the bankrupt engaged to take Harris as his clerk, at a salary of 222*l.* 10*s.* a year, Harris's duties being confined to the cash department, &c. In the agreement there was a provision for Harris's entering into partnership with the bankrupt, if he thought fit, and there were also various stipulations as to the bankrupt's conduct of the business, which were evidently entered into for securing the repayment of the 550*l.* In November last, Harris being afflicted with asthma, was persuaded by the bankrupt to absent himself from the business, which he did until the bankruptcy, which happened in February last. The petitioner having claimed as a clerk the sum of 30*l.* under the 28th sec. of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, Mr. Commissioner Fane disallowed the claim. This petition was then presented by way of appeal from the Commissioner.

W. M. James, for the petitioner, submitted that there was no necessity that the three months' service should be the last three months previous to the bankruptcy. The ill-health of the petitioner was a sufficient excuse for his absence, and as that absence was with the consent of the bankrupt, the service might be considered as still existing.

Allnutt, for the assignees, argued that the petitioner was not a clerk within the meaning of the section. There was nothing of the character of a servant about his engagement with the bankrupt. He appeared rather as a person embarking his money in the trade, and anxious to avoid the liability of a partnership. His duties were confined to that part of the business which it was important for him to attend to for the security of his money. There being no service also during the last three months, the petitioner was precluded from claiming under this section.

The CHIEF JUDGE said that this was a case in which, considering the cause of absence, he did not think there was that break in the service which would prevent this claim. As to the agreement, he would look into it, and would mention the next day whether he considered there was a sufficient service by the petitioner. If the claim were allowed, it would only be in preference to all other creditors. The costs of the assignees must of course be provided for first.

Note.—The claim was ultimately allowed.

Ex parte MEGAREY, re MEGAREY.

Contingent debt—Proof.

Where a business was given by will to A B, upon condition of his admitting an infant as a partner in the business upon his attaining 21, and in default to pay 1,000l. During the minority of the infant, A B became bankrupt, and it was held that the 1,000l. was a debt, which might be proved against the estate.

The particular question raised on this petition will sufficiently appear from the chief judge's judgment.

Swanston and Chandless, for the petitioner, cited Ex parte Myers (2 Dea. & Ch. 251).

Rogers, for the respondents, was not heard.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—A bankrupt before his bankruptcy took possession of his father's business as a coal merchant, and of the stock belonging to it, upon a certain condition, and by his doing so became personally liable to the fulfilment of that condition. The condition which he thus became personally liable to fulfil was, that in the event of a person then and still a minor attaining his majority, he should admit the minor into the full participation and advantage of one-third of the stock and profits of the business as a partner, and in default thereof should pay 1,000*l.* During the minority, the person under this condition became bankrupt, by which, in my judgment, with all deference to Mr. Swanston's argument, in which, however, I cannot agree, I must consider that for every substantial and practicable purpose it became impossible to fulfil one branch of this condition, viz. to admit him into the full participation and advantage of one-third of the stock and profits of the business. I am not at liberty to look at the possibility, whether probable or improbable, of this subsisting bankruptcy being superseded hereafter; nor to the possibility, whether probable or improbable, of this bankrupt continuing the business or resuming business. Continuing it, it cannot be, for there once having been an effectual bankruptcy, I apprehend it is a new trade, and not a continuance of the old business; my opinion being, that the old business is effectually destroyed by the bankruptcy. Then he becomes liable to pay 1,000*l.* absolutely, subject only to the contingency that the infant should die in its minority. That is a contingency capable of valuation. This point is open to this observation, that the contingency which renders the payment of the debt necessary, subject only to this circumstance, happens, not before the bankruptcy, but eo instanti with the bankruptcy. Assuming that to be as a mere personal obligation acquired by the bankrupt, it is generally the rule that a man cannot enter into a contract depending upon the event of his own bankruptcy. But there are some exceptions; one is, where a man upon his marriage receives a certain amount with his wife, either in settlement or otherwise, and contracts in her favour, in the event of his bankruptcy, to the extent of her fortune; that may be maintained, but not beyond, generally speaking. My opinion is, that a similar principle has application here. The obligation under which the bankrupt became liable arose in respect of assets which he obtained from another quarter, and therefore became a valid obligation. If this is to be received as a mere legacy, the claim accrued; but I have considered that this is not to be treated as a mere legacy. Upon the admitted facts, viewing it as a valid obligation, there is a contract for valuable consideration. There is, then, a personal liability on the part of the bankrupt to pay 1,000*l.* when this minor shall attain 21. That is agreed at the bar to be an interest capable of valuation, and so let it be.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

AN Ecclesiastical Courts Bill is passing through the Lords with the support and approval of every party. How, if at all, it has overcome the difficulties that have beset former projects we are entirely ignorant, not having seen a copy of the fortunate scheme. In the Commons it will doubtless meet with much opposition; for nothing less than a really efficient measure will be permitted to pass that assembly. It is probable, therefore, that whatever pleases the one will not satisfy the other; and thus one of the most monstrous abuses yet lingering unreformed, to the disgrace of the age and the shame of society, will continue for many years untouched by the hand of Reform. The Small Debts Bill is being hurried forward by its parent in breathless haste; and yet, only a few weeks ago, he declared in the House of Lords that he could see no defect in the measure this Bill is introduced to amend. Really a little more consideration should be given the hasty schemes of Lord BROUGHAM. Experience might have taught our legislators the necessity for looking very closely at any of his handyworks. This very Bill, brief as it is, and excellent in principle, not only has many errors, but it is so entirely deficient of all provisions for the carrying out of its principle, that we fear it will prove altogether unmanageable. The term of imprisonment is a great deal too short. Power should be given for its extension to six months at least. Nor is there any limit as to the minimum of debt which is to subject the debtor to the process. As the Bill stands the Court of Bankruptcy may be occupied for half a day in the examination of a pauper who has incurred a debt of nine-pence at the huckster's. Then the Bill is silent as to the consequences of the imprisonment; whether it is to be a release from the debt, or whether the proceedings may be renewed on the reappearance of the debtor. The last clause is a covert attempt to defeat the decision of the Commissioners requiring the presence of an attorney. The principle of the Bill is so excellent, that the country would have great cause to regret were it to be defeated in its progress or rendered impracticable in the working through any defects in its framing: we therefore deprecate the hurrying of it onward, until full deliberation can be given to its contents, and the experience of practitioners brought in aid of its improvement.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

SMALL DEBTS BILL.

TUESDAY, June 3. — On the motion of Lord BROUGHAM, the above bill passed through committee. The noble and learned lord stated that it contained all the remedies which the petitioners had suggested.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS BILL.

THURSDAY, June 5.—Lord COTTENHAM moved, that the House resolve itself into committee upon this bill.—The Bishop of EXETER, after adverting to the circumstances in which the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill of 1843 was introduced, amended, and finally withdrawn, said that in this bill it was attempted to give jurisdiction in spirituals to a lay court, which it was not competent for the State to give; and therefore he moved that the bill be committed that day six months.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said, he gave his support to the bill, because he found that it was very nearly the same as that introduced by the Government last session.—Lord BROUGHAM suggested that the bill be referred to a select committee.—Lord COTTENHAM said, this bill had been sanctioned by all the members of the Government in that house, and had passed the second reading by the unanimous vote of their lordships, and it ought not now to be stopped in its course. The evil was admitted,—ought he to be prevented from applying a remedy?—Lord ABINGER objected to the bill. The ecclesiastical courts had subsisted for 700 years, and he thought the abolition of those ancient jurisdictions was uncalled for. He should support the amendment for referring the bill to a select committee.—The LORD CHANCELLOR put the question that the bill be referred to a select committee, and declared that the "Contents" had it.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TITHE SETTLEMENT.

TUESDAY, June 3.—Viscount ERRINGTON said there were a great number of tithe cases which were waiting to be settled by a decision of the law courts in one case which was to rule the other cases, amounting to some hundreds in number. The judges, however, had not yet come to any decision on the point in dispute, and this had occasioned some inconvenience. He wished to ask the right honourable baronet whether he knew when it was likely that a decision would be arrived at on the subject?—Sir J. GRAHAM said he believed there were between 200 and 300 cases to be decided on a nice question of law. The Vice Chancellor had given a decision—an appeal had been made to the Lord Chancellor—the question had been referred to the Court of Common Pleas; but the judges had not yet given their judgment. He had no doubt, however, that the judgment would be received as final, and would be very soon given.

RAILWAY BILLS NOW IN THE HOUSE OF LORDS.—In addition to the four railroad bills, of which notice has been given for the second reading, the following bills have reached the House of Peers from the Commons. They have been read a first time, and the parties promoting and opposing them have attended before the Standing Order Committee of the House of Lords, in order to examine into the preliminary evidence touching the Standing Orders, which, if they have been complied with, and the bills are opposed, then Select Committees, of five Peers each, will be appointed for such as come under that description, and the evidence will be regularly gone into. The Bills in question are—the Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth, the Bristol and Exeter branches, the York and North Midland (Bridlington branch), the Dunstable, and Birmingham and London, the Bedford and London, the York and Scarborough Deviation, the Hull and Selby (Bridlington branch), the Whitby and Pickering, the Scottish Central, the Eastern Counties (Whittlesea Deviation), the Exeter and Crediton, and the Midland Railway (Nottingham to Lincoln) bills. On Monday next, the Chester and Holyhead Railway Bill will be submitted to the Standing Order Committee, and on Tuesday, the Shrewsbury, Oswestry, and Chester, the Manchester and Leeds line (Burnley, Oldham, and Heywood branches), will be subjected to the same ordeal, as well as the Southampton and Dorchester, the Midland Railways (Syston to Peterborough); and the Berks and Hants Railway Bills. With respect to the Midland Railways (Syston to Peterborough) Bill, a petition has been presented to the house from the Earl of Harborough, praying to be heard by counsel against it; and a petition from the Earl of Wilton, with a similar prayer against the Leeds, Dewsbury, and Manchester Railway Bill, has been also presented and laid on the table.

PROJECTED RAILWAYS BEFORE PARLIAMENT.—A very curious return has just been laid before Parliament, in relation to projected railways now before Parliament. It thence appears that the railways of which plans and sections have been deposited with the Railway Department of the Board of Trade amount in length, for Great Britain and Ireland, to no less than 8,080 miles, being thus nearly 24 times the length of England itself! The following are the proportions of the lines proposed to be made in the different countries of the United Kingdom:—England has, as her share of these projected railways, 6,086 miles and a fraction; Scotland has about 1-10th the quantity—the proposed lines in that country only extending to 595 miles; Ireland, however, is far a-head of Caledonia in this respect; and the sister isle has no fewer than 1,401 miles of railway projected to be laid down therein. These statements have regard only to the projected lines which are this session before Parliament for consideration. They do not include any portion of the numerous lines that have since and are weekly, or rather daily, being brought forward, but merely give the length of the railways, plans for which were deposited with the Board of Trade towards the close of last year, in accordance with the directions issued by the Railway Department of that board.—Globe.

SECOND ORDERS OF REMOVAL.

The case of Reg. v. Bolton, of which a full report appears in this LAW TIMES, is one of much importance, and clearly defines the principle on which a second order of removal may be made without a final disposal of the first, even where a case is granted. But the point in which this case is of most utility is the sanction it gives to a simple statement of relief received by the pauper as sufficient evidence of chargeability without any certificate or other proof whatever. We have always held this to be sufficient, and we consider the decision to be quite in accordance with Reg. v. High Bickington (1 Bit. & Sym. 1), where Patteson, J. says, if relief was given, it was easy to say so. CAPITAL PUNISHMENTS.

By direction of Sir James Graham, a copy of the following letter and important rule, relative to the treatment of prisoners sentenced to death, has just been issued to the chairmen of the quarter sessions for every county in England and Wales:—

"Whitehall, June 2, 1845.

"Sir—I am directed by Secretary Sir James Graham to transmit to you the inclosed rule relative to the treatment of prisoners condemned to death, and to the proceedings to be observed on the day of an execution, on the occasion of a condemned sermon, or of the performance of divine service after sentence of death has been pronounced. This rule has been drawn up after careful consideration of the subject; and Sir James Graham requests that you will lay it before the magistrates assembled at the next general sessions for the county of , with his recommendation that they should add it to the rules in force for the government of the county prisons, and submit it to him for his certificate of approval, in accordance with the provisions of the 5th and 6th Will. IV., c. 38, s. 2.

"Sir James Graham is desirous that the attention of visiting magistrates should be directed to that part of the rule which provides that no persons, except the authorities and officers of the prison, shall have access to such prisoners.

"I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant, S. M. PHILLIPS.

"The Chairman of the Quarter Sessions for the county of ."

PRISONERS CONDEMNED TO DEATH.

"Every prisoner condemned to death shall be confined in some safe place within the prison, apart from all other prisoners, and shall be allowed such a dietary as the visiting justices may direct, and exercise in the open air for a reasonable time every day. He may be visited by his relations, friends, and legal advisers, at his own request, by an order in writing from any visiting justice. No other person shall have access to such prisoner, except the governor or other officer of the prison, the chaplain and surgeon; or if such convict shall be of a religious persuasion differing from that of the established church, a minister of that persuasion, attending at his request. If any person, however, shall make it appear to a visiting justice that he has important business to transact with the convict, such visiting justice may grant permission in writing to such person to have a conference with the convict, in the presence of the governor.

"No person except the proper authorities, the prison officers, and the police on duty, shall be admitted into the interior of the prison on the day of an execution, nor on occasion of a condemned sermon, nor during the performance of divine service after sentence of death has been pronounced. Provided that this rule shall not be interpreted to exclude a minister of a religious persuasion differing from that of the established church from attending at his own request a convict of such persuasion."

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

The crowding business of the Term compels another double number, and it will be found to contain many important and interesting Judgments.

The Judges have announced their intention to continue their sittings till the commencement of the Circuits; their object being, if possible, to clear off all arrears! But will not this interfere most inconveniently with the Quarter Sessions?

The Circuit Commissioners will not report until the Spring.

NOTES ON LEADING CASES.

No. I.

Arrest under a writ of ca. sa.—Under what circumstances is the sheriff entitled to enter the house of the defendant and break open the doors, &c.?—Entry into the house of a stranger for the purpose of arresting the defendant.

Morrish v. Murray and Another (13 M. & W. 52).

The present case, in which the Court of Exchequer has confirmed the decision given thirty years ago by the Court of Common Pleas, in Johnson v. Leigh (6 Taunt. 246), affords the opportunity of briefly explaining the state of the law by which the right of the sheriff under a writ of ca. sa. to enter the house of the person sought to be arrested, or in which he is residing or concealed, is regulated. The general principle of the common law of England is well known to be, as laid down in the first resolution of Semayne's case (5 Coke, 91), that "the house of every one is to him as his castle and fortress, as well for his defence against injury and violence as well for his repose;" but this principle has from time to time received, as indeed it obviously requires, very material qualifications. The principal exception to it consists of the right which the law gives to its officers to enter into the house of those who have transgressed the law, for the purpose of arresting their persons, or taking possession of their goods. Accordingly, "where a felony hath been committed or a dangerous wound given, or even where a minister of justice comes armed with process, founded upon a breach of the peace, the party's own house is no sanctuary for him; doors may in any of these cases be forced, the officer having first given due notice of his business, and demanded admission and been refused. In these cases, the jealousy with which the law watches over the public tranquillity (a laudable jealousy it is)—the principles of political justice—ne maleficia remaneant impunita, conspire to supersede every pretence of private inconvenience, and oblige us to regard the dwellings of malefactors, when shut against the demands of public justice, as no better than the dens of thieves and murderers, and to treat them accordingly." (Sir Michael Foster, Discourse on Homicide, p. 32?.) But even in criminal cases, although a felony has been actually committed, no officer is entitled mero motu to enter the house of the guilty party. He must first obtain a warrant from a magistrate for the purpose. Upon process in civil suits, however, the law is still more indulgent, and in such suits "the officer cannot justify breaking open an outer door or window of the defendant's house in order to execute process. If he do, he is a trespasser (ib. p. 319). But the rule that every man's house (by which is meant his dwelling-house alone, Penson v. Browne, 1 Sid. 186) is his castle, when applied to arrests in legal process, is confined to the breach of windows and outer doors; and, if it be necessary for the purpose of executing the process, the officer, having once entered by an outer door, accidentally left open, or opened from within, may break open inner doors, cupboards, trunks, &c. even without first demanding admission. (Lee v. Gansel, Cowp. 1; R. v. Bird, 2 Show. 87; Hutchinson v. Birch, 4 Taunt. 619.) If the officer having thus entered by an open door and searched the house of the defendant, finds that he is not within the house, his entry is still justified, for his own house is the most natural place in which to find either the man or his goods. But if the sheriff suspects that the defendant, whom he seeks to arrest, has secreted himself or his property in the house of a third party, and upon that suspicion breaks open and enters the stranger's house, "he can," according to the words of Mr. Baron Alderson, in the case at the head of these remarks, "only be justified by the event." If it turn out that the defendant is not in the house, or has no goods here, he is a trespasser. (Johnson v. Leigh, 6 Taunt. 215; Hutchinson v. Birch, 4 Taunt. 627; and see Ratcliffe v. Burton, 3 B. & P. 229.) He is no less a trespasser in law, if, even having reasonable grounds for suspicion that the defendant is in the house of a stranger, he enters without breaking any door; the result shewing that the defendant was not actually in the house at the time. Gibbs, C J. in Cooke v. Birt (5 Taunt. 769), says, "The sheriff, finding the door open, may enter the house of a stranger, and is justified if the defendants' goods are in it, but it is at his own risk;" and Dallas, J. uses nearly the same language. If the party sought to be arrested, or the goods to be seized, are found in the house, the entry, whether with or without force, is justified; for by the 5th resolution in Semayne's case, "the house of any one is not a castle or privilege but for himself, and shall not extend to protect any person who flies to his house, or the goods of any other which are brought and conveyed into his house to prevent lawful execution, and to escape the ordinary process of law; for the privilege of his house extends only to him and his family, and to his own proper goods, or to those which are lawfully and without fraud or covin there, and therefore in such cases, after denial on request made, the sheriff may break the house." If the party or goods are not found in the stranger's house, the entry upon the general rule of law is not justifiable, but it has been suggested by Mr. Smith (Leading Cases, 1, p. 45), that "circumstances might exist under which the sheriff would be justified in entering the house of a stranger upon suspicion, though the defendant were not actually there;"—and putting the case of the defendant being on a visit, with the stranger, he contends that the dwelling-house of the stranger must in such a case be regarded pro tempore as the defendant's dwelling-house, so as to entitle the sheriff to enter, upon th principle of its being the natural place both for him and for his goods to be found in. In support of this view he cites the dictum of Lord Loughborough, in Sheers v. Brookes (2 H. Black. 120), who there says, "I see no difference between a house of which he" [the principal whom his bail had sought to arrest] "is solely possessed, and a house in which he resides by consent of another." But, surely, the distinction between the owner and admitted inmate of a house is frequently most material; as, for instance, in an indictment for stealing in a dwelling-house, where an error as to the allegation of ownership would be fatal (Rex v. White, 1 Leach, C.C 252; R. v. Woodward, 1 Leach, C.C. 253); and, even with regard to the arrest or seizure by the sheriff, it would seem to be unjust to expose a stranger, receiving a friend into his house, to the inconvenience of an useless entry whenever the officer should suspect his defendant to be within. In almost every case upon the subject it is distinctly laid down that the entry shall or shall not be justified "by the " and these are the very words used in the recent case, in the Exchequer, by Alderson, B., after the case of Sheers v. Brooks, and the dictum of Lord Loughborough had, in the argument, been called to his attention. "If," said his lordship, in Morrish v. Murray, "a sheriff enters the house of the defendant himself, for the purpose of arresting him or taking his goods, he is justified if he has reasonable grounds of believing that the party (or his goods) is there; but here the party to be arrested was not found in the house of the plaintiff, and therefore the defendants were not justified." As to the other case, alluded to by Mr. Smith, in which the sheriff might justify an entry into the house of a stranger upon bare suspicion, viz. where the stranger had fraudulently inveigled the sheriff into a belief that the defendant was in his house, such conduct might probably be regarded as a persuasion, and consequently as a license to enter, and it would not therefore constitute an exception to the general rule of law, as above stated. It seems only necessary to add, that if the defendant, after being arrested, escape, the sheriff may break open either his own house or that of a stranger, for the purpose of retaking him. (Foster on Homicide, 319-20; Anon. 6 Mod. 105; Lofft, 390.) But that in this, as in all cases, criminal or civil, before an outer door can be broken open, admission must first be demanded. (Launock v. Brown, 2 B. & A. 592; Hale, 2 P.C. 117; Gunner v. Sparks, 1 Salk. 79; White v. Wilsheire, 2 Roll. R. 138.) In Morrish v. Murray, it was (secondly) held that where a judge, on the trial, thinking that the defendants are entitled to a verdict on a certain issue, at the same time directs the jury to assess contingent damages, in the event of his being mistaken in a point of law, and does this in the presence of the counsel on both sides, who by their silence agree to the arrangement, the verdict thus found must stand, and a new trial cannot be moved for on the ground of misdirection.

This case may be noted at pp. 44, 45 of Smith's Leading Cases, and at p. 405 of Chitty on Pleading, vol. iii. (7th ed.).

GENERAL ORDERS AND RULES OF THE HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY.

15. If a defendant is ordered to answer amendments and exceptions together, he is to put in his further answer and his answer to the amendments of the bill within four weeks after he is served with notice of the amendment of such bill. If he does not, and if he procures no enlargement of the time allowed, he is subject to the following liabilities:—
    1. An attachment may be issued against him;
    2. He may be committed to prison, and brought to the bar of the court;
    3. The plaintiff may file a traversing note, or proceed to take the bill pro confesso against him.
16. If a defendant having already answered is served with a subpœna to appear to and answer an amended bill, he is to plead, answer, or demur, not demurring alone, to such amended bill, within four weeks after an appearance thereto has been entered by or for him. If he does not, and if he procures no enlargement of the time allowed, he is subject to the following liabilities:—
    1. An attachment may be issued against him;
    2. He may be committed to prison, and brought to the bar of the Court; and
    3. The plaintiff may file a traversing note, or proceed to have the bill taken pro confesso against him.
17. Within twelve days after the filing of a demurrer to the whole bill, the plaintiff desiring to submit such demurrer to the judgment of the Court is to cause the same to be set down for argument. If he does not, such demurrer is to be held sufficient, and the plaintiff is to be held to have submitted thereto.
18. Within three weeks after the filing of a demurrer to part of a bill, the plaintiff desiring to submit such demurrer to the judgment of the Court is to cause the same to be set down for argument. If he does not, such demurrer is to be held sufficient, and the plaintiff is to be held to have submitted thereto.
19. Within three weeks after the filing of a plea to the whole or part of a bill, the plaintiff desiring to submit such plea to the judgment of the Court is to cause the same to be set down for argument. If he does not, such plea is to be held good to the same extent and for the same purposes as a plea allowed upon argument, and the plaintiff is to be held to have submitted thereto.
20. A defendant whose answer is not excepted to, or referred back on former exceptions, alleging that the plaintiff is prosecuting him in this court and also at law for the same matter, may, upon the expiration of eight days after his answer or further answer is filed, obtain as of course, on motion or petition, the usual order for the plaintiff to make his election in which court he will proceed.
21. A defendant whose answer is excepted to, or referred back on former exceptions, alleging that the plaintiff is prosecuting him in this court and also at law for the same matter, may by notice in writing require the plaintiff to procure the master's report upon the exceptions within four days from the service of the notice. And if the plaintiff does not obtain the master's report within such four days, such defendant is entitled as of course, on motion or petition, to obtain the usual order for the plaintiff to make his election in which court he will proceed.
22. After the filing of a defendant's answer, the plaintiff has six weeks within which he may file exceptions thereto for insufficiency. If he does not file exceptions within six weeks, such answer, on the expiration of the six weeks, is to be deemed sufficient.
23. A defendant desiring to avoid a reference to the master of exceptions to his answer for insufficiency, has for that purpose only eight days after the filing of such exceptions within which he may submit to the same before reference.
24. If a defendant, not being in contempt, submits to exceptions to his answer for insufficiency before the plaintiff has obtained an order to refer the same to the master, he is allowed three weeks from the date of the submission within which he is to put in his further answer to the bill.
25. The plaintiff having filed exceptions for insufficiency to a defendant's answer, is not to procure an order to refer them to the master before the expiration of eight days from the filing of such exceptions, unless in a case of election he is required by notice in writing from such defendant to procure the master's report on such exceptions in four days, pursuant to article 21 of this order.
26. The plaintiff, having filed exceptions for insufficiency to a defendant's answer, is to procure an order to refer them to the master after the expiration of eight days but within fourteen days from the filing of such exceptions. If he does not, the answer, on the expiration of such fourteen days, is to be deemed sufficient.
27. The plaintiff, having obtained an order for referring to the master exceptions to a defendant's answer for insufficiency, or for referring back a defendant's answer on former exceptions for insufficiency, is to obtain the master's report thereon within fourteen days from the date of the order, or within such further time as the master shall allow. If he does not, the answer, on the expiration of such fourteen days or further time, is to be deemed sufficient.
28. The plaintiff, having shewn exceptions to a defendant's answer for insufficiency as cause against dissolving an injunction, is to obtain the master's report thereon within four days after the date of the order to refer them. If he does not, the injunction is dissolved.
29. After the filing of exceptions to a defendant's answer for insufficiency, and any further answer put in, the plaintiff has fourteen days from the filing of such further answer within which he may refer the answer back to the master on the old exceptions. The answer, if not referred back on the old exceptions within fourteen days after such further answer put in, is, on the expiration of such fourteen days, to be deemed sufficient.
30. If, after a reference of exceptions for insufficiency, or a reference back of the answer on the old exceptions, a defendant, not being in contempt, submits to answer, or the master finds the answer insufficient, the master is in such cases to appoint the time within which such defendant is to put in his further answer. If such defendant does not obtain time from the master, or does not answer within the time which the master allows, the plaintiff may sue out process of contempt against such defendant.
31. The answer of a defendant is to be deemed sufficient,—
    1. If no exception for insufficiency be filed thereto within six weeks after the filing of such answer.
    2. If (exceptions being filed) the plaintiff does not within fourteen days after the filing thereof obtain an order to refer them.
    3. If (after obtaining such order) he does not obtain the master's report thereon within fourteen days from the date of the order, or within such further time as the master may allow.
    4. If he does not obtain an order to refer the answer back to the master on the old exceptions within fourteen days after the filing of a further answer.
    5. If (after obtaining such order) he does not obtain the master's report thereon within fourteen days from the date of the order, or within such further time as the master may allow.
32. In cases where there is a sole defendant, or where, there being several defendants, they all join in the same answer, the plaintiff may, after answer and before replication or undertaking to reply, obtain one order of course for leave to amend the bill, at any time within four weeks after the answer is deemed or found to be sufficient.
33. In cases where there are several defendants who do not join in the same answer, the plaintiff (if not precluded from amending, or limited as to the time of amending by some former order) may, after answer and before replication or undertaking to reply, at any time within four weeks after the last answer is deemed or found to be sufficient, obtain one order of course, for leave to amend his bill.
34. The plaintiff, having obtained an order for leave to amend his bill, has, in all cases in which such order is not made without prejudice to an injunction, fourteen days after the date of the order within which he may amend such bill. If such bill be not amended within such fourteen days, the order for leave to amend becomes void, and the cause as to dismissal stands in the same situation as if such order had not been made.
35. The plaintiff, having obtained an order for leave to amend his bill without prejudice to an injunction, must amend such bill within seven days from the date of the order. If such bill be not amended within such seven days, the order for leave to amend becomes void, and the cause as to dismissal stands in the same situation as if such order had not been made.
36. A defendant, being served with subpœna to answer an amended bill praying an injunction to stay proceedings at law, and desiring to avoid a motion for an injunction on affidavit of the truth of the amendments, has for that purpose only eight days after appearance within which he is to plead, answer, or demur to such amended bill.
37. The plaintiff (not obtaining an order for leave to amend his bill) must either file his replication or set down the cause to be heard on bill and answer within four weeks after the last answer is deemed or found to be sufficient. Otherwise any defendant may move to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution.
38. If the plaintiff amends his bill without requiring an answer to the amendments, any defendant desiring to answer the same must put in his answer thereto within eight days after being served with notice of the amendment of the bill, or within such further time as the master may allow.
39. Where the plaintiff amends his bill without requiring an answer to the amendments, and no answer is put in thereto, and no warrant for further time to answer the same is served within eight days after service of the notice of the amendment of such bill, the plaintiff is, after the expiration of such eight days, but within fourteen days from the time of such service, either to file his replication or to set down the cause to be heard upon bill and answer. Otherwise any defendant may move to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution.
40. Where the plaintiff amends his bill without requiring an answer to the amendments, and a defendant within eight days after the service of the notice of the filing of the amended bill serves a warrant for further time to answer the amendments, but the master refuses to grant such further time, the plaintiff is, within fourteen days after such refusal, either to file his replication or to set down the cause to be heard on bill and answer. Otherwise any defendant may move to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution.
41. If a defendant puts in an answer to amendments to which the plaintiff has not required an answer, the plaintiff must, within fourteen days after the filing of such answer, either file his replication or set down the cause to be heard on bill and answer, unless in the meantime he obtains from the Court a special order for leave to except to such answer or to amend the bill. Otherwise any defendant may move to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution.
42. Parties desiring to examine witnesses by commission are not to apply for a warrant to name commissioners to examine witnesses until after the expiration of four days from the filing of the replication.
43. After the replication is filed, parties have two months to examine their witnesses; and if such two months expire in the long vacation, the time within which the parties are to examine their witnesses is extended to the second day of the ensuing Michaelmas term.
44. After the expiration of two months from the filing of the replication, publication is to pass, unless the time for publication has been enlarged, in which case it is to pass on the expiration of the enlarged time; but if the two months or the enlarged time expire in the long vacation, publication is not to pass till the second day of Michaelmas term; and on that day it is to pass, unless the time has been enlarged.
45. Within four weeks after publication has passed, the plaintiff is to set down his cause and obtain and serve a subpœna to hear judgment. Otherwise any defendant may move to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution.
46. A subpœna to hear judgment is not to be returnable at any time less than one month from the teste of the writ; and it is to be served at least ten days before the return thereof.
47. There must, unless the Court gives special leave to the contrary, be at least two clear days between the service of a notice of motion and the day named in the notice for hearing the motion, and at least two clear days between the service of a petition and the day appointed for hearing the petition: but, in the computation of such two clear days, Sundays and other days on which the offices are closed, except Monday and Tuesday in Easter week, are not to be reckoned.

48. There must be at least six clear days between the service of a notice of motion by the plaintiff for the appointment of a guardian by whom a defendant who is an infant or a person of weak intellect or unsound mind may defend the suit, and the day named in the notice for hearing the motion.

49. At any time within three weeks after the execution of an attachment for want of answer, the plaintiff may serve a defendant so attached with a notice of motion that the bill may be taken pro confesso against him, and may move the Court accordingly, as directed by Order LXXVI.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

DEBTORS AND CREDITORS.—On Tuesday a meeting of traders and others, convened by advertisement, signed by many of the most influential firms in the city, was held at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate street," to consider the propriety of petitioning Parliament for an amendment of the Act abolishing imprisonment for debts under 20*l.* and for other improvements in the laws of bankruptcy and insolvency." The proceedings of this influential meeting were characterized by sound practical wisdom. The pseudo philanthrophy which Lord Brougham exemplifies, fixes its microscopic eye on the exaggerated sufferings of the few, to mitigate which it does not scruple to sacrifice the interests of the many. The merchants and traders of the city of London, who yesterday met to deliberate upon and discuss the Act of Parliament which they find so pregnant with power to injure them, have drawn a just and humane distinction. While they refer to the mischiefs which the law inflicts upon themselves, they do not ask by their petition to the Legislature against the existing laws, to be invested with unmitigated and unrestrained power to incarcerate the unfortunate man whom misfortune has deprived of the means to pay the debt which he bonâ fide contracted. Such cases alike claim protection from the Legislature, and commiseration from the community. The trading interests complain that the recent alterations in the law of debtor and creditor, especially the abolition of imprisonment on final process for debts under 20*l.* whereby the facility of committing fraud has been increased, and the risk of punishment lessened, have been enacted " without the substitution of any adequate power to creditors of obtaining possession of the property of their debtors, unjustly withheld." Justice and mercy, reason, religion, common sense, all sanction and approve the abolition of imprisonment for debt. Where fraud constitutes no part of the transaction on the part of the debtor, to deliver up the person of an unfortunate but honest man to the will of a creditor, who may employ the power of arresting the debtor's person, in hope of obtaining payment of his own debt to the exclusion of other creditors', whose claims are equally righteous with his own, or as a vindictive visitation for his individual loss by the debtor, is at once impolitic and cruel. The injustice and inhumanity of such a law are not confined to debts under 20*l*; they extend themselves to debts of whatever amount. But, then, the fraudulent debtor should be punished for his fraud; and the property of debtors, "unjustly withheld," should be rendered available to their creditors without difficulty or delay. By the present law, a man may contract any amount of debts; and if he be careful that each debt be under 20*l.* he may secure his tangible property to his own use by a friendly assignment, and snap his fingers at his creditors. His person is safe from arrest; and his friend will kindly permit him to have the use of the furniture, and will step in and exhibit the legal instrument, duly executed, by which he will effectually prevent any impertinent creditor from interfering with it, to the annoyance of the debtor. In fact, such legal formality as this is needless. In most cases the landlord will accommodate his tenant by putting in a distress for rent, which will effectually oust any other execution. Nay, the Court has, under the law as it now stands, no power to refuse its protection against arrest to any debtor who applies for it, even though a fraudulent transfer of property is proved. The transfer took place before the man placed himself within the jurisdiction of the Court, which has no power to deal with the delinquent! It is gratifying to find that our efforts to rouse the country to the ruinous results of this most iniquitous law have been at length successful. For some time we stood alone. The trading interests waited to see whether the operation of the law would be really so extensively injurious to their property as we predicted it would prove. They have not hastily determined on the course of petition and remonstrance on which they have now entered. Their complaints ought therefore to have the more weight with the Legislature, with which they ought to prevail, to obtain for them the protection to their property against fraud, for which they pray, and which they so much need.—Globe.

ARREARS OF BUSINESS IN THE COMMON LAW COURTS.—On the commencement of Trinity Term, the lists of the arrears in the Common Law Courts were respectively as follow:—Queen's Bench, 172 new trials remaining undetermined at the end of the sittings after Easter Term, including five standing for the judgment of the Court. Court of Common Pleas, 56. In that Court there are 9 enlarged rules, 22 new trials, 7 standing for judgment, and 18 causes in the demurrer paper. Court of Exchequer, 100, consisting of 15 matters in the peremptory paper, 14 in the special paper, and 71 rules for new trials. The total arrears number 328, which matters can be heard out of term. The present term ends on the 12th of June.—Globe.

TRINITY TERM BANQUETS.—Trinity Term, in accordance with ancient usage, being that in the course of which the benchers of the inns of court assemble in their respective halls to celebrate the long established custom of observing their " Great Grand Day," as it is called, the different inns of court have this week given splendid dinners, which have been attended by the equity and common law judges, and other eminent individuals connected with the profession. The Inner Temple meeting took place on Tuesday, Lincoln's-inn on Wednesday, and the Middle Temple on Thursday. Amongst the guests at the latter there were the Lord Chief Baron, Mr. Justice Coleridge, Mr. Justice Erle, and the Rev. Dr. Robinson, Master of the Temple.

THE PRESS AND THE BAR.—A rumour prevails that at their last meeting the benchers of the Middle and Inner Temples adopted a resolution by which a person having connection with a newspaper will be precluded from entering either of those societies as a student. At present several reporters for the morning papers are students in the Temple, and it is feared that the recent regulation may interfere with their "call" at the conclusion of their terms. If may not be out of place to remark that many of the best lawyers this country ever produced were in their earlier life reporters for the daily press, and that three learned judges who now grace the judicial bench commenced their career in that capacity. It is understood that Lincoln's-inn and Gray's-inn will not adopt the exclusive system recommended by the Inner and Middle Temples.—Morning Post.

CHANCERY COMPENSATION JOB.—Since we last called the attention of our readers to the petitions in support of Mr. Watson's motion the following petitions have been presented:—That of the York Law Association, by Sir John Lowther; that of the Bristol Law Association, by Mr. Philip Miles; and that of the Newcastle Law Association, by Mr. Watson. Mr. Wilson Patten has presented the petition of the Preston Law Association; and Mr. Gell has that of the Plymouth Law Association. Mr. Watson's motion stands for Tuesday next. Mr. Ward has a motion for a committee on the burthens affecting the landed interest, which at present stands before it.

Mr. Napier, of the Irish bar (who received the high compliment delivered by Lord Lyndhurst, in the name of himself and the judges in the House of Lords), was a law student of the London University (now University College), at the first opening of the law class under Professor Amos. Mr. Whiteside, whose speech in the sate trial O'Connell and others obtained such general admiration, was a fellow-student in the same class with Mr. Napier.

Effects sworn under 60,000*l.* The will bears date the 23rd of October, 1843, and the earl thereby devises to his brother, the Hon. William Nevill (the present earl), in fee, the estate which he (the late earl) held under his father's will, subject to the payment of 7,000*l.* to each of the three daughters of his said brother. His mansion in Berkeley-square, his house at Brighton, and all his personal estate he gives to his executors, in trust for sale, but with a right of pre-emption to the present earl as to the Berkeley-square house and furniture, and the furniture and effects of Eridge, &c. THE LATE EARL OF ABERGAVENNY. — The will (dated October 23, 1843) of this nobleman, who died on the 12th of April, in the present year, has been proved by his executors, Mr. R. Morgan, of Lincoln's-inn, and Mr. A. Elswood, of Bungay. The earl devises in fee to his brother, the Hon. William Nevill (the present earl, and who inherits Eridge Castle, and all the other entailed estates), all the estates which he (the late earl) held under his father's will, but subjects them to the payment of 7,000*l.* to each of the three daughters of his said brother. The mansion in Berkeley-square, his favourite house at Brighton, and all his personal estate (sworn under 60,000*l.*), he gives to his executors in trust for sale, but with a right of pre-emption to the present earl as to the Berkeley-square house and furniture, the furniture and effects at Eridge Castle, and the park, &c. And, after payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies to his executors and servants, he directs the residue to be equally divided between his nephew and niece. 2. The report was adopted, and, with the rules, ordered to be entered on these minutes.

REPORT.

" East Kent Law Association.—We have to report that, in accordance with the appointment of the last meeting of the Society, we proceeded as a deputation to Manchester, and had the gratification of meeting deputations from all parts of the kingdom assembled to discuss the propriety of the Provincial Union that had been proposed.

" It gives us pleasure to record that an unanimity of feeling and opinion pervaded the members of the profession, and resolutions forming the Society were adopted without a dissentient vote.

" We beg to hand in with our report a copy of the rules of the 'Provincial Law Societies' Association;' and to state it as our conviction that, under judicious management, of which it has the augury, the Association cannot fail to be productive of essential advantage to the interests and character of the legal profession.

3. The treasurer was directed to pay Mr. Knocker the sum of 18*l.* 5*s.* expended by him for the travelling and tavern expenses of the deputation.

4. The thanks of this Meeting were given to the deputation for their services.

5. The secretary read a printed form of agreement used by Messrs. ———, solicitors to ———, on the sales of portions of ——— estates at ———, providing among other things that the Vendor's solicitors should prepare the conveyance; and he also read the correspondence which had taken place between those gentlemen and himself on the subject.

6. The secretary also read a letter received by him on the 15th inst. from the secretary of the Incorporated Law Society, inclosing a resolution passed at a meeting of the council of that society, on the 6th inst. having reference to and condemnatory of such a practice.

COPY OF SUCH LETTER.

"The Incorporated Society, U. K.
14th May, 1845.

"I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,
R. MAUGHAM, Secretary.

"R. T. Brockman, esq."

COPY OF SUCH RESOLUTION.

"At a meeting of the council of the Incorporated Law Society, held the 6th day of May, 1845.

"It having been reported to the Council that practitioners of the law in certain parts of the country stipulate in conditions of sale and in contracts that the vendor's solicitor shall prepare the conveyance to the purchaser, and in some instances that the purchaser shall pay to the vendor's solicitor a stipulated sum (exclusive of stamps) for the conveyance;

"Resolved,—That such custom is contrary to the general usage and practice of the Profession, and is objectionable in principle and dangerous to the safety of purchasers, by rendering them liable to be affected with constructive notice of incumbrances, or defects of title, and to other disadvantages.

"Resolved,—That a copy of this resolution, signed by the President, be sent to every law society throughout the kingdom.

"MICH. CLAYTON, President."

7. It was resolved, that the Secretary do acknowledge, with thanks and expressions of satisfaction, the receipt of such letter and resolution.

8. 10. The tenth rule of the Association was altered, so as to extend the power of convening special general meetings to the Secretary.

11. Suggestions relative to points of practice were appended to the rules.

12. The Secretary was ordered to get one hundred copies of the rules and appendix printed.

13. Notice was given by Mr. Hulke that he would propose Mr. Solly, of Sandwich; and by Mr. Nott, that he would propose Mr. Stephen Plummer, of Canterbury, junior, as members of this Association, at the next meeting.

14. The accounts were audited, and the balance in the Treasurer's hands found to amount to 42*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.*

15. It was resolved, that with a view of carrying out the object of the Provincial Law Societies' Association, a copy of the proceedings of this meeting be forwarded to them.

16. Resolved also, that the next meeting be held at the Lion Hotel, Canterbury, and that Mr. Gravener be President, and Mr. Wightwick Vice-President, for the year next ensuing.

That Mr. Brockman continue the offices of Secretary and Treasurer.

To Readers and Correspondents.

We are deluged with letters on the subject of the Small Debts Bill. It would be impossible to insert a tithe of them. We purpose, therefore, to read them with care, to note such objections as they may urge, or any amendments suggested, and state them seriatim *in a leading article next week. Thus the object of the writers will be gained, without the inconvenience of occupying an extended space in our columns at a season when they have so many more important claims upon them. SATURDAY, JUNE 7; 1845.

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

LORD BROUGHAM'S Bill "for the better securing the Payment of Small Debts," is now printed, and we hasten to submit it to our readers. The provisions, as it will be seen, are precisely those originally suggested by the LAW TIMES, namely, that upon judgment or order in respect of any debt not exceeding 20*l.* the creditor may summon the debtor before a Commissioner of Bankrupts or Court of Requests, who shall examine such creditor touching the manner of his contracting the debt, the means or prospect of payment he then had, and still has; and if he do not give a satisfactory account of himself, or shall appear to have been guilty of any fraud, or of having wilfully contracted such debt without reasonable prospect of being enabled to pay it, or refuse to obey the orders of the Court, as to payment or otherwise, the Court may commit him to the common gaol for a period not exceeding forty days.

The second section empowers the Court to order payment of the debt out of any salary, wages, pay, or pension amounting to more than 50*l.* per annum.

The third section extends the powers of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, to all cases of balances not exceeding 20*l.*; and by the 4th section it is provided, that an application to the Court under this Act, or either of the previous Acts, need not be by Counsel or Attorney.

The principles of the Bill appear to be sufficiently ample for their purpose. They punish improvidence and fraud, without inflicting a penalty upon misfortune: they help the creditor to justice more surely than did the old law of imprisonment for debt, and may be safely pronounced the greatest improvement ever yet introduced into the law of debtor and creditor.

It may, however, be worth noting, that the first section, empowering the Court to imprison, limits no period of imprisonment. The second section indeed limits it to forty days; but it may be fairly objected that this might be intended to apply only to the cases specified in that section, namely, disobedience to orders for payment. It would be as well to anticipate such a difficulty, by limiting a term of imprisonment in the first section also.

At the City meeting of the merchants, held last week, the discussion turned more upon the necessity for a measure for the easier proof of small debts, than their recovery after they are proved. The former is altogether a wider and more difficult question, involving principles, and encumbered with obstacles, of which none but the practical lawyer can feel the full force. It will require much consideration, much elaborate legislation, and it would be most unwise to postpone the remedy for the great and urgent evil, until means can be found for the redress of the lesser mischief. And indeed, in practice, the difficulty of creditors is not so much in the obtaining of their judgments, as in the enforcement of them when obtained. Very few debts are, in fact, disputed; and by the proposed regulations, any debtor putting his creditor to needless law expenses would be guilty of fraud, and punishable with imprisonment; and it is to be hoped that the Courts will not be slow to exercise the power that is to be confided to them.

We have heard the objection raised that a creditor will not incur the cost and trouble of summoning his debtor, and enforcing the law against him. As to the cost, it need be but the merest trifle; and if a man will not trouble himself to invoke the protection the law has given him, he cannot complain of the injuries he endures. But we would recommend that, immediately on the passing of this excellent measure, there be formed in every town an association for the prosecution of fraudulent debtors, similar to those now existing for the prosecution of felons; and thus, at a trifling cost to each, would all creditors insure the due punishment of those who have wronged them, while the very fact of the existence of such a society would deter from dishonesty many who might otherwise be inclined to practise it.

On re-perusal of the Bill, it has struck us that some provision should be made for the security of the creditor after the term of imprisonment, which should not operate as a release from the debt. He should be empowered to renew the proceedings at any time thereafter, when the debtor should be compelled to shew why he does not yet pay; and, if he still be contumacious, again subjected to the penalty for his contumacy.

The following is a copy of the Bill:—

A Bill, intituled, "An Act for the better securing the Payment of Small Debts."

1. Creditor obtaining judgment or order in respect of debt not exceeding 20l. may summon debtor before a Commissioner of Bankrupts or Court of Requests, &c.—Whereas it is expedient and just to give creditors a further remedy for the recovery of debts due to them: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That if any person is indebted to any other in a sum not exceeding twenty pounds beside costs of suit, for which sum any judgment shall have been obtained, or any order for the payment thereof, from any Court of competent jurisdiction, it shall be lawful for the creditor so obtaining a judgment or order to obtain a summons from any Commissioner of Bankrupts for the district in which such debtor shall reside or shall have resided for one calendar month before the date of such judgment or order, or from any Court of Requests, Court of Commissioners, or other Court for the recovery of small debts, having a chairman or other presiding officer who shall be either a barrister-at-law or attorney or solicitor, which summons such Commissioner of Bankrupts or such Court are hereby authorized and required to grant upon the application of such creditor by any petition or note in writing; and the debtor, being called before such Commissioner or Court at the time to be named in such summons, shall be examined by the said Commissioner or Court, and shall be interrogated before such Commissioner or Court, by the creditor summoning him, touching the manner and time of his contracting his debt, the means or prospect of payment he then had, the property or means of payment he still hath or may have, the disposal he may have made of any property; and such creditor shall also, if he think fit, be examined by the said Commissioner or Court touching his claim against the said debtor; and it shall be lawful for such Commissioner or Court to make an order on the said debtor for the payment of his debt by instalments or otherwise; and in case such debtor shall refuse to discover-his property, or his transactions respecting the same, or respecting the contracting of the debt, or shall not make answer thereof to the satisfaction of the Commissioner or Court, or shall appear to such Commissioner or Court to have been guilty of fraud in contracting the debt, or of having wilfully contracted it without reasonable prospect of being able to pay it, or of having concealed or made away with his property in order to defeat his creditors, or if he appears to have the means of paying the same by instalments or otherwise, and shall not pay the same at such times as the Commissioner or Court shall order, then in any of the said cases it shall be lawful for such Commissioner or the Chairman or other presiding officer of such Court to order such debtor to be committed to the common gaol wherein the debtors under judgment and in execution of the superior courts of justice may be confined within the county in which such debtor shall be resident: provided always, that in case a day other than the day of issuing such order for imprisonment shall be appointed for payment of the debt, or of any instalment thereof, no order for imprisonment shall be made by such Commissioner or Chairman or presiding officer until it shall be made to appear to his satisfaction that the debtor has made default, and has disobeyed the order for payment by instalment or otherwise.

2. Commissioner, &c. may order payment of debt out of salary, pay, or pension, &c.—And be it enacted, That in making such order for payment as aforesaid it shall be lawful for such Commissioner or Court, and they are hereby authorized and required to order such debtor to make payment of his debt out of any salary or wages, or pay or half-pay or pension which he may have amounting to more than fifty pounds by the year; and the not paying as ordered out of such salary, wages, pay, or pension shall be deemed such disobedience as authorizes the said Commissioner or presiding officer to order the imprisonment of the debtor; provided always, that no such order for imprisonment, nor any order for imprisonment, shall be made for any longer time than forty days.

3. Powers of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, to extend to all cases of balances not exceeding 20l.—And be it declared and enacted, That all the powers and authorities respecting debts not exceeding twenty pounds given to any Courts or judges by an Act made in the seventh and eighth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled An Act to amend the Law of Insolvency, Bankruptcy, and Execution, shall and do extend to all cases of any balance not exceeding twenty pounds remaining unpaid of any debt, of whatever amount, which may have been or may be recovered by any judgment or order, exclusive of the costs of such judgment or order, and also to the costs of any verdict in any ejectment, and to all orders as well as judgments whatever for the payment of any sum of money not exceeding twenty pounds exclusive of costs.

4. Application to Commissioners, &c. need not be made by counsel or attorney. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116.—And be it enacted, That in making application to any Commissioner or Court as aforesaid, or taking any proceedings under this Act, or under the Act hereinbefore referred to, or under the Act made in the fifth and sixth years of her Majesty's reign, intituled An Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, it shall not be requisite for any party, whether creditor or debtor, to employ either counsel or attorney or solicitor.

Here we have spoken only of the merits of the measure. Next week we propose to examine its defects, which are not few, and suggest divers amendments, that appear to be essential to its efficient working; and in this we pray the aid of the Profession.

It is most important that in its progress through the Legislature the measure should be rendered as perfect as experience can make it.

Since the above was written, we have received the prospectus of an association to be formed in London, for "the Protection of Trade by the opposition of fraudulent Bankrupts and Insolvents." Its plan appears to be very comprehensive, the subscription being fixed at 2l. 2s. per annum;—a sum which the tradesman will save ten times over, in the general effect which the mere knowledge of the existence of such a society cannot fail to produce upon fraudulent and improvident debtors. A like association should be formed in every town in the kingdom, and thus, at a trifling cost to each trader, the contemplated law will be vigorously enforced.

LORD BROUGHAM'S CONVEYANCING BILL.

We have procured a copy of this bill, and it will be found in its proper place. Comment upon its many impracticabilities must be reserved for a season of more leisure. There is, however, no cause for alarm. There is not the slightest probability of its passing beyond its present stage.

SHAM LAWYERS.

It is very difficult to determine the precise boundaries at which the Sham Lawyer invades the province of the Real Lawyer.

In almost every corner of the country is now to be found a class of men calling themselves Accountants, the greater portion of them being, in fact, clerks discharged from attorney's offices, who, under that very indefinite title, in fact conduct a considerable portion of the legitimate business of an attorney. They not only make out and collect accounts, but they write the threatening letters of which we have published so many specimens; they draw indentures of apprenticeship, make wills, prepare leases, and, in short, turn their hands to any work wherewithal they can find dupes to intrust to them.

It is true, that by their blunders they continually lead their unlucky clients into scrapes from which the attorney is obliged to be called in to relieve them, and thus make a great deal of work for the lawyers; yet, nevertheless, they are the pests of the Profession, and undoubtedly divert a great deal of business properly belonging to it. If this were attended with an advantage to the public, it might be endured as an evil from which good comes; but, in truth, these lawyer-accountants charge as much to their clients as does the certificated attorney, without giving to them in return the security afforded by the surveillance of the judges, and the responsibility of a position in society.

Certainly the existing law does not afford sufficient security to the regular practitioner. The Profession has a right to demand protection on the unanswerable plea, that in consequence of that protection the law imposes upon them heavy pecuniary burdens and a costly education. To these they submit as the conditions upon which they are to receive in return the exclusive right to conduct a certain class of the business of the community. It is unjust to permit men who are freed from these taxes, and want that education, to take away any portion, however small, of that business. But the sham lawyers who infest the country are not few, nor are the profits trifling which they divert from the regular practitioners. The existing law is not large enough to meet the mischiefs so continually recorded in these columns. Exposure alone will not deter men who cannot be shamed. The Law Societies should take the great and growing evil into their most serious consideration, and, having devised a remedy, exert their influence to secure an amendment of the defective law during the next Session of Parliament.

We are informed that the writer of the following letter is a surgeon or an apothecary. Other instances of his mingling law with physic have been named to us, and we would advise the neighbouring Law Society to keep an eye upon him.

Narberth, May 24, 1845.

Sir,—I am requested by Mr. Thomas Harries, jun. carpenter, to apply to you for the payment of twenty shillings, being a balance due from you to him for work done, and unless the same be immediately into my hands, he is determined to bring an action to recover the same forthwith. (Sic.)

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

The 10th of Magistrates' Cases, the 8th of Practice Cases, and the 7th and 8th of Cox's Criminal Law, are in the press.

All the forms contained in the Schedule to the new Bastardy Act are now ready for delivery.

Copy Subpœnas ad test. and duces tecum is now ready for delivery for the ensuing Assizes.

A form is also ready for the transfer of shares in railway and joint-stock companies.

Suggestions of forms useful in practice will oblige.

Some members have hinted the propriety of publishing in volumes or parts a series of the best old text-books, carefully edited and adapted to the existing state of the law, to appear under the title of the Verulam Law Library. They consider that, carefully revised and noted, neatly printed, uniform in size, and moderate in price, it would be acceptable to a sufficient number of the members to justify the adventure. We ask opinions upon it.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

The Statutes relating to the Ecclesiastical and Eleemosynary Institutions of England, Wales, Ireland, India, and the Colonies; with the decisions thereon. By ARCHIBALD JOHN STEPHENS, Barrister-at-Law. In 2 vols. London, 1845. Parker.

The following is the plan of the compiler of this useful work:—

He has arranged the statutes in chronological order, commencing with 9 Hen. 3, c. 1, and terminating with 7 & 8 Vict. c. 108.

Of repealed statutes the titles only are given, save where they affect existing interests, or illustrate the present law, and the titles of statutes relating to the Church of Scotland have been introduced for convenience of reference.

Mr. STEPHENS has added a large and valuable mass of learned notes, illustrative of the law in the text, and comprising all the cases decided upon the several statutes.

An index, of uncommon completeness, affords a ready access to any topic sought by the inquirer; and a table of cases, extending over many pages, proves the diligence with which Mr. STEPHENS has performed his task of illustration.

The work is handsomely printed, and will doubtless prove to be of very great utility to the clergy, and to those members of the legal profession whose practice may require of them researches into Ecclesiastical and Eleemosynary Law.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

CONDITIONS OF SALE.

ON THE LAW RELATING TO CONDITIONS OF SALE.

The general law relative to the sufficiency of signature by agents will be found at large in Sir Edward Sugden's well-known treatise on Vendors and Purchasers.

II. Conditions concurrent are of two kinds:—
(I.) Restrictive: (II.) Remedial.
(I.) Conditions restrictive:—

Conditions of this class fluctuate very much, according to the vendor's own apprehension of the exigencies of his title. But there are two kinds of restrictive conditions which are in very common use. The one usually provides that all recitals of births, deaths, marriages, heirships, intestacies, successions, and matters of pedigree, and other facts, contained in documents anterior to a given date, shall be conclusive evidence of the matters so recited. The other is adopted in order to limit the vendor's liability to the production of deeds and documents.

1. In regard to conditions rendering recitals conclusive evidence, Mr. Jarman has made the following valuable observations: (9 Jarman's Conveyancing, pp. 3, 4)—"Care should be taken, before this is done, to ascertain that the recitals or statements in the title deeds are all unambiguous and consistent with each other, for any inconsistency of statement as to a particular fact would, of course, amount to a deficiency even of such evidence as by the condition the purchaser is entitled to have, and would give him a right to call for the ordinary evidence of that fact. It may be doubted also, considering the rigour with which restrictive conditions of sale are construed as against the vendor, whether, unless the language of the condition clearly expressed such an intention, it would be extended to bind the purchaser to accept recitals as evidence of conclusions of law. Whether, for example, under a condition that all recitals of facts and matters of pedigree, in deeds of twenty years old or upwards, should be sufficient evidence of the facts and matters recited, a purchaser would be bound to accept a mere recital that J. S. was the heir-at-law of E. T. as evidence of that fact, which, it will be observed, is something more than a matter of pedigree, being a conclusion of law, often not of easy determination, from circumstances which alone are strictly matters of pedigree; for, under the same pedigree, J. S. may be the heir-at-law of E. T. as to one estate and not his heir as to another. The proper construction of a condition making recitals evidence of the facts and matters recited, would seem to be, that the recitals must state every fact and matter which, in the absence of such a condition, counsel advising on the title would require to be stated on the abstract, and to be proved, in order to enable him to draw the required conclusion. When it is considered how very seldom a recital of an heirship, unless it be of the simplest character (as that A was the eldest son of B), contains a complete statement of the pedigree and other matters necessary to support such a conclusion the expediency of framing conditions of this nature in a more special manner than is usual will be apparent."

The foregoing remarks are in part confirmed by a decision of Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce in Symons v. James (1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 487), not reported on this point; where the condition being, that all recitals or statements of descents, deaths, payments of money, heirships, intestacies, and other facts, in deeds bearing date twenty years prior to the day of sale, shall be deemed conclusive evidence of such facts, His Honor held, that a recital of a seisin was not protected by the condition—a seisin being not itself a fact, but a conclusion of law deducible from ascertained facts.

It should be observed, also, that an abstract is not complete merely by the exhibition of a given number of facts on the face of the deeds or in the recitals. To give those facts their proper legal effect further particulars are often necessary, and special conditions do not usually extend to restrict the purchaser from requiring such additional evidence. The death of a tenant for life, or of a wife or a child, may be a material feature in the title; but the exact time, or place, of such an event, and its relative priority to other events, may be a still more essential element of the purchaser's safety. Therefore, although the purchaser may be precluded from requiring evidence of the simple fact, we presume that he may, unless specially restricted, call for proof of incidental circumstances like those to which we have alluded.

2. In reference to conditions restrictive of the purchaser's right to call for deeds or other documentary evidence, it has been decided that where the conditions are so expressed as merely to restrain a purchaser from requiring the deduction of such a title as he would have had a right to require in the absence of the restrictive stipulations, the purchaser is not bound to accept a defective title: and the conditions merely operate to protect the vendor from suits and actions, in case of his failing to make out a marketable title. They relieve the vendor from the obligation of making out the good title, but do not oblige a purchaser to accept a bad one.

This appears by the case of Hyde v. Dallaway (4 Beav. 606), where the sixth condition of sale was as follows: "All the statements and recitals in any deed or document abstracted or recited in a deed or document abstracted, shall be held conclusive evidence of the facts and circumstances, and of the contents of the documents stated and recited; and the vendors shall not be required to produce any further evidence of the same, or to deduce the representation to any trustee in whom a term, or other legal estate, has been vested, or to get in any such legal estate, or to procure the concurrence in the sale or conveyance of any parties interested in the equity of redemption of the property sold, or to produce any deed or document not in the vendor's possession: and all certificates of births, burials, and marriages, and all declarations and copies of deeds, &c., surrenders and conveyances of outstanding legal estates, shall be at the expense of the person requiring the same; and the completion of the purchase shall not be delayed till such outstanding estate can be got in." The defendant became the purchaser, and resisted the specific performance of the contract, on the ground that the title was imperfect without the concurrence of the parties interested in the equity of redemption. On the cause coming on to be heard, Lord Langdale, M. R., did not treat the condition as conclusive between the parties, but made the usual reference to the Master to inquire whether a good title could be made according to the conditions. A similar decision was made in Flower v. Hartop (7 Jur. 613), where, by one of the conditions of sale, the purchaser was not to require further evidence of the identity of the parcels than that which was supplied by the abstract and the deeds. The description in the abstract did not correspond with that in the particulars, and Lord Langdale, M. R., held that the variance must be explained before a decree for specific performance could be made.

A decision apparently militating in some degree against the cases just quoted was made by the Court of King's Bench in the case of Spratt v. Jeffrey (10 B. & C. 249), where it appeared that the contract contained the following clause: "And the said William Spratt doth hereby agree to accept a proper assignment of the said leases and premises as above described, without requiring the lessor's title." The Court held that the vendor contracted to sell only a qualified title: but the propriety of this decision seems to have been questioned by the Court of Exchequer in Shepherd v. Keatley (1 Cro. M. & R. 117).

In like manner, where the conditions provide that the purchaser shall not be at liberty to call for the production of certain specially excepted deeds, it has been decided that he will not be compelled to take a doubtful title exhibited by the deeds actually produced. In Dick v. Donald (1 Bligh, 655, N. S.), Lord Lyndhurst, C., in reference to this point, said, "As to the condition with respect to the title deeds, I never heard that because the vendor provides by the conditions of sale that he will give to the purchaser only certain specified deeds, the purchaser must take a bad title, or such title as appears upon the deeds." The same principle was followed by Lord Chancellor Cottenham

Southby v. Hutt (2 Myl. & Cr. 207), where a question arose upon the conditions of sale, whether the plaintiff, the vendor, was or was not bound to verify the abstract of his title by producing, for the inspection of the defendant or his solicitor, the several documents mentioned in the abstract, or by furnishing other satisfactory evidence. The conditions of sale, so far as they were material to the question between the parties, were the following:—"4th. That the vendor will, at his own expense, deliver an abstract of the title to the purchaser or his solicitor of the first seven lots and lot 33 within twenty-one days from the day of the sale, and deduce a good title but as to such parts of the land as were allotted or taken in exchange under the award of the commissioners of the Appleton inclosure, the purchaser shall not be at liberty to require, and the vendor shall not be bound to shew any title thereto prior to the said award, from which period the title to such lands will be deduced. 6th. The vendor . . . shall not be bound, or required to produce any original deeds or other documents than those in his possession and set forth in the abstract, or which relate to other property." The vendor contended that, notwithstanding the terms of the 4th condition, he was relieved by the 6th condition from verifying the abstract, except so far as he was able to do so by the production of deeds and documents in his own possession. But Lord Chancellor Cottenham overruled this construction; and held that the vendor had by the 4th condition expressly contracted to deduce a good title, and that if the vendor were not bound to verify any part of the abstract, the deducing and exhibiting a good title on paper would be mere mockery and delusion. His lordship held also that the latter words of the 4th condition put a construction on the word "deduce," and proved that it meant not only to exhibit on paper, but to deduce and shew a good title; for, as to certain allotments, an exception to the generality of the obligation to deduce a good title was introduced; and that it would be absurd by means of the 6th condition to convert a positive contract for a good title into a contract under which the purchaser might be obliged to take the estate without any title at all, and certainly without any means of proving a title. His lordship therefore directed a reference to the Master to inquire whether the vendor could make a good title.

In Southby v. Hutt there was this peculiarity, that the vendor had expressly undertaken to deduce a good title. But it may be suggested that such an undertaking, though not expressed in words, is by law implied in every contract of sale, where the contrary intention is not explicitly declared; (a) and that the Court will not infer such intention from any ambiguous expressions, so as to enable a vendor to force an imperfect title upon a reluctant purchaser.

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

BREEZE v. ENGLISH.

Thursday, May 8.

Practice—Leave given at hearing, to supply accidental defect in proof—Costs.

After a bill of revivor and supplement, the Court will allow the plaintiff to amend his bill by the statement of a certain fact necessary to perfect the chain of evidence, although the fact itself was in the knowledge of the party at the time he filed his bill of revivor, but he had omitted to state it through inadvertence.

When a party applies to the Court to cure a defect caused by his own negligence or oversight, he must pay the costs of the motion, whether he succeed in his application or not; and it makes no difference even, where the party is in circumstances of poverty, unless he appear upon the record to sue in formâ pauperis.

It will be seen by a reference to 4 Law T. 230, that an application, by motion, was made in a supplemental suit to the cause of Breeze v. Hawker, when it was urged by the learned counsel in support of the motion, that notwithstanding there might have been some reprehensible omissions in the record, under the circumstances of the case the Court would only be acting in accordance with the authorities in granting the application; but the Vice-Chancellor of England refused to make the order upon the facts as they then appeared, and questioned whether if the Court gave leave to obtain the evidence sought, the evidence might not accomplish the desired object. His Honour, therefore, on that occasion directed the matter to stand over for counsel's further consideration.

The original suits of Breeze v. Hawker and Breeze v. English were instituted in respect of the freehold and copyhold property devised by the will of one Mr. John Almes (the grandfather of the female plaintiffs), which bore date 23rd Oct. 1775, the testator himself dying on the same day. The bill was filed as to the copyholds. Under the will it was doubtful whether the children took by survivorship, as joint tenants, or whether it passed to their representatives. The bill was filed 21st Feb. 1833, by Thomas Breeze, and Harriet his wife, formerly Harriet Almes, James Nicholls and Ann his wife, formerly Ann Almes; these two female plaintiffs being the daughters of James Almes, son of the testator, against H. C. Hawker and John Almes, the surviving son of James Almes, then out of the jurisdiction. The defendant Hawker filed his answer 13th Dec. 18[illegible]. At that time, it was supposed that the defendant, John Almes, was abroad, out of the jurisdiction, but he arrived in England sometime in August, 18[illegible]. A further answer was put in by Hawker 27th Sept. 18[illegible], in which he stated nothing respecting the arrival of the other defendant, [illegible] as it was supposed, from his ignorance of the fact. Depositions were taken by the plaintiffs in the cause 1[illegible] Jan. 18[illegible]. John Almes died in the month of Feb. 18[illegible]. The title of these depositions alluded to the last-named defendant as "John Almes, now deceased." The depositions of [illegible], the solicitor, was also entered. It had on the former occasion been objected to the application to amend that, although it was known that J. Almes had died in the year 1837, which caused an abatement, yet that the solicitor proceeded to take evidence in the year 1838, as if he were then living, and out of the jurisdiction; and the bill of revivor and supplement, which was not filed till 17th July, 1839, for the first time mentions his death, but did not state when he died, there having been blanks left for the day of the month and the year of his decease.

Cooper, Lee, and Elderton, in again applying to the Court for the purpose of allowing the amendment, contended that it was not thought necessary to notice J. Almes' death when the bill of revivor was filed, because it was not supposed but that Mrs. Breeze and Mrs. Nicholls took by survivorship, which would depend upon the construction of the will, so that there was nothing to prevent carrying the suit to a hearing, and ascertaining whether the children took by survivorship or as tenants in common. Hawkins, the purchaser of the property, had died, whereby a bill of revivor against his personal representative, English, became necessary, and in drawing the bill of revivor it was thought desirable, ex abundanti cautela, to bring the personal representative of John Almes before the Court. That it was admitted that the chronological order of dates had not been observed, which had caused some severity of remark from the other side, in that having, in the depositions previously taken, stated the death of John Almes, they had omitted to notice the date of his death in the bill of revivor in July, 1839, which omission arose from carelessness, and not with any bad motive. That the only person who could be injured by it was J. Almes' personal representative, Mrs. Nicholls, one of the plaintiffs to the record, who in the bill of revivor stated his death, but left blanks for the date; that, in the other suit of Breeze v. English, which relates to the freehold, the death of John Almes is mentioned, and the affidavit of Mr. Hume, in 1842, clearly testified the fact of his decease; that, under the cases of Hood v. Pimm (4 Sim. 101), and Hughes v. Eades (1 Hare, 486), the Court will allow the defect to be supplied where it is material, and omitted. As it was impossible for the plaintiffs to pay the costs if they were insisted upon, it would put an end to the suit. It was a mere technical objection; and not only the plaintiff's depositions, but the defendant's also, described the death of John Almes, therefore they must have been aware that the letters of administration were forthcoming, and that, therefore, the Court would not extend the practice beyond what it has gone before.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—It is quite competent for the Court to allow a party to prove a fact necessary to be proved, but which by mistake has not been proved. Now the present case is one of as gross neglect as can well be; for John Almes died in the year 1837, evidence of it is given in depositions taken in 1838, and upon the face of these depositions John Almes appears to be dead. A bill of revivor and supplement was filed in 1839, in which the death is stated, but omitting to state when that event happened. In 1842 the cause came on to be heard, but was found to be defective; but the Court allowed the parties to amend. The bill was not amended, however, until 1844; still the parties proceeded without proving the death of John Almes; two distinct proofs were required, but the defect was not remedied. It is true, very little disclosure of the real facts of cases are made by paupers in their professional communications, but this was a fact known to the solicitor himself. When a person comes to ask the Court's indulgence to be relieved against his own mistake, the rule is, that he must pay the costs whether his application be granted or not.

Liberty to prove upon payment of costs. Stands over.

This cause came on to be argued on Tuesday, 10th instant, for the Court to relieve the plaintiffs against a sale which they had made to one of the defendants some years ago. It would seem that the plaintiffs were, under the will of Admiral Almes, entitled to a qualified fee simple; but, being ignorant of that fact, under an erroneous impression that they had only a life estate in the property, sold it, and the same was purchased as such by the defendant Hawker at a price far inferior to its real worth. Before, however, the plaintiff's case had been argued fully, an objection was taken by Mr. Bethell, that the devolution of the property from the original trustees to the defendants, who appeared as their representatives, had not been fully made out; and the Court being of the same opinion, the bill was dismissed with costs, but without prejudice to filing another bill.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Wednesday, June 4.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF ST. GILES, CRIPPLEGATE.

Appearance at the sessions upon an appeal will not give jurisdiction if the appeal has been entered too late.

An order of removal had been made on the 4th of August, 1844, and the notice of chargeability, with the examinations, were sent in August to the appellant parish. The actual removal took place upon the 1st of October, and the next sessions were upon the 19th of October, but there was no entry or respite of the appeal at that sessions; it was entered at the Christmas sessions. The respondents protested against the jurisdiction of the sessions, but the appeal was heard, and the proceedings were now brought up for the purpose of being quashed.

H. Wilde, in support of the order of sessions.

REG. v. P. DAWSON.

To ground an application for mandamus to inspect court-rolls pending an action, it must be shewn distinctly that the issues relate to the lands held of the manor.

This was a demurrer to a return to a mandamus. The writ recited that the manor of Howly was an ancient manor, and that an action at law was pending, in which the defendant, Pudsey Dawson, was plaintiff and one Redmead, the applicant for the writ of mandamus, was defendant; and that the defendant Redmead was entitled to, or interested in, certain lands within the manor, that were held of the lord of the manor until 1711, as customary freeholds, when they were enfranchised by Act of Parliament; and certain other lands within the said manor, which were also held as customary freeholds until their enfranchisement in 1774, and that they were still held under the lord of the manor, with certain services; and that it was material and requisite, to enable the defendant Redmead to prepare for the trial of the said issues, to inspect and take copies of the court-rolls, so far as they relate to the issues in the said action. It then set out a demand and refusal, and the mandatory part corresponded with the demand recited in the inducement. To this the defendant had returned, first, a traverse of the demand; and the return further contained objections to the writ in the nature of special demurrer, that it did not appear how the said Redmead was interested in the said lands, or what title he had, or that the action or issues related to the said lands and hereditaments.

Pashley, in support of the demurrer.—It is too late to aver no demand. The writ itself would be a sufficient demand. He cited R. v. Tower (4 M. & S. 162); R. v. Shelley (3 T. R. 141); Crewe v. Saunders (2 Str. 1005). It is shewn that this is equivalent to a copyhold tenancy. [COLERIDGE, J.—Is not this relating to the lord's title? Your writ is framed so wide, that it is difficult to know what is asked for.] The lord is plaintiff in the action, and must therefore know as well as we can tell him. The applicant is within the decisions of Ex parte Hutt (7 D. P. C. 690), and Ex parte Barnes (2 D. N. S. 20). The statement of being interested suffices, at least, in substance. The only objection that can be taken to the writ now is that it is substantially defective. (Reg v. Powell, 2 Q. B. 360.)

Cowling, contrà.—The writ is bad. The applicant ought to shew clearly that he is entitled to the inspection, and that does not here appear. He is not a copyholder applying against the lord of the manor, but only a person with some interest, and the issues may be wholly unconnected with these lands. He was then stopped.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It does not appear that these issues relate to these lands, or that the entries are in any such way connected with the questions in dispute. Judgment for the defendant.

SELBY v. BROWN.

Use and occupation—Pleading.

Demurrer to plea.

This was an action of debt for use and occupation. Plea, as to 40*l.* parcel of sum in the first count, said to be due and owing for the use and occupation for the space of one year; that before the demise by the plaintiff to defendant, the Brewers' Company were seised of the premises in question, and had leased it to one Staly, subject to provisoes for re-entry upon breaches of certain covenants; that Staly entered and assigned to the plaintiff; that defendant entered as yearly tenant to the plaintiff, and held it as such for the whole year; that breaches of the covenants had been committed by Staly and the plaintiff; that the Brewers' Company, after the accrual of the said causes of action, re-entered by virtue of the provisoes, and for the purpose of determining the lease, and "did elect to determine, and did then determine, the lease from the time of the commencement of the defendant's tenancy."

H. Hill, in support of the demurrer.—This plea is bad, as amounting to nil habuit in tenementis, or to the general issue; and it is also bad in substance, as shewing an eviction after the rent accrued.

Cases cited: Prentice v. Elliott (5 M. & W. 606); Bac. Abr. Rent, L.; Palmer v. Ekins (2 Ld. Raym. 1550); Atchorn v. Gomme (2 Bing. [illegible]); Crobham v. Thornbury (Hob. 82).

Fitzherbert, contrà.—Doe v. Seton (2 C. M. & R.

729); Doe v. Higginbotham (11 A. & E. 307); Claridge v. M'Kenzie (4 M. & G. 143); Balls v. Westwood (2 Campb. 11); Waddilove v. Burnett (2 B. N. C. 538).

M. Hill, in reply.—The plea shews that the causes of action had accrued at the time of eviction.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—The defendant admits that the estate was in the plaintiff, as lessee, at the time of his entry as tenant, but says that the Brewers' Company re-entered. We ought, therefore, to know distinctly when this re-entry took place. If after the rent accrued, it is no defence, and the allegation that they elected to determine it as from the commencement, I do not understand.

PATTESON, J.—If the title of the plaintiff ceased before the expiration of the year, then this plea amounts to the general issue, and is bad; if it ceased afterwards, it is no defence to the action, and the plea alleges that it took place after the accruing of the cause of action. The subsequent statement that the Brewers' Company elected to determine it from the beginning, does not, as I am aware, amount to a legal determination of the tenancy from that period, and if it did, that the plaintiff never had any title. In any way, therefore, the plea is bad.

WILLIAMS and COLERIDGE, JJ. concurred.

Judgment for plaintiff.

TAYLOR v. STENDALL.

It is no plea to an action by a reversioner for waste by a stranger, that he was the innocent cause of the mischief, and entered upon the premises to repair it, and did repair it, to the best of his ability, and within a reasonable time.

Demurrer to plea.

This was an action on the case for waste, brought by a reversioner against a stranger for injury done to a wall, and building upon the land. The defendant pleaded that he was the occupier of an adjoining house, and that in the course of some necessary repairs to the said house, some scaffolding and other materials accidentally, and without any negligence or fault of the defendant, fell upon the said wall and building, and knocked it down, and that afterwards, and within a reasonable time, the defendant entered the close and re-erected the wall, &c. &c.

Whitehurst, Q. C. in support of the demurrer. The Court called upon

Atkinson to support the plea.—This is in the nature of the old action for waste in the tenuit, and the authorities shew that the repair of the waste done before writ sued was an answer. (Com. Dig. Waste, E. 5; Bro. Abr. Waste; 2 Roll. 682; 2 Inst.; Young v. Spencer, 10 B. & C. 145; Bell v. Twentyman, 1 Q.B. 766.)

By the COURT.—In those cases the tenant had the duty of repairing thrown upon him; but this is an action against a stranger, and to make your plea good you must maintain that you had a right to go upon the land and re-erect the wall, which is clearly not the case. Judgment for plaintiff.

PEAKE v. SCHREECH.

Pilot Act.

The exemption enjoyed by the owners of ships resident in Dover, Deal, or the Isle of Thanet, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 62, is confined to ships sailing from Dover, Deal, or the Isle of Thanet, or into or out of any port or place within the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports.

Demurrer to plea.

This was an action for penalties under the Pilot Act, 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 19. The plea set up an exemption under the 62nd section, which was demurred to. The Court called upon Bovill to support the plea.—The question is, whether a shipowner resident in Dover, Deal, or the Isle of Thanet is bound to take a Cinque Port pilot? It turns upon the construction of "places aforesaid." This is not to be confined to Dover, Deal, and the Isle of Thanet. There was an opinion given at Nisi Prius by Lord Tenterden that they were to be so confined; but that was unnecessary in the case, as the jury found that there was no bonâ fide residence. The objects of the different Pilot Acts were commented upon at length.

Watson, Q. C. in reply.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It is quite clear that Lord Tenterden was right. The words "places aforesaid" refer only to Dover, Deal, and the Isle of Thanet.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Judgment for plaintiff.

WORTHINGTON v. GRIMSDITCH.

Statute of Limitations.

Sufficiency of payment to defeat the statute is more properly a question for the jury.

This was an action of debt for money lent. Pleas—Never indebted, Payment, and Statute of Limitations.

At the trial, the only question was upon the third plea. It appeared that the plaintiff's testator had, previous to 1822, advanced to the defendant various sums of money. Up to 1822, the interest upon them amounted to 93*l*. 13*s*. The defendant had annually paid certain rents and tithes due from the deceased up to 1822; these amounted to 93*l*. 10*s*. 5*d*. It appeared that he had at first done so without her direction, but that it was recognised in the accounts between them; and in 1823 there was a balance due from the defendant of 60*l*. The rent and tithes were lowered about 1832 to 76*l*. and this sum the defendant continued to pay. It was held by the learned judge at the trial, that there was some evidence to go to the jury of a payment to take the case out of the statute. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, and a rule had been obtained by Evans to set aside this verdict and to enter it for the defendant; against which Welsby (May 23) shewed cause.—There was reasonable evidence to infer an understanding that the interest was to be in part kept down by the payment of the rent. The sums were, in the first instance, nearly identical. Tippets v. Heane (1 C. M. & R 252) was cited.

Evans, in support of the rule.—There was no proof on what account this payment of 76*l*. was made, and that is the material question. (Holme v. Green, Stark. 488; Tippets v. Heane, 1 C. M. & R. 252; Mills v. Fowkes, 5 B. N. C. 455.) The set-off was never connected with a payment. Cur. adv. vult.

On Saturday, June 6, judgment was delivered by Lord DENMAN, C.J.—The question here is the effect of certain payments to take a debt out of the Statute of Limitations. The payment was not a part payment of the principal, but a part payment of interest. At first, the payment was not made by the direction of the intestate, but it was for her; and the question is, whether there was any evidence that the subsequent payments were made as such, or as matters of set-off only. Payments may have the effect of taking the case out of the statute in various ways. Where accounts are settled between the parties, and the items on both sides set off, as in Ashby v. James (11 M. & W. 542), it is a mode of payment by agreement, and such an agreement may be proved by implication from a course of conduct, like any other agreement; and in Waugh v. Cope (6 M. & W. 824) it was said that it is always more a question of fact than of law. The payment by the defendant here was a payment of rent and tithes for the testator and her sisters, which at first was within a few shillings of the amount of the interest. The rent was subsequently lowered in amount, but it was regularly paid by the defendant. He delivered an account, in which he charges rents and tithes paid for the testator. The defendant was nearly related to the parties who lent the money, and it would be unreasonable to say that there was no evidence whatever that he acted as the agent of the testator in paying the rent, and that he did not pay it as a separate ground of set-off. The question was, therefore, rightly left to the jury. Rule discharged.

REG. v. COCK.

Semble, the Court of Queen's Bench has power to grant a habeas corpus to bring up a prisoner committed for trial before a coroner's inquest. But a very clear case of necessity must be shewn.

Kelly, Q. C. applied to the Court for a habeas corpus to bring up the defendant from the gaol of Newgate, in order to his being taken before the coroner's inquest, now sitting on the body of Hannah Moore. The affidavit stated that a young man and Hannah Moore, passing as husband and wife, went to a public house, called the Coach and Horses, where they remained for the night, and went out in the morning. Upon the evening of the same day they returned again to the house, and after they had been there for some time, the young man ran down stairs calling for medical assistance, and alleging that his wife was dying, after having taken oxalic acid. Medical attendance was procured by the man himself, but the young woman died. Upon the man was found a paper, from which it appeared that the parties had agreed to commit suicide, and that the name of "Daniel John Cock" was written upon the paper. The man was taken before a magistrate, and committed to Newgate, upon the charge of having been guilty of the death of the woman in question. The coroner having received information of the circumstances, proceeded to hold an inquest upon the body, when it appeared clear to the jury that they could not proceed without having the said Daniel John Cock before them, as none of the witnesses who saw him at the inn ever knew him before, and could only identify him when he was before them. It is necessary to have the name of the party suspected, as the presentment of the coroner's jury is an indictment. Persons in criminal custody have, in several instances, been brought up for the purpose of being identified. (Daniel v. Thompson, 15 East, 78; Ex parte Griffiths, 5 B. & A. 730; case of Sir R. Price, 4 East, 587; Attorney-General v. Jeadden, 1 Price, 403.) [PATTESON, J.—Several Acts have passed to enable persons in custody to be brought up before certain courts—as courts-martial, and do not these imply that we have not the power at common law?] Those were not courts of ancient jurisdiction and importance, like the Coroner's Court, and they might also have been passed to clear up doubts whether a single judge had the power. The Statute of Coroners, 4 Edw. 1, and 31 Car. 2, c. 2, were also cited. A similar application was made before Mr. Baron Rolfe, but it was refused, because the Central Criminal Court was actually sitting. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—I am quite aware of that. I was in full communication with my brother Rolfe, and he had no doubt as to the power to grant a habeas for such a purpose if necessary. PATTESON, J.—Why cannot the witnesses who identified the man before the magistrate go before the coroner?] The coroner cannot ascertain who they are. [PATTESON, J.—Why cannot he ask?]

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—I have the greatest respect for the Court of the coroner, and entertain the highest opinion of the services which it renders in preserving the lives of her Majesty subjects; but the power of which the exercise is requested upon the present occasion, even if it indubitably existed, ought to be exercised with the greatest caution, and with a strong apprehension of the danger of taking a person out of custody to which he has been committed upon the charge of so great an offence as that for which the party is confined upon the present occasion. If, however, it should upon any occasion appear that the coroner's jury could not proceed with their inquiry in a conclusive and satisfactory manner, this Court would consider what it had the power and was under the obligation of doing, for the assistance of the inferior tribunal; but, upon the statements made in support of the present application it does not appear that there was any difficulty in the case. In the present case there is not that absolute necessity which would justify this rule being granted.

PATTESON, J.—Every purpose would be answered if the witnesses who had been before the magistrates would go before the coroner, and after stating all the facts of the case, state in addition, that the person who was in the company of the young woman at the public-house was the same person whom they saw in custody before the magistrate upon the charge.

Rule refused.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF FOLESHILL.

Rateability of a canal to the poor-rate—Parliamentary mileage.

This was a contest between two parishes as to their relative proportion of rate payable by a canal, part of which passed into both parishes; and whether the parish of Foleshill was entitled to rate the gross toll paid to the Oxford Canal on account of the creation of the Grand Junction Canal Company, these tolls not passing through the parish of Foleshill, but being compensation tolls under a local Act (33 Geo. 3, c. 80), and if so, whether the rate was to be levied according to the ordinary or the parliamentary mileage.

Hill, Q.C.—This case has been often before the courts. (Rex v. Oxford Canal Company, 4 B. & Cr. 4; same case, 10 B. & Cr. 163.) Are these gross tonnages to be paid on the traffic which never enters Foleshill? This Court has often determined that this shall not be so. (Hull Dock Company, 5 Law T.) Here it is clear that there is no advantage to them upon the canal in that part at Foleshill. It might not exist and do no harm to them. (Reg. v. Cook, B. & Cr. 797; Rex v. Tynemouth, 12 East, 40; Bott, 142; Cowper, 583.) These cases establish the general principle that the traffic only which comes into a parish is to be rated. The next question is, on what ratio the canal shall be rated. We admit that the parish of Foleshill has boats passing through it. We say the tonnage is rateable only by such parishes as the boat has passed through or into; and that it is rateable as to distance according to the parliamentary length, and not according to the actual measure in ordinary miles. The gross tonnage and the mileage tonnage stand on precisely the same footing. The Court cannot know the actual distances; but the Act has caused certain stones to be set up, defining, according to certain rules, what are miles within its scope. If the actual and parliamentary distances differ, that is an accident with which this Court has nothing to do. The parish of Foleshill is the same as that to which the cases in 9 & 10 B. & C. relate, and there no such claim as this was made except on the traffic which passed through the parish.

Miller, same side.—First, as to right to rate the tolls that did not pass through this parish. It is a fallacy to suppose that the whole profit and the rate thereon are applicable to the entire line of canal, or that this is strengthened by the fact that compensation tolls were given because two new canals were started. The principle of rating is to ascertain what a lease of a canal would be worth. If a party took a mile of the canal at Foleshill, how would he be benefited by tolls on coals which did not pass through it? Neither would he earn more, or be able to take higher tolls. And the value to the tenant is the rateable value; therefore it is not rateable to these compensation tolls. The first Grand Junction Act gave the compensation tolls generally; but the subsequent Act states that such gross tonnages on goods shall be taken for "the distance the same may respectively pass," and in no other way. The other question then arises as to the ratio of distance. The relative value of the tolls in different parishes has been much altered by the new parliamentary standard. One mile is now in one parish as valuable as two miles in another parish, owing to the increased value of the shortened distance.

Hayes, same side.—This is the first time that a parish has made a claim for tolls which have not come near the parish. In Rex v. Oxford Canal Company (4 B. & Cr. 74), the question was expressly confined to goods which have passed through the parish or town, and no one thought of claiming for any other. It would be most inconvenient if the rate were to depend on the boats pursuing a course, such as should make the gross tonnage payable instead of the other.

Martin, Q. C. contrà, with whom was —The canal company has nothing at all to do with this question. It is a matter of conflict between the parishes. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It is a sort of interpleader.] 10 Geo. 4 is a consolidation of the former Acts as to this canal. 31 Geo. 3 created the Grand Junction Canal. (Rex v. Oxford Canal, 4 B. & Cr. 74, per Bayley, J.) The gross toll is a compensation to be paid to the Oxford Canal on account of the creation of the Grand Junction Canal. It is quite immaterial through what parishes the tolls pass; it is only a means of making a compensation for the goods which pass into the Grand Junction from the Oxford Canal.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—There are two questions in the case. The first is, whether the canal company is to be rated, without regard to the entry of the vessels within the parish. This has already been decided in the negative in R. v. Oxford Canal Company (10 B. & C. 163). It is true that the subsequent Act of Parliament contains enactments respecting the gross tonnages, and the words are not precisely the same as in the former Act, but they are capable of the same meaning. The second question is as to the proportion of the toll in respect of the shortened part of the canal, whether it is to be rated according to its actual length or according to the length it was before it was shortened by Act of Parliament. The 78th and 79th section of the Act specify the length for the purpose of charging the toll, and also the proportion earned in the different parishes. It must, therefore, be the foundation of the calculation of the rate. The rate, therefore, is to be confirmed, but altered from 650*l.* to 698*l.*

REG. v. THE GUARDIANS of ST. MARY, LAMBETH.

Where a union has been framed, and consists of a single parish, the guardians of the union are guardians of the parish, and are consequently entitled to sign a notice of chargeability under the 79th sec. of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76.

This was an appeal from an order of sessions, by which it was held that a notice of chargeability signed by the guardians of the union of St. Mary, Lambeth, which parish comprised one entire union, was invalid, and that the signature of the guardians or overseers of the parish was required under the 79th sec. of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76 (the Poor Law Amendment Act).

Charnock, in support of the order of sessions, cited ss. 39, 72, and 79 of the above stat.; 13 & 14 Car. 2; 22 Geo. 3, c. 83; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 37; R. v. The Justices of Warwickshire (6 Ad. & El. 873); Rex v. The Justices of Derbyshire (ib. 885); Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Westbury (1 New Sess. Ca. 33); Reg. v. The Justices of Surrey (1 N. Sess. Ca. 124).

Bovill, contrà.—He relied upon Reg. v. The Justices of Surrey, and referred to Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Westbury, and to the 39, 41, 79, 81, and 109 sections of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4.

The Court expressed a desire, before they gave their decision, to hear the argument in

REG. v. THE GUARDIANS OF ST. MARY, SOUTHAMPTON.

Where an union consists of three parishes, the guardians of the union are not guardians of the parish, and cannot consequently sign the notice of chargeability.

This was also an appeal from an order of sessions respecting the validity of a notice of chargeability, and the question turned, as in the last case, upon the point whether the signature should be in the hands of the guardians of the union or of the guardians of the parish. There was, however, a material distinction between the two cases. In the present case the union consisted of three parishes, under a local Act (18 Geo. 3, c. 50), and not of a single parish, as in the instance of St. Mary, Lambeth.

Sanders and Pashley, in support of the order of sessions, submitted that the guardians of the union could not be regarded as guardians of the three parishes of which the union consisted. This case, whatever the last might be, was clearly within the principle of Reg. v. The Justices of Surrey. They referred to the 38, 39, and 79 sections of the Poor Law Amendment Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 64), and to Arnold v. The Corporation of Poole (4 M. & G. 860).

Watson, Q.C. and Archbold, contrà.—This was not the ordinary case of a union of parishes where each contributed separately; but it was such a union of the three as made the guardians of the union guardians of the three parishes; and they acted as parish officers. The union of parishes under the Poor-law Amendment Act was only a union for the management of the poor, not for the purpose of rating, as this was, and this distinction prevented the application of the principle of Reg. v. The Justices of Surrey. The overseers and churchwardens of one parish alone could not sign the notice of chargeability, because the rate for the relief of the poor was made upon the whole district.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—In the former case the sessions are wrong. The guardians of the union of St. Mary, Lambeth, are guardians of the parish, and may consequently sign the notice of chargeability under the 79th section of the Act. In the Southampton case, the sessions are right. The guardians of the union are not guardians of the parish.

PATTESON, J.—The Poor-law Amendment Act says that the notice shall be sent by the guardians of the "parish." It is clear that the guardians of the Southampton Union, consisting of three parishes, do not come within that description. There is not the least doubt about the other case, because there the guardians of the union are guardians of the parish.

WILLIAMS and COLERIDGE, JJ. concurred.

In the first case order of sessions quashed.
In the second case, order of sessions confirmed.

GRENVILLE v. EDGCUMBE.

This was an application to set aside an award on two grounds: 1st, that the finding was inconsistent; 2nd, that the arbitrator had not exercised one of the powers conferred upon him by the submission. The declaration in case alleged a seisin for life of certain lands in W. S. and his wife, and the reversion in the plaintiff; it set forth that one T. H. had wrongfully erected a certain mill and other buildings on the lands, and that the defendant, in whom it alleged possession, had continued the mill, &c. and grievance "so wrongfully erected by the said T. H." &c. The first plea was "not guilty;" the fourth plea was that T. H. did not erect the said mill, &c. modo et formâ. The case was referred to an arbitrator, and he was to determine what was to be done by way of sale or otherwise respecting the cause of action and the premises in dispute. The arbitrator found for the plaintiff on the first three pleas, and for the defendant on the fourth, and did not determine what was to be done by way of sale or otherwise respecting the premises in dispute. Against the rule cause was now shewn by

Butt, Q. C.—First, if there be inconsistency between the finding on the first plea and that on the fourth, it is error. (Cooper v. Landon, 9 M. & W.) Second. The plea of "not guilty" only puts in issue the fact of the conti uance of the obstruction, and not the setting up by another person. (Frankum v. The Earl of Falmouth, 2 A. & E. 452; Wright v. Lawson, 8 M. & W. 739.) Third. The arbitrator may refuse in terms to exercise a power conferred on him; or may refuse by abstaining from exercising it. (Angus v. Redfearn, 11 M. & W. 619.)

Crowder, Q. C. contrà.—The charge is the continuing a grievance "so wrongfully erected." That means the grievance erected by T. H. The plea of not guilty has determined that.

PATTESON, J.—The plea of not guilty admits the wrongful erection; it only denies the continuance.

COLERIDGE, J.—And if the issues be inconsistent, why should not the arbitrator determine according to the fact?

Crowder.—As to the second point—

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Is that arguable?

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF KENILWORTH.

Poor—Appeal—Indenture of apprenticeship, secondary evidence of.

This was an appeal against an order for the removal of a pauper on which the sessions had quashed the order subject to a case. The order was for the removal of the pauper to the place in which it was alleged that his deceased father had gained a settlement by apprenticeship. The evidence of the apprenticeship was, that an officer of the removing parish had gone, in the year 1840, in which the pauper had first become chargeable, to the workhouse of the Warwick union, where the mother of the pauper then was, the pauper having stated that he had seen the indenture in her possession in the year 1835. The mother said that she had given the indenture to Mr. Squire, a master of the workhouse, who had recently died. Application was made to Mrs. Squire, who instituted a search, but could not find it. The pauper then ceased to be chargeable. In 1843 the pauper became chargeable again, and the search was renewed. Mrs. Squire referred the inquirer to Mr. Salter, a former assistant overseer, who admitted that he had received papers relating to parish business that had been in the possession of Squire, and said that he had never seen the indenture in question. Application was then made to Mr. Hopkins, the actual assistant overseer to whom the paper had been handed by Sutton; a search was made, but the indenture could not be found. A like application to the widow of the former solicitor to the parish, and to the then solicitor, was made without effect. The master of the workhouse was also applied to, and he stated that he had not such an indenture, and that the pauper's mother did not leave any paper behind her. It was objected that this evidence was not sufficient to let in parol proof of the apprenticeship, for that it consisted of mere declaration, not upon oath.

Wallinger and Otter, in support of the order of sessions, contended that the search had been sufficient, and that the hearsay evidence was of that kind which must in every case be admitted. They quoted R. v. Morton (4 M. & S. 48); R. v. Rawdon (2 A. & E. 156); R. v. Castleton (6 T. R. 236).

Watson, Q. C. and Bovill, contrà, objected, first, that evidence had not been given of a search for the indenture in the proper place; and, second, that the evidence was all hearsay. They cited R. v. Denis (7 B. & C. 620).

By the COURT.—We should be very unwilling to pronounce a decision that might have the effect of rendering parish officers careless of documents, or of introducing laxity in the admission of secondary evidence. The proper rule, however, was laid down in R. v. Malton, and, according to that rule, the question is, whether reasonable evidence has been offered, considering all the circumstances of the case, the diligence of the search, and the bona fides of the parties. Of the reasonableness of the evidence the Court must judge, as a judge sitting at nisi prius would judge. The question is not whether every word of the evidence was receivable, but whether there was sufficient evidence of a preliminary inquiry that failed to justify further inquiry, and the reception of that hearsay evidence, which was a necessary and natural part of the transaction. There was abundance of evidence, for it was shewn that there was not a single person living to whom the document could be traced. The evidence of the search was also sufficient in respect of place, because search must be made in the most likely place, and not necessarily in the fittest place. (The Bishop of Meath v. The Marquis of Winchester, 9 C. & F.) This case should not have been brought here at all; it seems as if there had been some evasion, and a desire to profit by the rigid rules of evidence. The question is not one for the decision of this Court, but for that of the Court below, acting as a jury. Rule discharged.

REG. v. BRISTOL and EXETER RAILWAY COMPANY.

An agreement by a corporate body, giving compensation to any parties, must be under seal.

Gurney, Q. C. and Carrow shewed cause against a rule, one alternative of which was for a mandamus to the above company to issue a warrant to the sheriff to assess damages under the Act, in respect of certain injury done to the property of Messrs. Elworthy. It was objected, that another remedy was open, because there was an agreement by an agent of the company with Messrs. Elworthy to pay a certain compensation in gross, and a further weekly sum, which they had paid for some time. This agreement, however, was not under seal. (Reg. v. Hull and Selby Railway Company, 8 Jur.; London and Birmingham Railway Company v. Winter, 1 Cr. & Phil. 57; Ex parte Robins, 7 D. P. C. 566; Mayor of Stafford v. Till, 4 Bing. 75.)

Kelly, Q. C. (with whom were Crowder, Q. C. and M. Smith), in support of the rule, was stopped by Lord DENMAN, C. J. who referred to the case of Reg. v. Stamford (see 3 Law T. 281), as conclusive upon the invalidity of this agreement.

Rule absolute for a mandamus to issue the warrant.

WILTON v. CHAMBERS.

The Court of Queen's Bench will not interfere to carry into effect an order of the Lord Chancellor, at least where the legality of the order is doubtful.

This was a rule obtained by Jervis, Q. C. arising out of the proceedings in connection with the bankruptcy of Mr. Chambers, the banker. An order had been obtained in the Court of Chancery to tax Mr. Wilton's bills, and the Master having reported that 111*l.* was due to Mr. Wilton, the Lord Chancellor had ordered Wilton, upon payment of that sum, to enter up satisfaction upon certain judgments obtained upon warrants of attorney. Wilton had refused, and a second order had been obtained. A petition by Wilton had been dismissed, on the ground of his having become insolvent, but he still declined to obey the order, and no steps had been taken to enforce it by commitment, as he had declared his intention of contesting the jurisdiction of the Chancellor to make any original order in bankruptcy. A rule had now been obtained to cause satisfaction to be entered up upon one of these judgments for 3,000*l.* against which

M. D. Hill, Q. C. and Bagshawe shewed cause.

Jervis, Q. C. contrà.

The COURT declined to interfere, and the Rule was discharged.

REG. ex parte LANGLEY, v. CLARKE and BARTON.

Application for quo warranto under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 89, sec. 1.

Whalely, Q.C. moved for leave to file an information in the nature of quo warranto, and to file an additional affidavit hereafter, if it should be necessary, under the following circumstances. A mandamus had already been obtained, directed to Clarke, one of the defendants, mayor of the borough of Dover, to insert forty of the burgesses, whose names had been, as it was alleged, improperly struck out in November 1844, whereby the two defendants had gained their election, and Clarke had subsequently been elected mayor. The 6 &. 7 Vict. c. 89, s. 1, required that application for a quo warranto against an alderman or councillor must be made within twelve months of his election. A rule nisi for a mandamus to restore had in this case been obtained in Michaelmas Term, 1844, and made absolute in Hilary Term. In Easter Term the return had been filed, which had been traversed, and would be tried at the next assizes for Kent, so that if the quo warranto was delayed until after the trial, more than twelve months would have elapsed, and it would be impossible to oust the persons thus wrongly elected.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—You may have leave to file the information. We can decide as to the additional affidavit hereafter. Leave granted.

REG. v. THE COMMISSIONERS OF SOUTHAMPTON WATER-WORKS.

A poll generally signifies a poll who are entitled to vote whilst the poll is kept open, and is not confined to those present at the meeting.

Archbold had obtained a rule calling upon the Commissioners of the Southampton Water-works either to proceed to take a poll of the inhabitant ratepayers, or to proceed to a new election. The affidavits alleged that at a meeting for the election of commissioners, after a show of hands, certain persons had "demanded a poll," and the chairman had refused, saying, he should not take the sense of the parish by a poll.

Kelly, Q.C. with him Cleasby, shewed cause, contending that a poll of the persons had never been demanded, or objected to, but only a poll of the parish.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—A poll must primâ facie mean a poll of all entitled to vote, i.e. those who are or may be present during the poll.

After some discussion, it was arranged that the mandamus for a fresh election should issue.

Mandamus accordingly.

CROFT, Assignee of J. Fothergill, v. Sir W. CLAYTON.

Invalidity of award.

Bliss moved for a rule nisi to set aside an award made in this action.

It was an action of debt, and had been referred, with all matters in difference, by order of the judge at nisi prius. The pleas were—Never indebted; Set-off, with replication of the Statute of Limitations; Payment, and Statute of Limitations. The arbitrator found all the issues for the defendant, and then he further ordered and awarded that the said J. Fothergill, at the time of his becoming insolvent, was indebted in the sum of 1,190*l*. It was now objected that there was no power to award any debt due from the insolvent to the defendant, and also that the award was not conclusive, as not ordering the debt to be paid. Rule nisi.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Tuesday, June 3.

MILLINGEN v. PICKEN.

A plea traversing an allegation in the declaration that the plaintiff was the inventor and proprietor of a certain design within the meaning of the Copyright of Designs Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 65, does not raise the question whether the design of the plaintiff is one to which the Act applies.

Assumpsit on an agreement.

The declaration stated that the plaintiff, after the passing of a certain Act of Parliament, made and passed in the 7th year of the reign of the now Queen, entitled "An Act to amend the Laws relating to the Copyright of Designs," and before and after the time of the registration of the design hereinafter mentioned, was, and from thence hitherto hath been and is, within the meaning and protection of the said Act, the inventor and proprietor of a certain new or original design for an article of manufacture, having reference to a purpose of utility, so far as the said design was and is for the shape or configuration of such article, that is to say, of a new and original design for the shape or configuration of a parasol for the purpose of opening and closing the same with one hand, and which said design had not before, or at the time of the registration thereof, as thereinafter mentioned, been previously published; and whereas also the plaintiff, after, &c. and before the publication of the said design, to wit, on, &c. had duly registered the said design according to the said Act of Parliament, and also the name of the plaintiff as the proprietor of the said design according to the said Act of Parliament, and also the name of the plaintiff as the proprietor of the said design according to the said Act; and by reason of the premises, the plaintiff before and at the time of the making of the agreement thereinafter mentioned was, and thence hitherto hath been and is, the proprietor of the said design, and of the copyright thereof. The declaration afterwards set out an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, by which the plaintiff agreed to permit the defendant to manufacture parasols upon the aforesaid principle upon certain terms and conditions, and then assigned various breaches by the defendant of such agreement.

The defendant pleaded amongst other pleas, 1st, Non assumpsit; and secondly, that the plaintiff was not before or at the time of the said registration in the declaration mentioned, the inventor or proprietor of a new or original design for the shape or configuration of a parasol not before or at the time of the said registration previously published, in manner and form as the plaintiff hath in the said declaration in that behalf alleged; concluding to the country.

At the trial before Erle, J. at the sittings in London, in Hilary Term last, the plaintiff obtained a verdict for 100*l*. damages, leave being reserved to the defendant to move to enter a verdict for him if the Court should think that the plaintiff's invention was not within the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65. A rule nisi having accordingly been obtained in last Term for that purpose, as well as for a new trial on other grounds, which it is not necessary to notice, Talfourd, Serjt. (Hoggins with him) now shewed cause. —It is submitted that it is not now open to the defendant on these pleadings to raise the question sought, viz. that the plaintiff's invention is not the subject of a certificate of registration under the Act. He should have pleaded that the design was not one within the meaning of the Act, and not that the plaintiff was not the inventor, if it was intended to raise such question. The cases of Walton v. Potter (3 M. & G. 411), and Walton v. Bateman (3 M. & G. 773) were referred to. The rest of the arguments is here omitted, as nothing turned thereon.

Byles, Serjt. (Fish with him), contrà.—It is submitted that this is not a design within 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65. [TINDAL, C.J.—The main difficulty with which you have to contend is, whether it is open to you to raise that question.] The declaration recites that, after the passing of the Act, the plaintiff was, and from thence hitherto hath been, and is, within the meaning and protection of the said Act, the inventor and proprietor of, &c.; and this is the only consideration which the defendant receives from the plaintiff for the agreement he subsequently enters into. The traverse is, that the plaintiff was not the inventor or proprietor, and it is submitted that this therefore is a traverse of what goes to the consideration of the defendant's promise, and is in effect a denial that the plaintiff has any property in the design. [MAULE, J.—The effect of the plea is only that you, the plaintiff, did not invent it yourself, nor are you the person who paid the inventor for it. TINDAL, C.J. —Proprietor is only a qualified inventor, as explained by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, s. 5, to which the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65 refers. MAULE, J.—The question raised by this issue is not whether the design is one capable of being the property of any one, but whether the plaintiff is the inventor or proprietor of it.]

The arguments were then directed to the verdict being against evidence, and to the other ground on which the rule had been obtained. Rule discharged.

FAY v. PRENTICE and ANOTHER.

Declaration in case stated that the defendant was possessed of a messuage adjoining that of the plaintiff, and that the defendant placed a cornice and projection upon his messuage near to and projecting over the garden of the plaintiff, and that by reason of the premises the plaintiff was greatly annoyed and incommoded in the use, possession, and enjoyment of his messuage, garden-ground, land, and premises. Held, that the declaration did not shew that the injury was necessarily a trespass, and that the declaration disclosed sufficiently a nuisance from which the law might presume a damage.

Action on the case.

The declaration stated that the plaintiff before and at the time of committing, &c. was lawfully possessed of a certain messuage, garden-ground, land, and premises, with the appurtenances, situate and being, &c. in which said messuage the plaintiff and his family have for and during all the time aforesaid resided and dwelt, and still reside and dwell. And that the defendant, Prentice, before and at the time of the committing, &c. was possessed of a certain messuage, with the appurtenances, situate and being in the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, contiguous and adjoining to the said messuage, garden-ground, land, and premises of the plaintiff. Nevertheless the said defendant, well knowing the premises, but contriving, &c. to injure, prejudice, and aggrieve the plaintiff in the possession, use, occupation, and enjoyment of his said messuage, garden-ground, land, and premises, and to render the said garden-ground damp and wet, and to injure and destroy the trees, shrubs, bushes, plants, herbs, and flowers therein, and to prevent the due and proper growth of the said trees, shrubs, bushes, plants, herbs, and flowers, and to render them of little or no use or value to the plaintiff whilst the plaintiff was so possessed of the said messuage, garden-ground, land, and premises, with the appurtenances, and so resided and dwelt in the said messuage of the plaintiff with his family as aforesaid, and whilst the defendant Prentice, was so possessed of his said messuage as aforesaid, to wit, on, &c. wrongfully and injuriously put, placed, and built, and caused and procured to be put, placed, and built, a certain cornice and projection in and upon the said messuage of the defendant Prentice, near to and projecting over the said garden-ground of the plaintiff, and wrongfully and injuriously kept and continued the same cornice or projection so put, placed, and built, and caused and procured to be put, placed, and built, in and upon the said messuage of the defendant Prentice, for a long space of time, to wit, until the commencement of this suit, by means of which said several premises afterwards, to wit, on the 1st day of May, 1844, and on divers other days and times between that day and the commencement of this suit, divers large quantities of rain-water ran, flowed, and fell from the said cornice or projection on the messuage of the defendant Prentice, down, to, into, upon, and against the said garden-ground of the said plaintiff, and upon the trees, shrubs, bushes, plants, herbs, and flowers growing and being in the said garden-ground, and upon the gravel walks thereof, and greatly injured, wetted, and damaged the said garden-ground of the said plaintiff, and dirtied and spoiled the gravel walks of the said garden-ground; and by reason of the premises the plaintiff hath been greatly annoyed and incommoded in the use, possession, and enjoyment of his said messuage, garden-ground, land, and premises, and the same thereby became and were greatly damaged, deteriorated, and lessened in value.

Pleas—1st, Not guilty; 2nd, Leave and license.

At the trial before Tindal, C. J. at the sittings in Middlesex, after Hilary Term last, it was objected on the part of the defendant, that, as the action was only for the consequential damage occasioned by the falling of rain, and as no evidence had been given of any rain having fallen between the completion of the cornice and the commencement of the suit, there was no evidence at all of actual damage within the scope of the declaration. The Chief Justice, however, left it to the jury whether there had been any actual damage done and proved, either by the rain dripping, or by the cornice overhanging the ground. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 40s., and leave was given to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit. A rule nisi for that purpose having been obtained, Shee, Serjt. (Warren with him) now shewed cause, and submitted that the declaration disclosed a ground of action independent of any damage by reason of the rain falling, and also that if evidence of such damage was necessary, it had been given.

Cases cited: Penruddock's case (5 Rep. 100); Jackson v. Pesker (1 M. & S. 234); Tucker v. Newman (1 A. & E. 40); Williams v. Morland (2 B. & C. 910); Barker v. Green (2 Bing. 317); and Williams v. Mostyn (4 M. & W. 145).

Talfourd, Serjt. in support of the rule, contended that, on the present record, there was no cause of action in respect of any actual or constructive damage, if that was struck out which related to the injury by the rain falling; that if the declaration contained nothing but an allegation of a trespass, it would be bad, and that in order to convert what was a trespass into an injury for which an action on the case would lie, some particular damage must be shewn; that the damage pointed out by the declaration was only that by rain, and that the learned judge should not, therefore, have left it to the jury in the alternative whether there was injury by the rain or by the overhanging of the cornice.

COLTMAN, J.(a)—It appears that the Chief Justice left it to the jury to say whether there had been any actual damage done and proved, either by the rain dripping or by the cornice overhanging the ground. With regard to the first part of this direction of my lord, there were circumstances from which the jury were at liberty to infer such an injury might have occurred. It is clear, therefore, that there was no defect in that part of the summing up. With reference to the other part of the direction as to there being damage by the overhanging of the cornice, if it was not right to leave this to the jury, then the direction generally would be wrong, as it would be difficult to say in respect of which the verdict might not have passed. This part of the direction turns on the question, whether there was any such allegation in the declaration as would authorize that part being submitted to the jury. My brother Talfourd said that it was not competent for the Chief Justice to admit evidence of there being any such damage, there being no allegation in the declaration authorizing it, although it is alleged that, by reason of the premises, the plaintiff hath been greatly annoyed and incommoded in the use, possession, and enjoyment of his said messuage and garden, because it has been contended that the allegation that the defendant put the cornice and projection near to and projecting over the garden-ground of the plaintiff, is an allegation of a trespass, and the damage by reason of the premises was only a damage resulting from a trespass. It certainly was never contended at the trial, nor in moving for the rule for a new trial, that this which is so alleged amounted to a trespass; and if we look at the declaration, I am of opinion it does not necessarily amount to a trespass, even if it be conceded that the presumption is that the space from the soil to the sky belongs to the owner of the soil, for there is nothing here to shew that the plaintiff's right was co-extensive with that right. Indeed, although such is the presumption of law, still it is but a presumption, and not a mere matter of fact, for one man may have an upper chamber and another a lower chamber of the same house. There is, therefore, nothing in the declaration to shew that a trespass was necessarily committed. Baten's case (9 Rep. 53) bears very much on the present. There the defendant built a house on his own land, which jutted on the plaintiff's house, and it was held that the plaintiff need not assign a special nuisance, for that it appeared to the Court that it was a nuisance for the defendant to have built a house overhanging the plaintiff's house. The Court there thought that the mere act of overhanging sufficiently imported a nuisance, from which the law itself would presume a damage. If so, then it was unnecessary to lay any damage resulting therefrom in this declaration; and I therefore see no reason to disturb the verdict.

(a) TINDAL, C. J. was absent.

MAULE, J. and CRESSWELL, J. delivered judgments concurring therewith. Rule discharged.

GIBSON v. MILNER.

Plene administravit—Executor retaining money for funeral expenses.

Shee, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the damages should not be reduced to 13*l.* pursuant to leave reserved. The action, which was tried at the Middlesex sittings in the present Term, before Erle, J. was brought against the defendant as executor upon a covenant entered into by the intestate. The defendant pleaded plene administravit, and it was proved at the trial he had sufficient assets to answer the plaintiff's debt, subject to the question whether he had any right or not to retain under this plea the sum of 16*l.* for the funeral expenses of the intestate, for which it was proved the defendant had made himself liable to pay, but which he had not yet in fact paid.

Gillies v. Smither (2 Stark. N. P. C. 528) and 2 Williams on Executors, 1550, were cited. Rule nisi.

Tuesday, June 10.

SHEPHERD v. SHEPHERD.

Declaration stated that defendant on, &c. made his promissory note payable to plaintiff or order on a day certain, which day had expired before the commencement of the suit, and then delivered the note to the plaintiff, and thereupon the defendant then agreed to pay the amount of the said note to the plaintiff on request, whereby an action had accrued, &c. Held, that it sufficiently appeared that the note was due before action, and also that the declaration was not demurrable on the ground of duplicity.

Debt.—The declaration stated that the defendant, on the 25th day of March, A.D. 1844, made his promissory note in writing, and thereby promised to pay the plaintiff or his order 690*l.* on the 25th day of March, A.D. 1845, which day had expired before the commencement of this suit, and then delivered the said note to the plaintiff; and thereupon the defendant then agreed to pay the amount of the said note to the plaintiff on request, whereby, and by reason of the non-payment of the said sum of money, an action has accrued to the plaintiff to demand and have of and from the defendant the said sum of money; yet the defendant has not paid the said sum, or any part thereof.

Demurrer thereto, alleging, as causes of demurrer, that the declaration is double and inconsistent in this, to wit, that in one part it states and alleges an agreement to pay the sum of 690*l.* on the 25th day of March, A.D. 1845, and in another part, that the defendant agreed to pay the same sum on request; and also, for that it is uncertain whether the plaintiff intends to rely on an express or an implied agreement; and if on the latter, that there is no sufficient consideration stated for such agreement.

Byles, Serjt. in support of the demurrer.—It is submitted that the declaration is even bad on a general demurrer, on the ground that no sufficient breach is shewn. A promissory note has days of grace for payment; here the allegation that the 25th March (the day on which the money is promised to be paid) has expired before the commencement of the suit, does not shew that the period at which the note would become payable had elapsed before action. (Abbott v. Aslett, 1 M. & W. 209.) [MAULE, J.—In that case Parke, B. says "that if the date was stated with certainty, it was sufficient to shew that it was payable a certain time after the date;" so that if, as here, it is not laid under a videlicet, and the Court can see from the date of the writ that the action was not commenced until after the note was due, it is sufficient.] Then the declaration is bad for the causes mentioned in the special demurrer. The objection that it is double is not removed, that the pleading is ill pleaded; it is not the less double on that account. (Slade v. Drake, Hob. 295; and Pureford v. Peek, 9 M. & W. 196; Stephens v. Underwood, 4 Bing. N. C. 655.) [MAULE, J.—The statement that the defendant then agreed to pay on request is quite immaterial, and may be struck out; it would not create any liability, for it was not such a promise as the law would infer.] If it was made after the note was due, it might be good on an account stated, and the word "thereupon" may here be well considered as equivalent to afterwards.

Dowling, Serjt. (Bramwell with him), contrà, was stopped by the Court.

TINDAL, C.J.—I think that the declaration is sufficient, notwithstanding the grounds of objection pointed out on special demurrer. Here the declaration contains an allegation that on a particular day, and which is not laid under any videlicet, namely, 25th of March, 1844, the defendant made his promissory note, and alleges also a promise to pay the same on the 25th of March, 1845, which day is also not under a videlicet. The allegation afterwards, that that day had expired before the commencement of this suit, was unnecessary, and may be struck out. The declaration then proceeds to state that he then delivered the said note to the plaintiff; this also is only surplusage. What, then, is the effect, if, when the day has expired on which the defendant promised to pay, he should agree to pay what he was liable to pay when he should be requested? This allegation in the declaration is only a statement of the legal effect of the defendant's liability. It is said that it is bad for duplicity, and that it is not the less so because one part is badly pleaded. That rule may be applicable to pleas, but there has been nothing to shew it extends to declarations.

COLTMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion. I am not aware that the insertion in a declaration of a promise which in law has no operation, will therefore make the declaration bad, if it otherwise contains a sufficient cause of action.

MAULE, J.—The sense in which a plea may be bad, on the ground of its being double, is not the sense in which a declaration is also to be considered bad on the ground of duplicity. A plea is bad if it gives two substantial answers to the antecedent pleading, but a declaration is not bad for stating two causes of action. A declaration may be bad when, instead of containing two distinct causes of action, it states one cause of action twice over. Thus, in an action on a bond to the stat. 8 & 9 Wm. 3, more than one breach could not have been assigned, as one alone gave the cause of action. If here the declaration had suggested another ground for making the defendant liable to pay the note, there might have been some colour for this objection; as it is, it states only what does not confer any cause of action, but is a mere nullity.

CRESSWELL, J. concurred, and referred to Galway v. Rose (6 M. & W. 291) as supporting the opinion of Maule, J. Judgment for the plaintiff.

ROYLE v. CONSTERDINE.

Court refused to discharge a defendant out of custody, under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 57, who had been taken in execution in an action brought on a judgment for 27l. but which judgment had been obtained in an action for a debt less than 20l.

Dowling, Serjt. moved to have the defendant discharged out of custody. It appeared that the plaintiff had originally sued the defendant for a debt of 10*l.* which, together with the costs of action, amounted to 27*l.* for which judgment was signed. Another action was thereupon brought on this judgment, upon which the defendant was now in execution. It was submitted that this was within the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 57, and that although the Court of Exchequer, in Hopkins v. Freeman (13 M. & W. 372), had refused to stay proceedings in an action, yet it was otherwise where the defendant had been actually taken in execution.

The COURT however thought that the Act did not apply, and that the defendant was therefore not entitled to relief. Rule refused.

Wednesday June 11.

CAMPBELL v. WEBSTER.

Protest for non-acceptance, waiver of.

Dowling, Serjt. moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. The action was on a bill of exchange drawn by the defendant at Halifax, in Nova Scotia, on Messrs. Capron and Co. in London, in favour of the plaintiff, for 100*l.* The bill was refused acceptance by the drawees, and the question at the trial before Erle, J. in this term was, on the issue under the 2nd plea, which denied that the bill was duly protested for non-acceptance. It appeared that no protest had been attached to the bill, but it was attempted to remove the difficulty the plaintiff was in on this issue, by shewing from certain letters written by the defendant, that he had waived any objection as to there not being a proper protest. The admissibility of this evidence was objected to by the defendant, but the learned judge allowed the same, as being evidence from which an actual protest might be presumed. This, it was now submitted, was incorrect.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Wednesday, June 4.

WRIGHTSON v. MACAULEY.

Special case—Construction of limitations in a will.

Where a testator died leaving real estate, and by his will devised it to certain parties, creating various limitations, failing which it was to go "to the use of his own right heirs being of the name of Heber, and his and their heirs for ever:"—Held, that this ultimate limitation vested at the time of the death of the testator, and was not kept suspended until the death of the last devisee for life.

This was a special case from Vice-Chancellor Wigram for the opinion of the Court on three points. The question arose upon the construction of the will of the Rev. John Heber, who died in 1775, and who, by his will, &c. devised all his real estate to trustees living at Marton, Buckden, and elsewhere, upon the various trusts following: first, to the use of his son, Reginald Heber, and his assigns, for life, and, after his decease, to the first son of the said Reginald, and his heirs male; and, for default of such issue, to the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and all and every other son or sons of the body of his said son Reginald; and, in default of such issue, to the daughters of the said Reginald; and, in default of such issue, male or female, of his said son Reginald, then to his nephew, Reginald Heber, (whom he had before constituted one of his trustees for the above trusts), and his assigns for his natural life, and then to the use of Richard Heber, the son of the said Reginald (the nephew of the testator); failing him, to his first son and his heirs male; then to other sons, and their heirs male successively. "And in default of the said Richard Heber being alive at the time of his father's death, or being alive and taking an estate for life by virtue of his said will, and dying without issue male of his body, as aforesaid, then to the use and behoof of the male heir who should be in possession and lawfully entitled for the time being unto the ancient estate at Marton belonging to the Heber family, and the assigns of such male heir for and during the term of his natural life;" then to the use of the first son of such heir; then to the second son, &c. (as before). "And for default of a male heir being in possession of and entitled to the said ancient estate of Marton at the times thereinbefore for that purpose respectively mentioned, or in default of issue male of such male heir as aforesaid; then to the use of his own right heirs, being of the name of Heber, and his or their heirs and assigns for ever." There was throughout a power to the trustees to make all entries, and bring all actions as occasion should require, to support the contingent uses and estates limited by the will. The case found that the testator died in 1775, without having revoked or altered his will, having had issue two children—Reginald (the first devisee for life), and John, who died intestate during the lifetime of his father. Reginald, at the death of the testator, entered into possession or receipt of the rents and profits of the estates in Buckden, devised to him for his life, and died in 1799 without having had issue, having duly executed and attested his will to pass freehold estates, but there was no effectual devise of the estates in Buckden in the will, as against his heir-at-law. At his death the nephew of the testator, Reginald Heber, the second devisee for life, under the will of the testator, and also the tenant for life of the ancient estate at Marton, then took possession of the rents and profits of the said devised estates, and continued in possession up to his death in 1804, and thereupon his eldest son, the third devisee for life, mentioned in the will of the testator, John Heber, and also tenant in tail of the estates at Marton, entered into possession of the rents and profits of the said devised estates, and so continued until his death in 1833, when he died without having ever had issue. The said Richard, in 1827, suffered a recovery of the estate at Marton, thereby barring the entail which then existed in favour of his younger brother, Reginald Heber, the late Bishop of Calcutta; the said Richard made his will, duly executed and attested, to pass real estate, and devised all his real estate, including the ancient estate at Marton, to the defendant Mary (who was the daughter of his father, Reginald, by his second wife), then Mary Cholmondeley, widow, but now wife of the other defendant, Samuel Herrick Macauley, who, at the death of her said half-brother, Richard, entered into possession of the said estate of Marton, and has continued in possession ever since.

The eldest brother of the testator, John Heber, was Thomas Heber, who was tenant for life of the ancient estate of Marton, with remainder to his first and other sons successively. He died in 1752, during the lifetime of John Heber, the testator, leaving issue two sons him surviving, Richard, the eldest, and Reginald, who was the second devisee for life mentioned in the will of the testator, John Heber. Richard died in 1766, leaving two children him surviving, Mary Heber and Henrietta Heber. Henrietta intermarried with William Wrightson, and had by him William Battie Wrightson, his eldest son and heir-at-law, and a daughter, Harriett Wrightson, who afterwards married, and is now the wife of the Hon. H. H. Hutchinson. Mary Heber died in 1809, having by her will devised certain specific estates, not including any estate or interest she had or might have in the estate devised by the will of the testator, John Heber, to certain persons therein named, and the residue of her real estate to her niece, Harriett Hutchinson. Henrietta Wrightson died in 1820, and her husband in 1827, and upon her death her son William Battie Wrightson became, and now is, the heir-at-law to the testator, John Heber, and of his son, Reginald Heber. Reginald Heber (the nephew of John Heber, and tenant for life of the ancient estate of Morton, with remainder to his other sons in tail male) had issue by his present marriage one son only, named Richard, the third devisee for life, and by a second marriage three children, Reginald, Thomas, and Mary, the now defendant, who married Mr. Macauley, and was the devisee of the said ancient estate of Marton under the will of Richard Heber. The last-named Reginald, afterwards Lord Bishop of Calcutta, died in 1826, leaving two daughters, Emily and Harriett Sarah, him surviving.

At the death of Richard Heber, the third devisee for life under the will of John Heber, and the then owner in fee of the ancient estate of [illegible] there was no male heir in possession of [illegible] entitled for the time being unto the an[illegible] at Morton; but the defendant Mary Macauley (formerly Mary Heber) became entitled to such estate. At that time Emily Heber and Harriott Sarah Heber were the nearest relations of the testator John Heber then bearing the name of Heber, and would have been his co-heiresses, and of his son Reginald, if the female line of Richard, the eldest son of Thomas Heber, had failed.

William Battie Wrightson, as eldest son and heir-at-law of his mother, formerly Henrietta Heber, and the Hon. H. H. Hutchinson and Harriett his wife, in the right of the said Harriett, as devisee of Mary Heber, claim to be entitled to the said freehold estates at Buckden in right of the said Mary and Henrietta Heber respectively, who were the co-heiresses of Reginald, and also the testator, John Heber. There being various equitable claims affecting the estates so devised by the said John Heber, a suit was instituted, among other purposes, to ascertain the rights and interests of the different parties in these estates; and the questions for the opinion of the Court were—1st, whether the ultimate limitation in the will of John Heber to the right line of the testator being of the name of Heber, vested at the testator's death in his son Reginald Heber. 2nd. If it did not so vest, whether that ultimate limitation took effect at the death of Richard Heber, the third devisee for life. 3rd. Whether at the death of the said Richard Heber, the said William Battie Wrightson, and the Hon. H. H. Hutchinson, and Harriott his wife, or what other person or persons became entitled to the possession of the estates, and hereditaments so devised by the testator, John Heber.

Malins (Hugh Hill with him), for the plaintiffs, contended, first, that the ultimate limitation in the estate of Buckden vested at the time of the testator's death in his son Reginald, and he having a devisable interest therein, and not having made any effectual devise thereof, died intestate as to that estate, and therefore it descended to his heir. The two daughters of Richard, Mary and Henrietta, being his co-heiresses, then became entitled, and from them the present plaintiffs. Then, secondly, if the ultimate limitation was held to be suspended until the death of the third devisee for life, in 1833, then still it was contended the limitation failed, as there was no one in whom it could vest, for the party to take would, it was contended, take as a purchaser; and as there was no one who answered the description in all respects, the limitation failed altogether, and therefore the present plaintiffs would still be entitled as heirs by descent.

J. Parker, Q.C. contrà, contended, 1st, that the vesting of the ultimate limitation did not take effect until the determination of the particular estates, which was clearly the intention of the testator; and, 2nd, that the rule that a person taking as purchaser must take as surviving heir, was not inflexible.

Malins, in reply, was stopped by the Court.

POLLOCK, C.B.—I think that, according to the proper rules of construction, the ultimate limitation in this will vested at the death of the testator; the rule being, that the limitation shall be held to vest at the earliest possible period.

PARKE, B.—I think that the first question should be answered in the affirmative, on the ground mentioned by my Lord Chief Baron; the second, in the negative; and the third in the affirmative.

ALDERSON, B. and PLATT, B. were of the same opinion. Judgment for the plaintiffs.

COOK v. SWIFT.

In an action for penalties against a party for acting as a police commissioner under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 112, without being properly qualified, it is sufficient to declare generally against him for so acting, without setting out in what respect the party is disqualified.

This was an action brought against the defendant to recover a penalty for his having acted as a commissioner of police for Bolton without (as it was alleged) being properly qualified.

The declaration was demurred to on the ground that it was too general, as it did not state in what respect the said commissioner was not qualified.

Martin, Q. C. in support of the demurrer. The defendant is appointed under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 112, and several things mu[illegible] qualify him under that Act, the absence [illegible] which disqualifies. Now [illegible] that the plaintiff ought to point out the particular disqualification relied on, and give the defendant an opportunity of traversing it.

POLLOCK, C. B.—I see, by the 19th section, a party may be sued if he acts, and I think the burden of proving his qualification in all respects is thrown upon the party acting, and that a mere general declaration against him for so doing is sufficient. You had better amend by pleading over.

Amendment accordingly.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

ON ERRORS FROM THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

(Argued Feb. 1845; determined April 22, 1845.)

HODGSON v. REPTON, Clerk.

1. The treasurer of Queen Anne's Bounty is not, under the Ecclesiastical Commission Act, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 30, entitled to recover the mesne profits of prebendal stalls, which have been filled up during the period provided by such Acts, if such profits are received by the prebendary not separately in right of the prebendal stall, as the corpus belonging to the prebend, but as his share of the issues of the possession which he holds in common with the rest of the Chapter, and which belong to the Dean and Chapter.
2. A civilian cannot be heard in the Court of Exchequer Chamber without an order of the Court.

This case came on a writ of error from a judgment of the Queen's Bench, in favour of a plaintiff below, the now defendant, on a special verdict.

The action was brought in assumpsit, by the Rev. Edward Repton, clerk, against Christopher Hodgson, for money had and received; to which the defendant pleaded Non assumpsit.

The special verdict began by stating that the plaintiff was and is one of the former chaplains of the House of Commons; and the defendant, since the passing of an Act, 6 Wm. 4, for protecting the revenues of vacant ecclesiastical dignities, &c. during the pending inquiries into the state of the Church in England and Wales, was treasurer of the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, and that by such Act, after reciting that his Majesty had signified his intention to defer the nomination to any vacant dignity, prebend, canonry, or benefice, without cure of souls, until the circumstances connected therewith had undergone the consideration of certain commissioners theretofore named for considering the state of the Established Church with reference to ecclesiastical revenues, it was enacted that when any dignity, &c. being in the patronage of his Majesty, should become vacant during such commission, all profits which should arise from the same, until a successor should be appointed, should be paid to the treasurer of Queen Anne's Bounty, who should enjoy all legal rights and powers for enforcing payment thereof, and that such treasurer should keep an account of all sums received by him under such Act, and retain the balance until he should be otherwise ordered by competent authority. And by the 1st sect. of another Act, (7 Wm. 4), "For suspending, for one Year, Appointments to certain Dignities and Offices in Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, and to Sinecure Rectories," it was enacted, that no appointment, &c. should be made to any canonry, &c. in any cathedral church then vacant, which should become so during the said Act; and that such Act should remain in force for one year. And that by another Act (1 Vict.), the said last-mentioned Act should be in force till the 1st of August, 1838. And that by the 1st sect. of 2 Vict. it was enacted that the said Act, 7 Wm. 4, should continue in force till the 1st of August, 1839; and that by the 5th sect. it was enacted that nothing should prevent the appointment, &c. of the Rev. Frederick Vernon Lockwood, the Rev. Edward Repton, the Rev. Temple Frere, formerly chaplains to the House of Commons, to any canonry, &c. then vacant, or which should become vacant, to which her Majesty might please to appoint them. The special verdict then proceeded to state that on the 7th Nov. 1838, the plaintiff, being the said Rev. Edward Repton, was duly appointed, &c. to a canonry or prebend of the collegiate church of Westminster, and from that time became in the enjoyment of the said canonry, &c. and the profits thereof. And that the said canonry had become vacant on the death of the late Dr. Ryder, Bishop of Lichfield, on the 31st March, 1836, the said commission then being in existence, and that the said treasurer of Queen Anne's Bounty, in pursuance of the said Act, 6 Wm. 4, had since that time, and until the appointment of the plaintiff, received the profits of the said canonry, &c.; and that at the time of the appointment of the plaintiff, the said treasurer had in his hands 2,952*l.* being the net profits of the said canonry, &c. for the period between the death of the said Dr. Ryder and the appointment of the plaintiff. And that immediately after the plaintiff's appointment, and before the Act 4 Vict. the plaintiff ordered, so far as he had authority so to do, the said treasurer to pay him, the plaintiff, the said 2,952*l.* claiming to be lawfully entitled thereto, and to be lawfully authorized to order the payment thereof to himself. And after the passing of the said last-mentioned Act, and before the defendant had delivered any account, or paid over the said sum to the Commissioners, the plaintiff, on the 29th August, 1840, caused the following letter to be delivered to the defendant. The letter was then set out, which called on the defendant not to pay over to the Church Commissioners the sums received by him in right of the plaintiff's prebend. And on the 31st August, 1840, the defendant received from the Dean of Westminster a letter to the following effect:

"Ashburton, Devon, August 31, 1840.

"Sir,—By the ancient usage and custom of the collegiate church, if any division of profits is made during the time that any stall is vacant, the share belonging to such vacant stall is appropriated and becomes due to the fabric fund. Whatever, therefore, has been paid to you during the time that the stalls now filled by the Reverend Mr. Repton and the Reverend Mr. Frere were vacant, belong rightfully to the fund, both because the stalls have not yet become subject to the Act for regulating ecclesiastical duties and revenues, and because they were not affected by the suspending Acts passed during the time that the aforesaid Act was in deliberation. It is my duty, therefore, to demand of you the sums wrongfully paid into your hands during the time these stalls were vacant, both on account of the justice of the claim, and the urgent demands which exist at this time upon the fabric fund for the reparation of the abbey, and I hereby give you notice not to pay any such sums to any one not duly authorized by me to receive the same on behalf of the said fabric fund.

(Signed) "JOHN IRELAND,

"Dean of Westminster."

And that a similar demand was also made by the treasurer of the church of St. Peter, Westminster. And that, by an Act passed on the 11th August, 1840, it was enacted that within one month thereafter the treasurer of Queen Anne's Bounty should deliver to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England a full account of all moneys received by him under the said Act 6 Wm. 4, and he should pay all moneys then in his hands when ordered by such commissioners. And the defendant declined to comply with the order of the plaintiff, and did not pay him the 2,952*l.* and within a month of the last-mentioned Act, delivered to the commissioners an account of all moneys received by him, and amongst them of the profits of the said canonry, and paid the same over to such commissioners. And the plaintiff demanded the same of the commissioners, who refused to pay it over. The Court below gave judgment for the plaintiff that he should recover the 2,952*l.* And on such judgment a writ of error was brought.

The Queen's Advocate, Sir John Dodson, appeared on behalf of the writ.

Sir Thomas Wilde (Kinglake, Serjt. with him), contrà.

On the Queen's Advocate commencing his address to the Court, the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE said,—It is usual to have an order for a civilian to be heard, and two must appear. PARKE, B. added,—You have no right to appear. The Queen's Advocate then said he was called to the Bar. TINDAL, C.J.—You have answered the objection.

The Queen's Advocate then argued at great length in support of the writ of error, and was answered by Sir Thomas Wilde; but the point on which the judgment of the Court turned makes it unnecessary to report the detailed argument. The main question was whether, under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 30, Mr. Repton was a "competent authority" to "order" the payment of the profits to be made to him. The Queen's Advocate said, the question was whether Mr. Repton was entitled to the mesne profits of the prebend under the 28 Hen. 8, c. 11, s. 3, which enacts that "all profits, &c. belonging to any prebend, that shall belong to the successor, towards the payment of first-fruits." Now, it is very true that Dr. Godolphin says,—"After the death of a prebendary, the dean and chapter shall have the profits" (52); but Dr. Burn reconciles the apparent discrepancy thus—"That the issues of those possessions which he hath in common with the rest of the chapter shall, after his death, be divided amongst the surviving members of the chapter; but the profits of those possessions which he hath in his separate capacity, as a sole corporation of himself, shall inure to his successor." (2 Ecc. Law, 92.) This distinction is recognized in the 3rd section of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 30.

Sir Thomas Wilde objected that this point was not made below, and that the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench and the argument had turned on an entirely different ground.

The argument then proceeded on the main question, but as the Court thought that the first point should be disposed of before the other is decided, we do not give the argument.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C.J. delivering judgment, said,—Upon taking this case into consideration, for the purpose of giving judgment thereon, the objection which was pointed out by the Court in the course of the argument, as to the insufficiency of the special verdict, appears to us, upon further discussion, to be insurmountable. The special verdict found there was a vacancy in the canonry or prebend from the 31st of March, 1836, by the death of the Bishop of Lichfield, and that the defendant below, the treasurer of Queen's Anne's Bounty, in pursuance of the statute 6 Wm. 4, had from that time, and until the appointment of the plaintiff below, received the profits of the said canonry or prebend; but the special verdict is altogether silent as to the nature of those profits, or the source from which they proceed. Those profits may be either derivable from possessions which the prebendary holds separately in right of the prebendal stall, as the corpus belonging to the prebend; or those profits may be the share of the prebendary in the issues of the possession which he holds in common with the rest of the chapter, and which belong to the corporation of the Dean and Chapter; in which latter case we think it clear the plaintiff below can have no right of action. And as we hold it to be indispensable that the facts should be distinctly found by the jury one way or the other before we give our final judgment, we do at present, for that purpose, award a venire de novo.

BAIL COURT.

Monday, June 9.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

REG. v. JUSTICES OF LINDSAY.

A local Act, after directing various inferior proceedings by previous sections, enacted by the 158th section that no proceedings under the Act should be quashed for informality, or removed by certiorari; and then, by a subsequent section, gave an appeal in certain cases to the quarter sessions.

Held, that an order of quarter sessions under the Act could not be removed by certiorari.

Wildman shewed cause against a rule for a certiorari to bring up an order of sessions made upon an appeal against a drainage rate under the 161st sec. of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 76. He submitted that the certiorari was taken away by sec. 158 of the Act, which provided that no proceedings under the Act should be quashed for informality or removed by certiorari.

Willmore, contrà, contended that the 158th section applied only to such inferior proceedings as were mentioned in the sections preceding the 158th, and not to orders of quarter sessions under the 161st section; first, because it was always usual in Acts of Parliament for the clause taking away the certiorari to follow the section to which it was intended to apply; and, secondly, because the word "proceedings" alone was used in this instance, whereas it was usual to use some other words in addition, as, for instance, that "no proceedings or judgments should be removed," &c. when it was intended that the clause should apply to orders of quarter sessions. In illustration of this position he referred to 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 6. Cur. adv. vult.

WIGHTMAN, J. this day gave judgment.—He said that the rule must be discharged. The words of the 158th section were wide enough to include orders of quarter sessions, and if they were not held to do so, the absurdity would follow, that whilst an order of justices, unappealed against, could not be removed, the same order, if appealed against, might be removed. Rule discharged.

DOE dem. GLYNES and OTHERS v. LOWE.

Where, in an action of ejectment, the lessors of the plaintiff were infants, and a next friend was appointed, who, however, did not enter into, and was not named in, the consent rule, and the plaintiff was nonsuited at the trial on the merits—Held, that the defendant could not call upon the next friend for the costs, there being no consent rule whereby she was bound to pay them.

Petersdorff moved for a rule calling upon Mrs.

Hockley, who had been appointed the next friend of the lessors of the plaintiff, who were infants, and her husband, to shew cause why they should not pay the costs of this ejectment. It appeared that the ejectment having been brought at the instance of the lessors of the plaintiff, who were minors, their mother, who was then a widow, was appointed their next friend; no consent rule was entered into by the lessors of the plaintiff nor by their next friend, and the cause went on to trial, when the plaintiff was nonsuited upon the merits.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I do not see how you can call upon the next friend to pay costs. Ordinarily, the plaintiff only is the party liable to pay; but the lessor in ejectment becomes liable to pay them by virtue of the consent rule. In this case there was no consent rule to which the next friend was a party.

Petersdorff.—We have this remedy on the rule appointing the next friend.

WIGHTMAN, J.—Certainly not. If you had intended to have made the next friend liable for costs, you should have had the consent rule amended by inserting in it the next friend's name. Rule refused.

BELL v. WALDRON.

The Court will not grant the costs upon an action on a judgment for a debt under 20l. where the conduct of the defendant has not been vexatious, although the original judgment was obtained before the passing of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, and the defendant had no goods whereon to levy.

Prideaux shewed cause against a rule obtained herein by Tyrwhitt, under the 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, s. 4, for the costs of an action brought on a judgment. It appeared that originally an action had been brought against the brother of the defendant for the recovery of a debt of 16*l.*; that such action was settled by the defendant and his brother giving two promissory notes for the debt and costs, each for half the amount; that on the said notes becoming due, they were unpaid; whereupon two actions were brought, upon each of which judgment was obtained; that a fi. fa. was issued against the goods of the defendant, which was rendered unproductive in consequence of the sheriff receiving a notice that the goods were the property of a third person; that the defendant was living in furnished apartments, and had no goods of his own; that writs of ca. sa. were issued against him, which he avoided by keeping out of the way; that the brother was taken on a ca. sa. and took the benefit of the Insolvent Act; that subsequently, the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, passed, the 57th section of which prohibits the arrest of defendants in an action for a debt not exceeding 20*l.*; that since the passing of that Act the defendant had been repeatedly seen; that in consequence of the premises, the plaintiff commenced the present action on the two judgments before obtained for the amount of 54*l.*; that the defendant pleaded to such plea (the nature of which plea was not stated); that the action went on to trial, and the defendant not appearing, the plaintiff recovered a verdict. It was now contended, in opposition to this rule, that the action on the judgment was frivolous and vexatious, and brought alone to defeat the object of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, and that there was no evidence whatever to shew that the defendant's conduct had been either fraudulent or dishonest. (Hall v. Pierce, 5 Dowl. 603; Hanmer v. White, 1 Dowl. & L. 653.)

Tyrwhitt, contrà, argued that the present action was properly brought, inasmuch as the former ones had been unavailing, and that it was the object of the 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, which rendered it necessary in such an action as this to apply to the Court for costs, only to restrain the bringing of a second action where there might have been a sufficient remedy by execution in the first, which in the present case there had not been; that the pleading to the action on the judgment was a vexatious proceeding, as there could have been no real defence to the action.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I don't think I ought to allow the costs in this action; there is nothing vexatious shewn in the conduct of the defendant, and I think, unless there had been something vexatious on his part, the costs ought not to be allowed. You seek to have a benefit by bringing this action, which you could not have had upon the judgments in the former actions, in consequence of the operation of Lord Brougham's Act, and you now come to ask for the costs of this second action. The plaintiff has his advantage in taking the case out of that Act, but I think he ought not to have the costs.

Rule discharged without costs.

PAYNE v. DAVIS.

Where a defendant pleads a set-off, and an order is obtained directing him, within a limited time, to deliver the particulars thereof, or be excluded from giving the same in evidence, and he neglects to comply therewith, a judge at nisi prius has no power to exclude evidence tendered in proof of such plea.

Semble, the proper course to be pursued by a plaintiff in such a case is to apply for an attachment against the defendant; or, if there be other pleas pleaded, to apply to a judge to strike out such plea of set-off.

Atkinson shewed cause against a rule obtained by Lush for a new trial herein. It appeared that this was an action brought against the indorsee of a bill of exchange, to which the defendant pleaded one plea, viz. that of a set-off. On the 23rd of April the plaintiff obtained a summons for the particulars of the defendant's set-off, to which the defendant gave a consent and the order was accordingly drawn up and served on the Friday, the 25th. The order was to deliver the particulars within two days, "or in default thereof that the defendant be precluded from giving any evidence in support of such set-off at the trial of the cause." The particulars were not delivered within the time, which expired on the Monday, but were served on the following Tuesday, when they were returned by the plaintiff, on the ground of their having been delivered too late, and not therefore in pursuance of the order. The action was set down for trial for the first sitting in this Term, when, in consequence of the defendant being misinformed at the marshal's office as to the day of trial, he did not appear, and the cause was tried as undefended, and the plaintiff had a verdict. Upon this the present rule was obtained, being alleged that the absence of the defendant at the trial was solely in consequence of the misinformation as to the day of trial received at the marshal's office.

Against this rule it was contended, first, that the defendant was guilty of laches; and, second, that if he had appeared at the trial he could have given no evidence of his set-off, inasmuch as he had not delivered his particulars within the two days, as limited by the judge's order.

Lush, contrà, argued that the omission to appear at the trial was not the fault of the defendant, and that he was ready to pay the costs of the day; and that as to the second objection, notwithstanding the particulars of set-off were not delivered within the two days, the defendant would still have been at liberty to have given evidence of his set-off; for that the only penalty upon the defendant for not giving the particulars, pursuant to the order, would have been an attachment; or, had there been several pleas, the plaintiff might have applied to a judge to strike out the plea of set-off; but that the judge at nisi prius would have had no right to have rejected the evidence upon it; and that if he had, a bill of exception would have lain, and the judge's order would then have been no answer.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I think this is so, and that the rule ought to be made absolute on payment of costs, the defendant undertaking to go to trial at the Sittings after Term, and giving judgment of the Term if necessary.

Atkinson.—Do I understand your lordship that the defendant is to be at liberty to give evidence of his set-off at the trial?

WIGHTMAN, J.—I think he is.

—— Rule accordingly.

(Before Mr. Justice COLERIDGE.)

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF WESTMORELAND.

Where an order of bastardy set out that the mother had applied "to J. M. one of her Majesty's justices of the peace usually acting in this division, for a summons," not stating that the said justice was acting for the said division: Held, that the allegation was sufficient under the 8 Vict. c. 10 (An Act to make certain Provisions for Proceedings in Bastardy).

Addison shewed cause against a rule calling upon two of the justices of Westmoreland to shew cause why they should not return into this court a certain order of bastardy made on the complaint of one Rebecca Blackett, with the view to the said order being quashed for defects apparent upon its face.

A great variety of objections were taken on moving for this rule, which, however, were removed by the operation of the 8 Vict. c. 10, "An Act to make certain Provisions for Proceedings in Bastardy" (passed 8th of May, 1845), and the only one which was ultimately relied on, was, that it did not appear on the face of the order that the justice who granted the summons on the application of the mother was a justice who had jurisdiction to do so, there being no statement that he was a justice acting for the division; the allegation in the order being that the said Rebecca Blackett, having, &c. did "make application to Joseph Milner, clerk, one of her Majesty's justices of the peace usually acting in this division, for a summons," &c.

In support of the order, it was argued that this allegation was equivalent to that contained in No. 8 in the schedule of the 8 Vict. c. 10, the word in such schedule being "for," instead of "in."

Bliss, contrà, contended that the substitution of the word "in" for that of "for" was most material, as the latter word was the only one which shewed jurisdiction in the justice; that the words are not equivalent; that a justice who had no jurisdiction in the county might nevertheless act in it.

COLERIDGE, J.—I think the spirit of this Act of Parliament is to discountenance those merely verbal inaccuracies which prevented these orders from being effectual; I mention this, not because I think that such objections may not properly be taken, but only that we may view them in the proper light. Mr. Bliss says, that the word "in," made use of in the order, does not shew that the justice had any jurisdiction to grant the summons, and that it should have stated that he was acting "for" the division. The words, however, are, "usually acting," which is strong presumptive evidence that the justice was acting for the division. But I really think that there is sufficient evidence to shew that the legislature intended these words to be synonymous, for the form in the Act goes on to say, "And the said justice thereupon issued his summons to the said —— to appear at a petty sessions to be holden on this day, for this division, in which the said justice usually acts," so that here, where you would expect to have the jurisdiction most strongly marked, the word "in" is used. I think the rule must be discharged. —— Rule discharged.

Thursday, June 12.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF MONTGOMERYSHIRE, in the matter of the appeal between THE PARISH OF LLANECIL, Merionethshire, appellants, and THE PARISH OF CARNO, Montgomeryshire, respondents.

The Court of Quarter Sessions are the only judges of their own practice, and this Court will not interfere with any of their rules unless they are contrary to reason. Where, therefore, by a rule of the Montgomeryshire Sessions, it was ordered that twenty-eight days' notice should be given of an adjourned appeal, and the sessions refused to hear an appeal because such rule had not been complied with, Held, on motion for a mandamus, that the rule was not so unreasonable as to induce the Court to interfere.

Bodkin, on a former day in Term, shewed cause against a rule for a mandamus, commanding the justices of Montgomeryshire to enter continuances and hear an appeal against an order of removal. The order in question was made on the 18th of December, 1843, and notice of it was given on the 20th; no notice of appeal having been given, it was executed on the 13th of January, 1844. At the ensuing April sessions an appeal was entered and respited, and on the 19th of June notice of appeal for the ensuing sessions, to be holden on the 4th of July, together with the grounds of appeal, were served on the respondents. It further appeared that by one of the rules of the Montgomeryshire sessions it was provided as follows:—"Notice of prosecuting adjourned appeals to be given, in like manner, twenty-eight clear days before the sessions, and, unless the appellants prosecute the said appeal with effect at the said next sessions, the order of removal to stand confirmed." On the appeal being called on, it was objected, on the part of the respondents, that this rule had not been complied with, fourteen days' notice only having been given. The sessions held this objection to be fatal, and the order of removal was thereupon confirmed with costs; whereupon this rule was obtained, on the ground that the rule of sessions requiring such twenty-eight days' notice was unreasonable. In support of the order of sessions it was argued that the rule in question was not unreasonable; that it applies only to respited appeals, in which case it is proper that a long notice should be given; that the decision of Patteson, J. in R. v. The Justices of Monmouthshire (3 Dowl. 306), shews that it is for the justices to determine what notice they will require in cases of respited appeals; that the order of respite itself contained a direction that it should be served twenty-eight days before the sessions.

Townsend and Pashley, contrà, argued that the rule of the sessions was unreasonable; that it was altogether in opposition to the spirit of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, which requires only fourteen days' previous delivery of the grounds of appeal; that the utmost limit in almost any legal proceeding being fourteen days, twenty-eight days were clearly inconsistent with reason; that if such a number of days were not unreasonable, any greater number would not be, and it would be difficult to assign a limit; that this rule of sessions being unreasonable, the Court will interfere, as it has done in other cases, to correct the badly-exercised discretion of the justices. (Rex v. The Justices of Lancashire, 7 B. & C. 691; R. v. The Justices of Monmouthshire, 3 Dowl. 306; R. v. The Justices of Wilts, 10 East, 404; R. v. The Justices of Norfolk, 5 B. & Ad. 990; R. v. The Justices of Staffordshire, 4 Ad. & Ell. 844; R. v. The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 2 Q.B. 716.)

His lordship this day gave the following judgment.—This was a rule for a mandamus against the justices of Montgomeryshire, commanding them to enter continuances and hear an appeal against an order of removal. The order itself was made and served in December 1843, and in January it was executed; at the next April sessions an appeal was entered and respited, and the appeal came on for trial at the following July sessions. The practice at the sessions required twenty-eight days' notice of trial of a respited appeal, and because the appellants had not given a notice of this length the justices refused to hear it. The question, therefore, is, whether this rule which requires twenty-eight days' notice is so unreasonable as to induce the Court to interfere. The case of Reg. v. The Justices of Wilts (10 East), and many others, were cited in the argument, but the result of them all is, that the Court sions are the only judges of their own practice, and that this Court will not interfere unless the rule of the sessions is contrary to reason. But here the rule in question applied only to notices of respited appeals, and there was an interval of three months between the two sessions, and there was, therefore, plenty of time to have given the required notice. It appears to me, therefore, that this Court ought not to interfere in this case, and that the rule should to be discharged. Rule discharged.

WILLIAMS and ANOTHER, Assignees, v. VINES and ANOTHER.

Where a defendant pleads a payment into court and another plea, and the plaintiff takes the money out of court and demurs to the latter plea, which demurrer is decided in his favour, and he then enters a nolle prosequi to the residue of the action, except the costs of the demurrer, he is entitled to those costs on taxation.

Bramwell, on a former day, moved for a rule for the Master to review his taxation herein. This was an action by the assignees of a bankrupt for money had and received, and on an account stated. To this the defendants pleaded, 1st, except as to 112*l.* the general issue; 2nd, except as to 112*l.* a set-off; 3rd, a payment into court of 112*l.*; and 4th, a special plea of lien. The plaintiffs took out of court the 112*l.* traversed the two first pleas, and demurred to the fourth. The demurrer was, on argument, decided in favour of the plaintiffs. They then delivered a paper which purported to be a nolle prosequi, by which they declared that they would not further prosecute the said suit, except as to the costs of the demurrer. Subsequently they obtained an appointment to tax, and when before the Master, they claimed not only the general costs of the cause up to the payment of the money into court, but the costs of the demurrer also, which latter costs the defendants claimed upon the ground that the nolle prosequi was an admission that the plaintiffs had no right of action beyond the sum paid into court, and that all proceedings subsequent to that were unwarranted. (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 33.) The Master having decided in favour of the plaintiffs, and against the defendants, this rule was obtained; and it was argued that the defendants were entitled to the costs of the demurrer notwithstanding they had failed thereon, the plaintiffs having, by their nolle prosequi, foregone all their right of action, except in respect of the 112*l.* paid into court.

WIGHTMAN, J.—Surely the plaintiffs are entitled to the costs of your bad plea?

Bramwell.—They confess that they fail as to all except the 112*l.*; part of the action in which they confess they fail is this very demurrer.

WIGHTMAN, J.—But they have judgment on their demurrer for their costs.

Bramwell.—They have only interlocutory judgment. They have failed upon this part of their demand, by their own confession, by entering a nolle prosequi.

WIGHTMAN, J.—If a defendant overloads the record with a parcel of bad pleas, to which the plaintiffs demur, they ought to have their costs if they succeed. I will look at the pleadings.

Cur. adv. vult.

His lordship this day refused the rule, declaring it as his opinion that the Master had properly taxed the costs. Rule refused.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF MIDDLESEX.

Where an Act of Parliament provides that a certain number of days' notice "at least" shall be given, that means so many clear days, and therefore excludes the day on which the notice is given.

Prendergast, on a former day in Term, shewed cause against a rule obtained by Pashley, calling upon the justices of Middlesex to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue, directing them to enter continuances and hear an appeal of Henry Thomas against a rate for the relief of the poor of the parish of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch. This was an appeal under the 121st section of the 53 Geo. 3, c. 112 (local), which provides that, if any person shall feel himself aggrieved by any assessment, he may apply to the trustees appointed under the Act, within twenty days next after the demand made upon him, who are empowered to give relief; and that if the appellant is not satisfied therewith, or if relief is refused, he may apply to the quarter sessions within three months after their decision, "such appellant first giving seven days' notice at least, in writing, of his or her intention of bringing such appeal, and of the matter thereof," to the clerk or clerks of such trustees, &c. The appellant, intending to appeal against an assessment under this Act, gave notice, at half-past nine in the morning of the 31st of December last, for the next sessions, which commenced at ten o'clock on the following 7th of January. On the appeal coming on for trial, it was objected, on the part of the respondents, that sufficient notice of appeal had not been given, the words "seven days' notice at least" meaning seven clear [illegible] not including, as in this case, the day of the [illegible] of the notice. The sessions being of this opini[illegible] used to hear the appeal, whereupon this rule was obtained. It was now contended, in opposition to this rule, that the justices were correct in their decision, and that the above words excluded both the first and last days, so that there should have been seven clear intermediate days. (Zouch v. Empsey, 4 B. & Ald. 522; Reg. v. The Justices of Shropshire, 8 Ad. & Ell. 173; Young v. Higgon, 9 L. J. M. c. 29; Mitchell v. Foster, 12 Ad. & Ell.; Chambers v. Smith, 13 L. J. Ex. 25; Godson v. Sanctuary, 4 B. & Ad. 255.)

Pashley, contrà, argued that the notice of appeal was in time, and that the words in question must be construed as including one day and excluding the other; and that, even as it was, there were, by counting the fractions of the days, seven clear days, the notice of appeal having been delivered at half-past nine in the morning on the 31st of December, and the sessions not commencing until ten on the 7th of January. (Pugh v. Robinson, 1 T. R. 116; Ex parte David, 4 Dow. & Ry. 647; 1 Dow. 517; Wallace v. King, 1 Hy. Bla. 13; Harper v. Taswell, 6 B. & P. 166; Cook v. ——, 5 T. R. 255; Cowley v. Harris, Mo. & M. 141.) Cur. adv. vult.(a)

His Lordship to-day gave the following judgment.—There was a case of Reg. v. The Justices of Middlesex, which was an application for a mandamus to justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal. The Act of Parliament under which the appeal was brought directed that seven days' notice at least should be given of the appeal. Now it appears that the first day of the sessions was the 7th of January, and the notice was served at half-past nine in the morning on the previous 31st of December; and the question is, whether the first day should be computed in the seven or not. If the question were to be considered now for the first time, I should be perhaps inclined to doubt whether or not the first day should be excluded, but it has been so frequently held that the words "at least;" mean to exclude the first and last days, that I have no discretion to decide otherwise; the cases of Zouch v. Empsey, Reg. v. The Justices of Shropshire, and Mitchell v. Foster are direct authorities that the words "at least" exclude the day of the service. It was however contended that the fraction of a day might be considered, and that as the notice was given at half-past nine on the 31st, and the sessions commenced at ten on the 7th, there were seven clear days; but this computation is only in cases where it is necessary to ascertain which of two acts is to have precedence of the other. I am therefore of opinion that the notice was served one day too late. It is unnecessary to consider the other points. Rule discharged.

(a) There were other points taken and argued, but as nothing turned upon them in the judgment, they are omitted.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Wednesday, June 4.

Ex parte MONTEFIORE, re MONTEFIORE.

Bankrupt trustee—Proof.

The father of an infant received a legacy on account of the infant, and invested it in securities out of the ordinary course. He subsequently became bankrupt and it was held that the cestui que trust could elect whether to prove in respect of the legacy and interest, or the securities and profits.

In this case, a fiat, dated the 28th of August, 1843, was issued against the bankrupt, Joseph Barrow Montefiore. On the 29th of Feb. 1844, a fiat was issued against J. B. Montefiore and Jacob Montefiore his brother, and by an order of the Court, dated the 1st of May, 1844, the proceedings under the two fiats were incorporated.

This petition was presented by the two infant daughters of the bankrupt J. B. Montefiore, praying that he might be at liberty to prove against his separate estate in respect of two legacies of 75*l.* each received by the bankrupt on their account.

In August and July 1830, the bankrupt was residing at Sydney, and while there received, by remittances from England, the two legacies on account of the petitioners. These sums were invested in different securities in the colonies of Australasia; and in the bankrupt's books regular entries were made of the transactions connected with them.

Rogers, for the petitioners.

Swanston and Hawkes, for some of the assignees, and,

Hayes, for the other assignees.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—An executor, properly or improperly, paid a legacy, or money in respect of legacy, to the father of an infant; he deals with the money, and makes investments out of the ordinary course; he becomes bankrupt: the cestuis que trust have a right to elect to take either the debt with interest, or the investments with the profits, as may be for their advantage. Which is for their advantage is a matter which must be investigated. Various questions may arise as to the maintenance, &c. of these infants; but the general rules of law, as I have stated them, cannot be questioned.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Thursday, May 29.

(Before Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD.)

Re ROYLE, an Insolvent.

Where an affidavit verifying the schedule of an insolvent is defective, the Court has no power to amend it.

If an insolvent has been discharged out of custody by order of the Court, upon filing his petition, the Court will, if his petition be afterwards dismissed, order him back into custody.

Insolvent at the time of filing his petition in this court was in custody under an execution, but shortly after his petition was filed he was discharged by order of the Court, according to the usual practice. On the day appointed for the examination of the insolvent on his interim order, he was opposed for the detaining creditor, and on that occasion the insolvent swore that he did not know the party at whose suit he had been taken in execution; that he was not indebted to him, and that he had never been served with a writ at his suit. The detaining creditor was not in court. Some friends of the insolvent undertook to pay into court the amount of the supposed debt, to be paid over to the execution creditor in the event of his appearing in court in person on a day to be named by the Commissioner for such purpose, and substantiating his demand. His Honour, under these circumstances adjourned the meeting until this day.

Cooke (with whom was Hughes), for the execution creditor, now took an objection to the affidavit of the insolvent verifying his schedule as required by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 2, that there was no date in the jurat. Upon an affidavit so defective perjury could not be assigned, which is the proper test of sufficiency. The affidavit being bad, there is no power given to the Court by any of the statutes relating to insolvents to amend it. The petition must, therefore, be dismissed, and the insolvent ordered back into custody.

Clarkson (Sturgeon with him), for the insolvent.—It is too late now to take a technical objection; it should have been taken at the first meeting; but even if the Court will now entertain such an objection, it cannot be supported. The insolvent was actually sworn to the truth of his schedule, and signed the affidavit; and the officer of the court having omitted, in filling up the jurat, to insert the date, the Court will now direct the mistake of its own officer to be amended and the date inserted.

Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD.—I do not understand the insolvent to contend that the affidavit is correct, but that it may be amended. The form of the affidavit is given by the Act, and I cannot amend it. The petition must be dismissed; and as my order discharging the insolvent from custody was therefore wrongly made, I shall order him back into custody, and the money paid into court must be returned.

Re POOLE, a Bankrupt.

Where a party seeks to prove a debt against the estate of a bankrupt upon a judgment, the Court will, under certain circumstances, inquire into the consideration for the debt before allowing the proof.

A proof for 250*l.* was tendered to the Court by the plaintiff upon a judgment obtained after verdict in an action of debt. The cause was tried at the assizes, and defended by the bankrupt. Verdict was given for the plaintiff. The judge who presided at the trial certified that "execution ought to issue in a fortnight." A new trial was afterwards moved for by the defendant, and refused. Judgment had been signed and execution issued thereon by the plaintiff, but little had been levied under the execution. The defendant had since become bankrupt.

The record, with the Master's allocatur and the judgment, were put in. The assignees of the bankrupt contended these were not sufficient to support the proof, but that the debt must be proved in the same manner as if no verdict had been obtained.

Hughes, in support of the proof.—The judgment is of itself evidence of the debt, and until it is impeached, the Court has no jurisdiction to inquire into the consideration for the debt. There is no impeachment of the verdict in this case, the new trial having been refused. The judgment cannot now be set aside except upon a writ of error.

His HONOUR thought that the motion for a new trial was an impeachment of the verdict, and refused to allow the proof without evidence being given of the consideration for the debt. Proof withdrawn.

Re JOHN PETERS, a Bankrupt.

Where the purchaser of an estate at auction does not complete his purchase, and the estate is afterwards put up to sale again, and re-sold in pursuance of the conditions of sale, but at a less price, and the first purchaser afterwards becomes a bankrupt, the vendors may prove for the deficiency and expenses against his estate.

This was a meeting to declare a dividend.

It appeared that certain freehold property of Edward Peters, since a bankrupt, had been put up to sale at auction, and was knocked down to the bankrupt. By the conditions of sale a certain per-centage on the amount of the purchase-money was to be deposited at the time of sale, and if the purchase was not completed by a certain time the deposit was to be considered as liquidated damages and to be forfeited, and the estate put up again to sale, and if any deficiency occurred upon such re-sale, such deficiency was to be considered as liquidated damages and to be paid to the vendors by such purchaser. The bankrupt did not complete the purchase, and the estate was put up again for sale, and was knocked down at much less price. The assignees of Edward Peters, in conjunction with the mortgagees of the estate, now put in a joint claim against the estate of the bankrupt for the deficiency and costs of the re-sale.

Forster, for the mortgagees, contended that the vendors had a lien on the estate for the whole amount of the purchase-money under the first sale, and that, having received the purchase-money under the second sale, they were entitled to prove against the estate of the bankrupt for the deficiency, and the expenses incurred in consequence of the non-completion of the first purchase. In support of this proposition he cited Ex parte Gyde (1 Glyn & Jameson, 323); Hooper v. Booth (1 B. & A. 557); Green v. Bicknall (8 A. & E. 111).

The vendors were not now prepared to prove for the costs of the re-sale.

His HONOUR.—I will, upon the authority of the cases cited, allow a claim to be entered for the amount of the deficiency less the deposit already received, but I cannot admit any claim for the costs until the vendors are in a situation to prove for them.

Claim entered accordingly.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner STEVENSON.)

Re MEEK.

Where any of the debts in the schedule of an insolvent owing more than 300l. were contracted whilst he was a trader, the petition must be dismissed; but quære, whether a debt contracted whilst the insolvent was out of business, but precious to a subsequent trading, will disqualify him from petitioning? And quære, whether any other than a good petitioning creditor's debt would so disqualify an insolvent?

This insolvent came up for his first hearing. His debts and liabilities amounted to nearly 9,000*l.* some of which appeared by the dates in his schedule to have been incurred as long ago as 18[illegible].

Homes opposed for several creditors, and in his examination of the insolvent it appeared that Meek, after being an innkeeper in London, had retired from business for two years, after which, in 1836, he had taken the Queen's Head inn in Cheltenham, and carried on the trade of a victualler there until November 1838.

His HONOUR.—Then I have no further jurisdiction in the case, as several of the debts in the schedule bear date earlier than November 1838. One for 250*l.* I notice, is dated in 1835.

Lovegrove, attorney for the insolvent, said that none of those debts were contracted whilst insolvent was a trader. The debt of 250*l.* dated in 1835, was contracted during the interval when insolvent was out of business, previous to his taking the Queen's Head in Cheltenham.

Homes referred to a debt of 200*l.* due to Mr. Stiles it bore dates "1837 to 1840 inclusive."

Lovegrove.—That debt is stated to be the balance of an account, and the dates given in the schedule are those of the earliest and latest items in that account; but many sums have been paid on account, which sums, I contend, should be appropriated to the discharge of the earlier items, in which case it will appear that all that part of the debt which was incurred before Meek left off trading has been paid.

His HONOUR.—The points raised by Mr. Lovegrove certainly require some consideration. Is there such a debt still existing, and contracted before November 1838, as would constitute a good petitioning creditor's debt?

On such a debt being pointed out, to which Mr. Lovegrove's objections did not apply,

His HONOUR said it was then unnecessary to decide the other questions that had been raised, and Dismissed the petition.

DOG-STEALING.—There is a Bill now before the House of Commons to make the stealing of dogs a misdemeanor. For the first offence, before a magistrate, the party may be committed for a period not exceeding six months, or be fined above the value of the dog a sum not exceeding 20*l.*; for the second offence, to be indicted, and may be transported for seven years, or imprisoned, or fined and imprisoned. A penalty of 20*l.* may be levied for having possession of stolen dogs or their skins.

Lord Brougham's Bill to amend the law of marriage will extinguish Gretna Green—at least as a refuge for English lovers. It provides that no marriage in Scotland shall be valid unless both the parties were born in Scotland, or reside there, or have lived in Scotland for three weeks preceding the marriage.

PENNY POSTAGE.—The usual Post-office returns have just been issued; they shew results which must be highly gratifying to the friends of penny postage. The total number of letter delivered in the United Kingdom in the year 1844 was 242 millions, which is an increase of nearly 22 millions on the previous year. (The number before the reduction of the rate, it may be necessary to remind our readers, was 75 millions.) But the most remarkable fact is the great increase in the London district, or old twopenny-post, the letters of which have more than doubled since the penny rate was established.

NOTES ON LEADING CASES.

No. II.

CHAPPLE v. ANNE COOPER.

(13 M. & W. 252.)

The rule of law as to "necessaries" for an infant—What are "necessaries?"—Contract by an infant widow to pay the expenses of her husband's funeral.

This case (the authorized report of which has only just appeared) raises one of those innumerable questions that depend for their determination upon the legal meaning of the term "necessaries," as applied to the contract of an infant or married woman: and in order fully to understand its bearings and decision, it will be desirable to consider briefly what construction has been put upon that term.

The very meaning of the word, in its ordinary acceptation, of course includes all things necessary to the health and comfort of the infant. Meat, drink, apparel, lodgings, and medicine are therefore ranked in the first class of those articles for which an infant is obviously liable on his contract. (Bac. Ab. Infancy (I.); 3 Com. Dig. Enfant (B.) 5.)

Things necessary," says Baron Alderson in the case before us, "are those without which an individual cannot reasonably exist. In the first place, food, raiment, lodging, and the like: about these there is no doubt." (p. 258.) But aliment for the mind is as necessary in civil life as food for the body; and education and instruction come clearly within the range of indispensable necessities. (Co. Lytt. 172 a.; Manby v. Scott, 1 Sid. 112; Pickering v. Gunning, Sir W. Jones, 18; Peters v. Fleming, 6 M. & W. 48.) But though a man be well supplied with food and raiment, and have received a polite education, how much does he still stand in need of? By himself how little can a man do to help himself—and the service and attendance of others is clearly a prime necessary in an artificial society. "Hence attendance may be the subject of an infant's contract" (per Alderson, B. ut supra). But when it is once assumed that some clothes, some food, some education, some attendance, are necessary, then the question arises—what quantity and what quality will the law allow? The rule which has been laid down in a long series of cases, is that "the extent of the contract may vary according to the state and condition of the infant himself." (Ibid.) From the earliest time down to the present, the word "necessaries" was not confined, in its strict sense, to such articles as were necessary to the support of life, but extended to articles "fit to maintain the particular person in the state, station, and degree in life in which he is. All such articles as are purely ornamental are to be rejected, because they cannot be requisite for any one." (per Parke, B. in Peters v. Fleming); and in the same case Alderson, B. says, "It has been ruled that an infant may be liable for schooling, and if it become a question, how much schooling is necessary, then you must inquire what situation in life he is required to fill. A knowledge of the learned languages may be necessary for one, a knowledge of reading and writing may be sufficient for another. The real question would be, whether or not what he has contracted for be such as a person in his station and rank in life would require." (See also the cases of Ford v. Fothergill, 1 Esp. 211; Mackarall v. Bachelor, Cro. Eliz. 583; Clowes v. Brooke, 2 Stra. 1011; Burghart v. Hall, 4 M. & W. 727; Brayshaw v. Eaton, 7 Scott, 183.) According to this rule it was held by Lord Ellenborough that regimentals furnished to an infant who was a member of a volunteer corps were necessaries for him. (Coates v. Wilson, 5 Esp. 152.) Lord Kenyon refused to say that a servant, and livery for that servant, were not necessaries for a captain in the army. (Hands v. Slaney, 8 T. R. 579.) But if proper clothes have been supplied to an infant by his father, any others cannot be considered as necessary (Cook v. Denton, 3 Car. & P.; Burghart v. Angerstein, 6 Car. & P. 690); and an infant living under the roof of his parent, who provides what he considers necessary, cannot bind himself to a stranger for such articles as might be deemed necessaries under different circumstances. (Borrinsale v. Greville, 1 Selw. N. P. 128; Bainbridge v. Pickering, 2 W. Black. 1325; Story v. Perry, 4 Car. & P. 526.) A stanhope was held not necessary for a minor, the son of a beneficed clergyman, who had retired from the army on the ground of an insufficient fortune. (Charters v. Bayntun, 7 Car. & P. 52.) An infant is not liable for money lent to supply him with necessaries (Prober v. Knouth, 2 Esp. 472, n.); nor for money advanced to place him out as an apprentice. (Smith v. Gibson, Peake's Add. Cases, 52.) The question whether the things supplied are or are not necessaries is a question for the jury (Peters v. Fleming, 6 M. & W. 42; Maddox v. Miller, 1 M. & S. 738), yet it is subject to the control of the judge; and, in Harris v. Fane (1 Scott, N. R. 287), the jury having found that certain things were necessaries, contrary to the opinion expressed by the judge at the trial, the Court considered the verdict perverse, and granted a new trial. From the cases above stated, it will be seen that there must be a real and substantial advantage derived to the infant from any contract upon which he is held liable; but this advantage need not be confined personally to himself. "Necessaries for an infant's wife are necessaries for him (Turner v. Frisby, 1 Stra. 168; Carter R. 215), and (upon his express or implied credit) "he is liable for necessaries supplied to his "lawful children" (Bac. Max. p. 86, ed. 1741), where the noble author, illustrating the maxim persona conjuncta æquiparatur interesse proprio, says, "So, if a man under the age of twenty-one years, contract for the nursing of his lawful child, this contract is good, and shall not be avoided by infancy, no more than if he had contracted for his own aliments or erudition."

This brings us to the case of Chapple v. Cooper, which we have placed at the head of these remarks.

It was in debt for the work and labour of the plaintiff, as an undertaker, bestowed by him in and about the funeral of a certain person then lately deceased, upon the retainer and at the request of the defendant.

Pleas—Never indebted, and Infancy.

Replication to the latter plea—That the work, &c. were used about the funeral of the defendant's husband, and were necessaries suitable to the defendant's condition. It was proved upon the trial that the expenses of the funeral had been ordered by the defendant, whose husband had left no property to be administered. The defendant's case was that the funeral expenses of her husband could not be considered necessaries for her, and upon this point the whole question turned. The argument for the plaintiff was that the removal of the body and its decent equipment were necessary both to the health and reputation of the widow. She could not leave it until its interment, and until that time her health depended upon its due preservation; and interred it must be—for could a woman throw her husband's body into the highway? If there were assets, she would recover the expenses from the representative; and the absence of assets did not relieve her from the obligation of seeing the corpse decently buried. Lord Denman, in Reg. v. Stewart (12 Ad. & E. 773), had imposed that obligation upon every stranger in whose house a poor person died; and if upon a stranger, it was, à fortiori, incumbent upon the widow. For the other side it was insisted, that the interment would yield no personal benefit to the widow, more than it would to any stranger or lodger who happened to reside in the house, and that consequently she was no more liable than they were. The Court, however, held that the defendant was liable upon her contract, though not exactly for the reasons urged in the plaintiff's argument. They doubted whether it could be said that any personal advantage resulted to the infant directly from the mere act of burial; but they decided the case upon the general principle that "necessaries furnished to those with whom an infant becomes one person by or through the contract of marriage are, in point of law, necessaries to the infant himself." Now, decent Christian burial had been considered by many authorities "as a part of a man's own rights," and must therefore be considered as reasonably necessary to him. If this were so, the decent Christian burial of his wife and lawful children (being personæ conjunctæ with him) were also reasonably necessary to him; and for such a "necessary" he was bound upon his contract. Such would be the case with an infant husband; and as the contract was deemed to be one for the personal benefit of the contractor, there seemed to be no reason why the principle should not equally apply to an infant widow, who, as her coverture was at an end, was at liberty to contract. The whole of this reasoning turns upon the assumption that Christian burial is a right to which every one is entitled; and though we believe, with certain qualifications, this assumption to be true, it would have been more satisfactory if the authorities by which it is supported had been mentioned. The Court probably referred to the cases of Jones v. Ashburnham (4 East, 165); Rex v. Lynn (2 T. R. 733); Andrewes v. Cawthorne (Willes, 536), which see; and Rogers, Ecc. Law, c. on "Burial." That "Christian" burial is not a universal right, the very phrase indicates. It must necessarily be confined to those who profess Christianity; and might not a question arise out of the doctrines of the Church of England, on the subject of baptism. If the defendant's husband in the case before us had been an avowed and notorious infidel, would the Court have been justified in assuming that to him Christian burial was necessary? and would it not be also worthy of consideration whether the articles which must constitute an undertaker's particulars of demand are included in the right to burial? This case may be added to the list of those on the subject given by Chitty on Contracts, pp. 114-15, 2nd ed.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Trinity Term—In the eighth Year of the Reign of Queen Victoria.

June 6.

This Court will, on Wednesday, the 2nd day of July next, hold a sitting, and will proceed to give judgment in certain of the matters standing over for the consideration of the Court. N. C. TINDAL.

The following Order has been affixed in the Hall of the Middle Temple:

"The Masters of the Bench, having fully investigated the charges preferred against Augustus Newton, esq. Barrister of this society, and having heard him in his defence, are unanimously of opinion that his conduct at the Bar, as proved before them, has been in several instances highly unprofessional, and is deserving of severe censure. And they do order that he be excluded from the Hall for the period of two years from this date.

"And that this Order be affixed to the screen in the Hall.

"Dated the 5th day of July, 1845."

CLOSE COPIES OF CHANCERY RECORDS.

The following memorial from the Solicitors having been addressed to the Lord Chancellor, received immediate attention, and resulted in the issuing of the orders subjoined.

"That your memorialists have heard that by direction of your lordship the practice has been put an end to of allowing the different stationers of the court to make close or brief copies at the same time that office copies are being made.

"That an order regulating this practice in the Six Clerks' Office, and putting it on the footing on which it has hitherto stood, was made as long ago as 1763. (See Beames' Orders, p. 240.)

"That this practice is one of essential importance to the suitor, and by no possibility can ever cost him one farthing; has extensively prevailed in the courts of equity and bankruptcy from time immemorial, and also, so far as needful, in the courts of law; and that there is no authenticated instance of its abuse; and, as your memorialists confidently believe, it is peculiarly not open to abuse.

"That, while the benefit of the practice is entirely to the advantage of the suitor, the abuse, if there were any, would operate solely to the personal detriment of the solicitor, and merely in diminution of his own professional remuneration.

"That all the record keepers, the taxing masters, the clerks of inrolment, and the clerk of affidavits, and all officers acquainted with the practical working of a solicitor's business, would, your memorialists are quite confident, corroborate your memorialists' statement of the importance of the practice and its entire freedom from objection.

"That this practice is totally different from the objectionable system still continued of copy money in the masters' offices, as in that case copies badly made and not wanted have often to be taken, and, when taken, are paid for by the client; whereas the copies in question are all of them copies urgently wanted, and are made on account of the solicitor, and the money paid for them is paid by him out of his own pocket, and not by the client: the single difference between these copies and all other copies he makes being, that the copies in question are made for him by the stationer to the office, instead of by the stationer he usually employs.

"That from the mode in which office copies are necessarily made, they take much longer time to make than close or brief copies, and that when made they cannot be used, but immediately require a brief copy to be made from them, and therefore the new regulation will cause it to be nearly three times as long in future as it has been, before copies of records can be ready for use.

"That in cases of injunction, particularly of injunctions as to commercial matters, the effect of abolishing the practice in question will often be fatal to the interests of suitors, inasmuch as it will necessarily make it three or four days, at the least, before brief copies of bills, answers, or affidavits filed of record can be obtained and placed in the hands of counsel; and it is well known that in many cases the continuance of an ex parte injunction for three or four days is really the whole object of a suit.

"That in such cases as injunctions to prevent the transfer of bills or stock, or to prevent sales, or the sailing of vessels, or the publication of magazines or newspapers, or with regard to railroads or other public works—every day's needless continuance of an injunction is most detrimental.

"That cases in which injunctions are moved for on two clear days' notice given by leave of Court before appearance, are of almost daily occurrence, and that heretofore, by means of the facilities given by the old practice, the defendant could get copies of the bill and affidavits, so as to appear on such motion; but that the defendant will not, under the new regulation, be able in future to get a brief of the bill into his counsel's hands in time for such motion, or under four or five days after receiving the notice, at the very earliest.

"That your memorialists feel convinced that if the new regulation is to be persisted in, cases must periodically occur in which the obstacle now first interposed will be found to have produced ruinous mischief.

"That if parties are to be compelled to wait for office copies of affidavits, and then to make their brief from the office copy, the mischief and difficulty which will arise on opposed motions and petitions will be of daily occurrence.

"That the new regulation makes new rules of practice imperatively requisite, because in a variety of cases the times now allowed by the Court must in consequence be lengthened. Your memorialists would allege, for instance, the case of dissolving an injunction to stay trial where exceptions to the answer required to be drawn, signed by counsel, and ___ before the time by which, under the new regulation, a copy of the answer can be obtained, and much less before it can be briefed and read."

The Lord Chancellor has been pleased to make the following order:—

"Monday, the 10th day of March, 1845.

"Whereas a memorial hath been presented to the Lord Chancellor by several solicitors of this court, setting forth as therein stated, and praying that his lordship would be pleased either to allow what is alleged to have been the ancient practice of the court as to close and brief copies to be continued, or else to make such new regulations as will give the suitors the facilities for the transaction of business to which it is alleged they have always been accustomed. And whereas his lordship hath considered the matter of the said memorial, and hath therein called to his assistance the Master of the Rolls, it is thereupon hereby ordered, that the clerks of records and writs may, in cases requiring extraordinary despatch, permit the stationers employed in their office to make close or brief copies, as well as office copies, subject nevertheless to the following provisions; viz.—

"I.—The clerks of records and writs are to provide,

"1st. That such permission shall not be given to any stationer or copyist who is or may be a salaried clerk in the office.

"2nd. That such permission shall not be given in any case in which the making and delivery of a close or brief copy would in any manner delay the making or due delivery of the office copy.

"II.—No officer or clerk in the office shall become entitled to or shall demand or receive any fee, gift, gratuity, emolument, or advantage arising out of, or in any way to be derived from, the permission to make or the making or delivery of any such close or office copy.

"LYNDHURST, C.

GENERAL ORDERS AND RULES OF THE HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY.

XVII. No order is to be made for leave to file exceptions nunc pro tunc.

XVIII. If a defendant, using due diligence, is unable to put in his answer to a bill within the times allowed by Order XVI. the master (on sufficient cause being shewn) may allow to such defendant such further time, and on such, if any, terms, as to the master seems just.

XIX. The master may enlarge the time for making his report upon exceptions, in all cases where the time is not limited by the order of reference, or by notice given pursuant to article 21, of Order XVI.

XX. In all cases where the master is authorized to appoint the time for any proceeding, or to enlarge the time allowed for any proceeding by general order, he may further enlarge any time so appointed or enlarged by himself, and on such, if any, terms as to him seem just, provided the application for such enlargement is made before the expiration of the time previously allowed, and he is satisfied that such enlargement is required for the purpose of justice, and not with a view to create unnecessary delay.

XXI. The power of the Court to enlarge or abridge the time for doing any act or taking any proceeding in a cause upon such, if any, terms as the justice of the case requires, is unaffected by these Orders.

Subpœna.

XXII. Subpœnas to appear, or to appear and answer, which are served within the jurisdiction of the Court, are to be made returnable within eight days after the service thereof.

XXIII. Subpœnas to appear, or to appear and answer, which are served out of the jurisdiction of the Court, are to be made returnable at such time after the service thereof as the Court by special order may direct; and if an answer be required, each such subpœna is to specify the time after service within which the defendant is required to answer.

XXIV. All writs of subpœna in this Court are to be prepared by the solicitor of the party requiring the same; and the seal for sealing the same is to be marked or inscribed with the words "Subpœna Office, Chancery;" and such writs are to be in the terms mentioned at the foot of these orders, or as near as may be, with such alterations and variations as circumstances may require.

XXV. In the interval between the suing out and service of any subpœna, the party suing out the same may correct any error in the names of parties or witnesses, and may have the writ resealed upon payment to the clerk of the subpœna office of a fee of one shilling, and at the same time leaving a corrected præcipe of such subpœna, marked, altered, and resealed, and signed with the name and address of the solicitor or solicitors suing out the same.

XXVI. Service upon a defendant's solicitor of a subpœna to answer an amended bill, or to hear judgment, is to be deemed good service upon the party.

XXVII. After the allowance of or submission to exceptions to an answer for insufficiency, a defendant is to answer within the time appointed, without being served with any subpœna to make a better answer.

Service of Copy Bill.

XXVIII. Where the plaintiff has omitted to serve any defendant with a copy of the bill under the 23rd of the Orders of the 26th of August, 1841, within twelve weeks from the filing of such bill, the Court may, if it shall think fit, upon the motion of the plaintiff, without notice, give the plaintiff leave to serve such defendant with such copy within such time and upon such terms as to the Court seems just.

Appearance.

XXIX. If any defendant, not appearing to be an infant or a person of weak or unsound mind unable of himself to defend the suit, is when within the jurisdiction of the Court duly served with a subpœna to appear to or to appear to and answer a bill, and refuses or neglects to appear thereto within eight days after such service, the plaintiff may, after the expiration of such eight days, and within three weeks from the time of such service, apply to the record and writ clerk to enter an appearance for such defendant: and, no appearance having been entered, the record and writ clerk is to enter such appearance accordingly, upon being satisfied by affidavit that the supœna was duly served upon such defendant personally or at his dwelling-house or usual place of abode; and after the expiration of such three weeks, or after the time allowed to such defendant for appearing has expired, in any case in which the record and writ clerk is not hereby required to enter such appearance the plaintiff may apply to the Court for leave to enter such appearance for such defendant; and the Court, being satisfied that the supœna was duly served, and that no appearance has been entered for such defendant, may, if it so thinks fit, order the same accordingly.

XXX. Any appearance entered at the instance of the plaintiff for a defendant who, at the time of the entry thereof, is an infant or a person of weak or unsound mind unable of himself to defend the suit, is irregular and of no validity.

XXXI. In case it appears to the Court by sufficient evidence that any defendant against whom a subpœna to appear to or to appear to and answer a bill has issued has been within the jurisdiction of the Court at some time not more than two years before the subpœna was issued, and that such defendant is beyond the seas, or that upon inquiry at his usual place of abode (if he had any) or at any other place or places where at the time when the subpœna was issued he might probably have been met with, he could not be found so as to be served with process, and that in either case there is just ground to believe that such defendant is gone out of the realm or otherwise absconded to avoid being served with process, then and in such case the Court may order that such defendant do appear at a certain day to be named in the order; and a copy of such order, together with a notice thereof to the effect set forth at the foot of this order, may, within fourteen days after such order made, be inserted in the London Gazette, and be otherwise published as the Court directs; and in case the defendant does not appear within the time limited by such order or within such further time as the Court appoints, then, on proof made of such publication as aforesaid of the aforesaid order, the Court may order an appearance to be entered for the defendant on the application of the plaintiff.

NOTICE.—"A. B., take notice, that if you do not appear pursuant to the above order, the plaintiff may enter an appearance for you, and the Court may afterwards grant to the plaintiff such relief as he may appear to be entitled to on his own shewing."

XXXII. If, upon default made by a defendant in not appearing to or not answering a bill, it appears to the Court that such defendant is an infant, or a person of weak or unsound mind not so found by inquisition, so that he is unable of himself to defend the suit, the Court may, upon the application of the plaintiff, order that one of the solicitors of the Court be assigned guardian of such defendant, by whom he may appear to and answer or may answer the bill and defend the suit.

But no such order is to be made unless it appears to the Court on the hearing of such application that the subpœna to appear to and answer the bill was duly served, and that notice of such application was, after the expiration of the time allowed for appearing to or for answering the bill, and at least six days before the hearing of the application, served upon or left at the dwelling-house of the person with whom or under whose care such defendant was at the time of serving such subpœna, and (in the case of such defendant being an infant not residing with or under the care of his father or guardian) that notice of such application was also served upon or left at the dwelling-house of the father or guardian of such infant, unless the Court at the time of hearing such application thinks fit to dispense with such last-mentioned service.

XXXIII. Where a defendant in any suit is out of the jurisdiction of the Court.

1. The Court, upon application supported by such evidence as shall satisfy the Court in what place or country such defendant is or may probably be found, may order that the subpœna to appear to or to appear to and answer the bill, may be served on such defendant in such place or country or within such limits as the Court thinks fit to direct.

2. Such order is to limit a time (depending on the place or country within which the subpœna is to be served) after service of the subpœna within which such defendant is to appear to the bill, and also (if an answer be required) a time within which such defendant is to plead, answer, or demur, or obtain from the Court further time to make his defence to the bill.

3. At the time when such subpœna shall be served, the plaintiff is also to cause such defendant to be served with a copy of the bill and a copy of the order giving the plaintiff leave to serve the subpœna.

4. And if upon the expiration of the time for appearing it appears to the satisfaction of the Court that such defendant was duly served with the subpœna and with a copy of the bill and a copy of the order, the Court may, upon the application of the plaintiff, order an appearance to be entered for such defendant.

XXXIV. Affidavits filed for the purpose of proving the service of a subpœna upon any defendant are to state when, where, and how such subpœna was served, and by whom such service was effected.

XXXV. The plaintiff, having duly caused an appearance to be entered for any defendant, is entitled, as against the same defendant, to the costs of and incident to entering such appearance, whatever may be the event of the suit; and such costs are to be added to any costs which the plaintiff may be entitled to receive from such defendant, or set off against any costs which he may be ordered to pay to such defendant; but payment thereof is not to be otherwise enforced without the leave of the Court.

XXXVI. A defendant, notwithstanding that an appearance may have been entered for him by the plaintiff, may afterwards enter an appearance for himself in the ordinary way; but such appearance by such defendant is not to affect any proceeding duly taken or any right acquired by the plaintiff under or after the appearance entered by him, or prejudice the plaintiff's right to be allowed the costs of the first appearance.

XXXVII. No party is to enter either a common or special appearance under the 26th or 27th of the Orders of the 26th of August, 1841, after the expiration of twelve days from the service of the copy of the bill, without first obtaining an order of the Court for that purpose, such order to be obtained on notice to the plaintiff, and to be granted, if the Court thinks fit, upon such terms as are just; and any party so entering such common or special appearance is bound by all the proceedings in the cause prior to such appearance being entered, unless the Court otherwise directs.

Scandal and impertinence.

XXXVIII. No order is to be made for referring any pleading or other matter depending before the Court for scandal or impertinence, unless exceptions are taken in writing, and signed by counsel, describing the particular passages which are alleged to be scandalous or impertinent.

XXXIX. Where any person or party, having filed exceptions to any pleading or other matter depending before the Court for scandal, and any party having filed such exceptions for impertinence, does not obtain an order to refer the same to the Master within six days after the filing thereof, such exceptions are to be considered as abandoned, and the person or party by whom such exceptions were filed is to pay to the opposite party such costs as may have been incurred by such party in respect of such exceptions.

XL. Where any person or party, having obtained an order to refer exceptions to the Master for scandal, and any party having obtained an order to refer such exceptions to the Master for impertinence, does not obtain the Master's report thereon within fourteen days after the date of the order, or within such further time as the Master thinks fit to allow, the exceptions and the order referring the same are to be considered as abandoned, and the person or party by whom such exceptions were filed is to pay to the opposite party such costs as may have been incurred by such party in respect of such exceptions, order, and reference.

XLI. Upon the expiration of four days from the filing of the Master's report that any pleading or other matter depending before the Court is scandalous or impertinent, the officer having the custody or charge of such pleading or other matter is, upon production to him of an office copy of the Master's report, and a certificate that no exception thereto was filed, or an affidavit that no order to set down any such exception was served within four days after the filing thereof, to expunge from such pleading or other matter such parts thereof as the Master has found to be scandalous or impertinent, and thereupon the person or party requiring such scandalous or impertinent matter to be expunged is to pay to the officer expunging the same the same fee as on the like occasion has heretofore been paid to the Master.

XLII. The Master having found any pleading or matter depending before the Court to be or not to be scandalous or impertinent, is to direct by whom the costs of, and consequent upon, the reference are to be paid.

Commission to take answer.

XLIII. All commissions to take answers are to be made returnable without delay; and a defendant in a country cause is not to be permitted to crave the common dedimus.

Entering demurrer and plea.

XLIV. A demurrer or plea need not be entered with the registrar; but upon the filing thereof by a defendant, either party is to be at liberty to set the same down for argument immediately.

Demurrer.

XLV. Where a demurrer to the whole or part of a bill is allowed upon argument, the plaintiff, unless the Court orders to the contrary, is to pay to the demurring party the costs of the demurrer, and if the demurrer be to the whole bill, the costs of the suit also.

XLVI. Where a demurrer to the whole bill is not set down for argument within twelve days after the filing thereof, and the plaintiff does not within such twelve days serve an order for leave to amend the bill, the demurrer is to be held sufficient to the same extent and for the same purposes, and the plaintiff is to pay to the demurring party the same costs, as in the case of a demurrer to the whole bill allowed upon argument.

XLVII. Where a demurrer to part of a bill is not set down for argument within three weeks after the filing thereof, and the plaintiff does not within such three weeks serve an order for leave to amend the bill, the demurrer is to be held sufficient to the same extent and for the same purposes, and the plaintiff is to pay to the demurring party the same costs, as in the case of a demurrer to part of a bill allowed upon argument.

Plea.

XLVIII. Where a plea to the whole or part of a bill is allowed upon argument, the plaintiff, unless he undertakes to reply to the plea, or the Court orders to the contrary, is to pay to the party by whom the plea is filed the costs of the plea, and if the plea be to the whole bill, the costs of the suit also; and in such last-mentioned case the order allowing the plea is to direct the dismissal of the bill.

XLIX. Where a plea to the whole or part of a bill is not set down for argument within three weeks after the filing thereof, and the plaintiff does not within such three weeks serve an order for leave to amend the bill, or does not within such three weeks by notice in writing undertake to reply to the plea, the plea is to be held good to the same extent, and for the same purposes, and the same costs are to be paid by the plaintiff, as in the case of a plea to the whole or part of a bill allowed upon argument; and where the plea is to the whole bill the defendant by whom such plea was filed may at any time after the expiration of such three weeks obtain as of course an order to dismiss the bill.

L. The plaintiff having undertaken to reply to a plea to the whole bill, is not without the special leave of the Court to take any proceeding against the defendant by whom the plea was filed till after replication.

Election to proceed at law or in equity.

LI. A defendant whose answer is excepted to or referred back on former exceptions, alleging that the plaintiff is prosecuting him in this court and also at law for the same matter, may by notice in writing require the plaintiff to procure the Master's report on the exceptions within four days after the service of such notice; and if the plaintiff does not procure the Master's report in four days accordingly, or if the exceptions be not allowed, such defendant may obtain as of course, on motion or petition, the usual order for the plaintiff to elect in which court he will proceed, with the usual directions; but the plaintiff may move to discharge such order on the merits confessed in the answer.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

(Before Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD.)

Re GEORGE ROSS.

The Heir-at-Law Society.

In this case the insolvent was described of Chatham-place, Blackfriars, and of Trafalgar-square, Charing-cross. He has been some time before the public as connected with public companies, and now came up in custody from the Queen's Prison for his interim order. His debts on the face of his schedule amounted to 7,000*l.* many of which were for law expenses, and the assets were one debt (stated to be good) of 100*l.*

Cooke supported the insolvent; Fry opposed the application.

The insolvent was examined, and said he was the manager of the "Heir-at-Law Society," the business of which concern was carried on in Chatham-place and Trafalgar-square. The three trustees were Sir John Ross, Mr. Barron, and Baron Seton. There were likewise directors; Mr. Watson, a private gentleman, who resided in London-street, Fitzroy-square, was one. Three clerks were employed, who were paid from the funds derived from the society, but to one of those part of his salary was still owing, the debt of which appeared in his (the insolvent's) schedule.

The insolvent was asked to disclose the names of the whole of the directors, which he refused to do. He admitted he gave receipts for money received by the society in his capacity of manager. The clerks also gave receipts when any money was paid to them. The insolvent refused to enter into the particulars of the object of the "Heir-at-Law Society." He denied the accusation of irregular conduct in the formation of companies, though he admitted he was so accused by the Railway Times, for which he brought an action. Some of the counts in that libel case were given for the defendant. He had been connected with other companies, the objects of which were not carried out. He admitted that he was insolvent about fourteen years ago, when he got a remand of twelve months, and that he was a bankrupt forty years ago.

Cooke said the insolvent was eighty years of age; he had been in prison already some months, and his object was again to come before the Court.

EMOLUMENTS AND PERQUISITES IN THE LAW COURTS.—Much light has been thrown upon the above subject, within the last few days, by the publication of a return, moved for by the Parliamentary law reformer, Mr. W. H. Watson, M.P. for Kinsale, of all officers in the Courts of Common Pleas and Chancery of the county palatine of Lancaster, with the names and the dates of their respective appointments, &c. The return extends to the county palatine of Durham as well as to the Courts of Chancery and common law in London. The following results are thus obtained:—The fees received by the prothonotary (or his deputy) of the Court of Common Pleas in the county palatine of Lancaster yielded a net amount, in 1841, of 2,351*l.*; in 1842, of 2,257*l.*; and in 1843, of 1,835*l.* The sum fixed by the commissioners appointed under Act 1 Wm. 4, c. 58, to be paid to the prothonotary as compensation, amounts to 2,704*l.* 13s. 4d. The deputy's name is Forrest; he receives a salary of 750*l.* The registrar of the Court of Chancery of the same county palatine, Mr. W. Shawe, received as fees in 1841, 983*l.*; in 1842, 628*l.*; and in 1843, 668*l.* He is appointed by the Crown, in right of the duchy and county palatine of Lancaster, by letters patent, under seal of the said duchy and county palatine; and the present registrar has executed the duties of the office in propriâ personâ, and not by deputy; he is wholly paid by fees, without any salary, and all the expenses are defrayed out of the fees received by him. No compensation has been granted to the registrar since his appointment in the year 1820. Turning to the accounts of the Court of Exchequer, it is found that the total amount of fees received in the "Office of Pleas" of the Court of Exchequer was, in 1841, 31,896*l.*; in 1842, 31,648*l.*; and in 1843, 28,277*l.*; making altogether a grand total of 91,823*l.* Of the amount of 31,896*l.* received in 1841, 14,177*l.* was applied to salaries, 896*l.* to expenses, and 16,882*l.* paid over to the Consolidated Fund. Of the 31,648*l.* received in 1842, 14,081*l.* was applied to salaries, 794*l.* to expenses, and 16,773*l.* paid over to the Consolidated Fund. Of the 28,277*l.* received in 1843, 14,988*l.* was devoted to salaries, 818*l.* to expenses, and 12,471*l.* paid over to the Consolidated Fund. The Compensation Annuities paid out of the funds above mentioned consist of an annuity of 1,454*l.* to Mr. E. Walker, one of 455*l.* to Mr. S. Richards, and one of 200*l.* to Mr. T. Dax, late Clerk of the Errors, on the abolition of that office by the Act 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 30. Mr. T. Dax receives, independently of this pension, a salary of 1,200*l.* a-year as one of the Masters of the Court of Exchequer, making his emoluments amount altogether to 1,400*l.* per annum. The other masters receive 1,200*l.* a-year. Amongst the "Masters' clerks" we find the name of Mr. Edward T. Dax, with a salary of 150*l.* a-year. No officer connected with this department of the Court of Exchequer is paid by fees. A fee of 7d. is paid to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on every writ, and on every nisi prius record issued out of this office; and the Lord Chief Baron's marshal and associate, the hereditary chief-usher, the four ushers, and the court-keeper, the keeper of the Queen's Prison, and the tipstaff, are paid in part or in the whole by fees. The books of the office do not enable the Masters (Messrs. Dax, Walker, Walton, Bennett, and Dare) to make any return of their names, or of the amount of fees received by them, except with regard to Hammer, the tipstaff, whose salary is fixed at 300*l.* The total receipts, in the shape of fees, of the taxing-masters of the High Court of Chancery, since their appointment, amounted, in the aggregate, to 37,422*l.*; of which Mr. Baines has received 7,880*l.*; Mr. R. B. Follett, 5,664*l.*; Mr. Gatty, 5,124*l.*; Mr. P. Martineau, 6,145*l.*; Mr. Mills, 6,965*l.*; and Mr. Wainewright, 5,613*l.* Of the 37,422*l.*, 3,564*l.* was received for warrants, 7,018*l.* for copies, 24,010*l.* as per centage, and fees on taxation, &c. and 2,807*l.* for certificates. The whole of the above fees have been, according to the Act of Parliament, monthly paid into the Bank of England, with the privity of the Accountant-General to the Suitors' Fee Fund account. The fees received by the Masters of the Court of Common Pleas, in 1843, amounted to 12,108*l.* and the expenses to 11,032*l.*; those received in the same year by the Masters on the plea side of the Court of Queen's Bench amounted to 28,857*l.* and the concurrent disbursements to 13,459*l.*

UNCERTIFICATED ATTORNEYS.—At the Glossop Court of Requests, before Joseph St. John Yates, Esq. Barrister-at-law, on the 24th May last, a complaint under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 59, for fraudulently removing goods to avoid an execution, some time ago obtained in that court, for a debt of 11*l.* 8s. 11½d., came on for hearing. Mr. Eccles, solicitor, Marple, appeared for the plaintiff, and a clerk of Mr. Chew's, solicitor, Manchester, for the defendant. On the case being called, Mr. Eccles, addressing the judge, said, he wished the fact to be ascertained before he opened the case, whether or not the gentleman who appeared for the defendant was an attorney, and took out his certificate. To this the reply given was, that he was an attorney, though not practising on his own account, but acting as managing clerk to the gentleman before-named, and that he did not take out a certificate, but intended to do so. Mr. Eccles said, he felt it due to the profession to which he belonged, to protest against the appearance, in that court as an advocate, of any person who was not an attorney, duly taking out his certificate, and practising on his own account. The judge said the objection was a very proper one; it was not only due to the profession, but also to the dignity of the Court, that none but solicitors, in every respect duly qualified, should be permitted to appear as advocates; that his predecessor in office, R. G. Duck, Esq., had laid that down as a rule of court, and that he (Mr. Yates) would act according to that rule. The defendant, being left without advocate, the case was, at the suggestion of Mr. Eccles, adjourned to the next court, the defendant paying the costs of the day.

On Friday last, Francis Newman Rogers, Esq., Deputy Judge Advocate, and Recorder of Exeter, to whom Sir James Graham had intrusted the inquiry into the case of Eliza Price (so often noticed in our columns), and into the mode of conducting magisterial business generally in the Kingswinford district, commenced his investigation at Wordsley, and continued it on the following day (Saturday)) at the Cross Inn, Kingswinford. The proceedings were strictly private, none but magistrates and parties interested in the proceedings being admitted into the room. W. Robins, Esq., R. Scott, Esq., W. Trow, Esq., and W. Foster, Esq., we understand, appeared as promoters of the complaints; while among the friends of Mr. Briscoe were H. Hill, Esq., the Rev. W. H. Cartwright, T. Badger, Esq., Philip Williams, Esq., Dr. Dehane, W. H. Cope, Esq., C. H. Molineux, Esq., Cornelius Cartwright, Esq., Capt. Bennitt (all magistrates), and several other gentlemen of consideration in the neighbourhood. Of course, owing to the injunction of the learned commissioner, we are precluded giving any report of the evidence taken, but we may state that every allegation of harshness or illegality on the part of Mr. Briscoe was completely disproved, and that the misrepresentations, alleging cruelty on the part of the constable, came to the same end; Eliza Price, the woman herself, denying that the constable Baker had been guilty of cruelty or harshness towards her. The charge, it is only truth to say, was an utter failure, and some subsidiary accusations were as effectually rebutted. In the course of the investigation strong testimony to the usefulness and activity of Mr. Briscoe as a magistrate was given by W. Grazebrook, Esq., and other gentlemen. Until some declaration on the part of Sir James Graham is made, and in order to give time for the amende honorable by Mr. Duncombe and other parties concerned (if such a thing can be expected), we feel ourselves at present restrained from further reference to the case, only adding that, notwithstanding an endeavour on the part of some of Mr. Briscoe's more immediate friends to prevent such a demonstration, the worthy magistrate was most heartily cheered on quitting the inn at the conclusion of the investigation.—Wolverhampton Chronicle.

WILL OF GENERAL ROBERTSON.—Probate of the will and two codicils, as far as respects the property in England, of James Robertson, formerly of Hillside, but late of Canaan Bank, near the city of Edinburgh, a general in her Majesty's army, has just been granted to his nephew, Mr. John Russell, one of the executors, a power being reserved to Lieut.-Col. David Robertson Macdonald, the brother, and Mr. William Robertson, a nephew of the deceased, to prove hereafter. The personal estate in England is sworn under 4,000*l.* He bequeaths annuities to his sisters, legacies to his nieces, the Countess of Minto, Lady Adam, and Lady Nicholson, and others, his relations; leaves 1,000*l.* to his nephew, Lieut. James [illegible] in Company; also a legacy to each of his children; leaves to his own servant a legacy of 400*l.* and all his apparel, and legacies to all his other servants; bequeaths his property at Canaan Bank (including plate, pictures, furniture, and moveables) to his nephew, John Russell, and leaves him a moiety of the residue; the other moiety to his brother, Colonel Macdonald, and his family. The will is dated December 1, 1835, and the second codicil Nov. 9, 1842. The deceased died on the 29th of March last. The will was approved in Edinburgh on the 5th of April last.

SIR W. FOLLETT.—(From a Correspondent of the Times.)—It is with very much regret that we are reluctantly constrained to believe, from accounts which have reached us, and on which we have every reason to place reliance, that the health of this learned gentleman is in a much more unfavourable state than the public have been led to believe from the different accounts which have been published from time to time. It is not very difficult to imagine how anxious the friends of the learned Attorney-General should naturally be that the public, by whom his great talents are so fully appreciated, and who are so fully sensible of his value as a distinguished member of the Profession of which he is so great an ornament, should be as long as possible kept in ignorance of his real condition. It is scarcely necessary for us to state how adverse it is to our intention or wish to create any unnecessary alarm in the public mind in a matter of so much interest and importance, but it is useless to conceal the fact that we feel certain we are far from exaggerating when we assert that the present state of Sir William's health is most unsatisfactory, and that he is, if possible, in a weaker and more debilitated state than when he left this country some time back for the continent, whatever may be stated to the contrary. Sir William was exceedingly unwell last week. Dr. Bright, the learned gentleman's brother-in-law, has been constant in his attendance upon him, and we are glad to state that he is at present somewhat better. It is understood that his illness has been brought on principally in consequence of intense study and a too close application to his professional duties.

BUSINESS IN THE LAW COURTS.—The excess of business in the Court of Queen's Bench still remains undiminished, there being at present standing for hearing for the sittings after Term, which commenced on the 13th inst. no less than 138 causes, 103 of which are remanets from the previous sitting, and the remainder new causes; out of these 68 are special jury cases. The Court adjourns to London on the 29th, so that it is next to impossible that the list can be got through, and those actions which are not decided this sitting will remain until November before they can be heard. In the other courts the lists are by no means heavy, that of the Common Pleas numbering only 23, and that of the Exchequer of Pleas 30; but considerable additions will be made before the sittings terminate.

IRISH.

The following gentlemen have been called to the Bar in the present Term:—Henry O'Malley, William F. Holland, John Levey, Robt. Haliday, George William Grogan, John Pitt Kennedy, William Patrick Carr, John O'Hagan, George Augustus Frederick Robinson, Edward Blackburne, William Hackett, and John Frazer, esqrs.

SUMMER ASSIZES.—The following are the circuits selected by the judges for the summer assizes:—North-West Circuit.—The Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Torrens. Leinster Circuit.—The Chief Justice of the Common Pleas and Mr. Baron Pennefather. Munster Circuit.—The Chief Baron and Mr. Justice Burton. The Home Circuit.—Mr. Justice Crampton and Mr. Justice Ball. The North-East Circuit.—Mr. Justice Perrin and Mr. Baron Richards. Connaught Circuit.—Mr. Baron Lefroy and Mr. Justice Jackson.

THE MAGISTRACY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Purefoy Poe, esq. to the commission of the peace for the counties of Tipperary and Kilkenny, on the recommendation of the Earls of Donoughmore and Besborough, the Lords Lieutenants of the respective counties.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SMALL DEBTS BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In the borough of Great Yarmouth, we shall, I fear, experience but little benefit from the proposed amendment, although much injured by the existing law. We have no District Bankruptcy Court, to which, under Lord Brougham's new plan, to appeal; but have the delightful experience of the practice in the metropolitan court, at a distance from us of 120 miles. We have, it is true, a court of requests for debts under 40s. but presided over by a commissioners only, without a chairman either from the Bar or the list of certificated attorneys. To what available tribunal, then, I would ask, are we to summon our fraudulent debtors? Can it be expected that to this borough, or to the city of Norwich (which I believe to be in a like predicament as to its court of requests), or to any of the counties in this eastern district, the so much talked-of remedy will eradicate the cancerous evil his lordship in the last session inflicted upon the trading population and labouring classes; first, by sweeping off thousands of pounds, in credit, then standing in account against the latter; and, secondly, from the distrust the traders have subsequently displayed towards their customers?

I submit that, unless the power to summon fraudulent debtors is more extensively conferred on courts of request, as now constituted, and their jurisdiction extended for that and all other purposes, to all debts under 20*l.* the proposed remedy will be little short of a name, without a shadow of reality.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

JOHN CLOWES.

Great Yarmouth, 9th June, 1845.

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Your unceasing endeavour to reform the law of debtor and creditor induces me to trouble you with a few remarks on the subject, at a period when the public mind is so much excited towards miscalled amendments and re-amendments of a law, the impolitic formation of which has induced so many baneful results to the commercial world.

I have observed, in many instances, that a man has failed more by reason of the law as it now exists than from any other cause. Suppose the case of an honest man; when he finds he cannot meet his payments in due course, he becomes alarmed, and, there being no inducement for him to continue honest, he makes away with his property by false sales to sustain his tainted credit; magnifies his situation, from his horror of being guilty of the crime of bankruptcy; pressed by his creditors, he still hopes to extricate himself, and obtains further credit through the medium of accommodation bills, loan societies, &c. at whatever cost: honesty takes flight; he gets from bad to worse, and finally "stops." He petitions the Court of Bankruptcy, and being opposed by his more recent creditors, on the ground that their debts were contracted in fraud (see 59th sec. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96), he is adjourned sine die, and morally ruined, with the alternative of a workhouse or a swindling existence, and he leaves the court regretting that he should have been so great a fool (that is, so honest a man) as not to have got deeper into debt, and made a purse for himself while he had the opportunity.

This is the bane, and the cure, I humbly submit, is in the hands of the Legislature. Make the Court of Bankruptcy a tribunal for reward and punishment, so as to induce the right-thinking trader to stop at the right time. As at present, his first false step places him on a level with the systematic swindler, I would, with deference, suggest that a committee of scrutiny (essentially private) be appointed, to consist of practically informed men, and presided over by commissioners in bankruptcy; let this be the appeal for the unfortunate trader when he first feels himself "going." Let the creditors be summoned; they will in most cases assist him, as it is their interest so to do; this would prevent undue preference, fraudulent bills of sale, and ruinous litigation; a healthy arrangement would be effected; confidence restored; his self-esteem preserved, as the ban of bankruptcy would be removed; his energies would be redoubled from past experience, and the sinking trader give place to the prosperous and respected man of business. This can only be effected by adopting a scale of vigorous punishment for the artistic swindler and criminal bankrupt, who should be subject to the same (to him preliminary) scrutiny, and be judged upon the merits of his conduct, and not merely, as now, on the uncertain test of his balance-sheet.

The space of a letter will not admit of detailing the many advantages that I believe would result from a plan of which this is of course but an outline, and one suggested by the fact that so much excitement is now prevailing, and time employed in the endeavour to improve and make healthy the branches, while the root itself is so corrupt.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

JAMES M. CONSTABLE,

Secretary to the "London Commercial Association for the opposition of Fraudulent Bankrupts and Insolvents."

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"X." thus comments on the Small Debts Bill:—

I, for one, have to thank you for giving us a copy of this, as it now stands, singular Bill. Should the same become law, it is hoped it will sweep away the petty prescriptive jurisdictions, many of which are indeed "great grievances to the subject;" but the Law Societies ought to scrutinize the measure.

For instance, in the county of Salop, a noble lord has two honour or hundred courts, Clun and Purslows; and he claims exclusive jurisdiction for the recovery of small debts over an extensive district, comprising about a dozen parishes. The proceedings in these courts are so dilatory and expensive, and the officers are of so low a grade, being farmers and tradesmen, that but few persons attempt to recover debts therein—in fact, it is a denial of justice. The sheriff of Shropshire has been so threatened with actions, that he now appends a caution at the bottom of his summonses against executing the same within either of the excellent jurisdictions alluded to.

A correspondent complains of the practice of a certain class of Solicitors getting themselves made the executors of weak-minded clients, to the great dissatisfaction of surviving relatives, and which heaps another stigma on the Profession; and he suggests the propriety of the different Law Societies reprobating the discreditable practice.

"W. W. W." complains of the recent decisions on "Notices to quit."

Allow a practising attorney to complain of the tendency of modern decisions to make a complicated affair of a very simple thing—a notice to quit.

There are two cases in your current volume, one at page 96, and the other at page 196, where as much ado seems to have been made about the proper wording of a notice to quit, as if it had been a surrebutter specially demurred to. In the former case Alderson, B. says, "The landlord here seems not to have been quite certain himself of the time at which the tenancy would expire, and has tried to throw the burden of discovering that upon his tenant." What if he did?

The cases interfering with the simple operation of a notice to quit are too numerous and decisive not to be binding; but I submit they are egregiously wrong in principle. A notice to quit is a notice to quit, however it be worded—and the proper question ought to be, not what particular terms are used, but, is it a notice to quit? I consider this an instance of the tendency of judges, special pleaders, and chamber-bred counsel to fetter, mystify, and distort the business of the law to the inconvenience and perplexity of the "General Practitioner," and the cost of the client.

To Readers and Correspondents.

A portion of the Report of the Exchequer for Thursday and Friday, the 5th and 6th instant, has been omitted in consequence of an accident. It will appear next week.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1845.

TO READERS.

REPEATED requests are made that the LAW TIMES would publish an annual digest of all the Reports and Statutes—a sort of Index Legum of the year.

That such a work would be an extremely useful addition to the volumes of the LAW TIMES there can be no doubt; but the difficulty lies in the manner of accomplishing it. Certain it is that it could not be contained within the ordinary columns of the weekly journal, for it would occupy at least four or five entire numbers. Nor could it be given in the form of supplements, for already the subscribers, who by prepayment receive the supplements gratuitously, are enjoying a very much larger boon than was anticipated when that arrangement was made.

But one mode of meeting the requirements of our subscribers presents itself. It is to make of this a distinct publication, distinctly paged, so that it need be taken only by those who desire it, without burdening those who may not want it; the size and shape, however, to be that of the LAW TIMES, so that it may be bound with the volumes as a part of the legal record of the year.

On a close calculation we find that, if sold in numbers at a shilling, stamped, so that they may be transmitted by the post, 1,000 orders will be necessary to meet the expenses. The precise length cannot be ascertained, of course, as it must depend upon the legislation and decisions of the year, but probably it will not exceed six or seven numbers. This, however, is considerably less than the cost of any one o the digests of the reports alone, whereas th Year-Book (such it is proposed to call it) the LAW TIMES will contain a digested Inde to the Statutes as well as to the Reports; i short, it will be an Index to all the actual law made and decided during the year, and it wi be formed upon an improved plan, some tim since submitted to us.

As it will not be undertaken unless th necessary number of orders be received, w shall thank those of our subscribers who ma desire to possess it to forward their names a soon as possible, for, as the labour and tim required will be very great, it must be commenced in the vacation, that it may be read for publication early in January.

THE BENCHERS AND THE BAR.

THE recent decision of the Benchers of th Middle Temple will, we trust, operate as a salutary warning against indulgence in thos unprofessional practices which had of lat been spreading, and which threatened to degrade the Bar of England from the lofty place in public estimation it has up to this period maintained through all the change and troubles of government and of society. The timely interference of the Benchers for the vindication of the societies over which they preside, has, we hope and believe, checked that downward tendency; and no doubt they will adopt stringent measures to prevent, as far as possible, the recurrence of the scenes which have lately compelled them to inquiry. As we have repeatedly urged, the remedy is in their own hands. It will not be enough for the Benchers to punish when unprofessional practices are proved, they must render them less probable by a little more strictness in the admission of members, whether as students, or to the Bar. Previous to a call, the strictest inquiry as to character ought to be made; and we question whether there should not be something like an assurance that the candidate has reasonable means of subsistence until, in the ordinary course of things, he can expect business. The fact cannot be disguised, that poverty is the real cause of almost all the unprofessional practices complained of. "I must live" is the self-defence of the wrong-doer, forgetful that there was no necessity for his entering a profession by which no man can reasonably hope to live for some six or seven years, unless he possessed the means of respectable subsistence in the interval. He knew the conditions when he joined, that business was to be obtained only according to certain prescribed rules, required for the advantage of the whole Profession; and if he violate those rules, he cannot complain if he be rejected by the Profession. In the recent case the Benchers have not proceeded to the extreme measure of disbarring, but have been content severely to censure and mark their sense of the misconduct by exclusion for two years from the Hall. Thus do they give fair warning that wrong has been done, and if that wrong be repeated, the extreme penalty must be expected. It will operate as a hint to others who might be inclined to follow the example, that they cannot do the like with impunity.

The inquiry was, we believe, undertaken at the instance of the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association, whose incessant exertions to purify the Profession deserve all the encouragement that can be given by thanks and by support.

LORD BROUGHAM'S SMALL DEBTS BILL.

HAVING expressed our cordial approval of the principle of this Bill, which we take to be the punishment of fraud in debtors, as well by the improvident contraction of the debt as by dishonest attempts to evade payment, we purpose now, as promised last week, to consider in detail the various objections that arise upon the face of the Bill as framed, and the amendments and additions that might advantageously be introduced into it.

In this review we have the aid of a number of experienced correspondents in both branches of the Profession who have favoured us with their communications on the very important subject, and we regret only that we are compelled to use their suggestions in this shape, instead of publishing their letters in extenso; a course which, however, our contracted limits have absolutely forbidden.

The first class of objections are to the jurisdiction. The powers of the Act are to be exercised by commissioners of bankruptcy or judge of any local court, being a barrister or attorney. It is alleged, and with truth, that in many districts there are no near commissioners nor courts, and many of the existing local courts are presided over by persons who are neither barristers nor attorneys.

But it appears to us that this is no objection to the measure itself, which can do no more than the existing judicial arrangements of the country will permit. It is no reason for depriving nine-tenths of the country of a remedy for a great evil, because the other tenth is so situated that it cannot so readily avail itself of the law. The hardship, if such it be, is not limited to this; it prevails equally in the application of other protective laws. If a man be robbed of sixpence, he is compelled to travel, perhaps, seventy miles, and spend a week at an assize town, to punish the offender; and it is being somewhat over-nice to oppose a law that enables him to punish a man who robs him of 20*l.* in the shape of a debt, because he must ride a few miles for the purpose, the more especially as it is at his own option whether he will punish the wrong or not; and if, having the power, he declines to use it, he has no right to blame the law or its framers.

Whether there be any other authority in whom its powers may be safely vested is another question; but none such have been suggested by the objectors, and therefore we presume they have no better plan to offer.

Besides, it is to be remembered that all difficulties arising from cost and trouble will be easily overcome by means of the societies for the protection of creditors against fraudulent debtors which, in conformity with the hint we threw out last week, are already in progress of formation in many parts of the kingdom, and, doubtless, ere long, will be established everywhere.

Objections more serious arise from the entire absence of all provision for the working of the measure. There is not a word about costs, yet there should be a power to the Court to award costs to a creditor who succeeds in establishing his case against the fraudulent debtor.

But there are deficiencies still more serious. The powers of the Bill are not extended to the Insolvent Court. No machinery is provided for carrying out details. The creditor is permitted to summon the debtor; but how is the Court to enforce obedience? It is not empowered to issue a warrant for his apprehension; and even if it should be deemed that power to apprehend is incidental to the power to summon, the Court of Bankruptcy has no officer to serve the process, nor is any given by the Bill. This requires amendment.

There is another difficulty for which no provision is made. As the Bill stands, it will have the effect of establishing two jurisdictions for the same subject-matter, between which continual conflicts must arise. If, for instance, a debtor be in the hands of the Insolvent Court or of a Commissioner of Bankrupts, these Courts will inquire into and adjudicate upon all his debts, as well those under as above 20*l.* If, at the same time, the creditor chooses to summon him under the Small Debts Bill, before another commissioner or the judge of a local court, he may harass him with two inquiries—two processes—beside producing a collision between the two jurisdictions. It will be evident that something must be introduced to prevent this inevitable result—what, it is not our province to determine, but without it the difficulties in the way of the practical operation of the measure will be enormous.

Another serious objection is the short term of imprisonment. Forty days will not deter the rogue; a larger discretion should be given, to meet cases of great atrocity, and the discretion should range from a week to six months.

Mr. Green, of Leeds, who has had considerable experience in this branch of the law, suggests that the limit of the order for attachment of wages to cases in which they amount to 50*l.* a year, will make this useful portion of the bill practically inoperative in the country, for few there receive that sum. Moreover, the onus of proof is thrown upon the creditor. Now certainly this ought not to be, for it is manifestly the debtor's place to prove that he cannot pay. The matter ought to be left to the discretion of the Court, which, on hearing all the circumstances, will be best enabled to judge of the ability of the debtor to apply any and what portion of his wages to the payment of his debts. Mr. Green further objects that the clause which gives the power to make an order for the payment out of wages gives no power to enforce that order. But our correspondent has omitted to note, that disobedience to an order is ground for imprisonment, and that is sufficient for the purpose.

Mr. Green is further of opinion that imprisonment is not desirable, and would rarely be enforced. He thinks that ample powers to attach wages and every species of property will be far more effective. So think we; but if a rogue have neither property nor income, he can only be punished by imprisonment. Both powers are essential to a good law of debtor and creditor.

Mr. Ross, of Barnard's-Inn, complains of the powers given by the Bill, and of its severity. But he does not attempt to shew how otherwise the evil is to be remedied. He adds, that creditors will not incur the cost of enforcing it. As we have said before, that will be a matter for their own consideration; if the law give them a remedy, they cannot complain if themselves permit the continuance of the wrong. He further points out two important omissions in the offences enumerated, viz. the keeping back, destruction, or mutilation of books, and the vexatious defence to an action.

Another provision strikes us as very objectionable. It is that which permits the creditor to be examined as to his debt. When it is remembered that it is only after judgment recovered that the creditor can put the law in force, an inquiry into the debt is permitting, in fact, a new trial, and disturbing a settled matter, contrary to all rule of law and policy. There can be no doubt that this provision ought to be expunged from the Bill.

Again, we must protest against the clause that permits not only the proceedings under this, but under the existing law of insolvency, to be conducted by others than attorneys or counsel. The effect of such laxity will be to gather about these courts the entire crew of Sham Lawyers, who will lower their respectability and influence without benefiting the suitors, who will be made, in one shape or another, to pay these harpies as much as they would pay respectable solicitors. We have the more suspicion of this clause, because it appears to be an attempt, by a side-wind, to get rid of the decision of Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque upon the existing statute, as requiring the presence of an attorney. Let parties appear in person, if they please, but if they do not choose so to do, they should be required to appear by a recognised practitioner, responsible to the Court for his conduct. The real interest of the client, and the due conduct of the business of the courts, demand this protection; and as, if permitted to pass, the clause will be of serious injury to the attorneys, by the race of pettifoggers it will encourage, we hope the Law Societies will take efficient measures to secure its being expunged in the House of Commons.

These are the most important objections that suggest themselves at this moment. Should others occur to any of our readers, they shall be considered next week.

The immediate question now is, how shall these defects be brought before the House? Unluckily, the Profession has not there a mouthpiece to utter its complaints, or an eye to watch its grievances. It is to be hoped that the next general election will supply this, the greatest need of the Profession. They have influence and power enough to secure at least one representative for themselves, if they would but exercise it.

A Lecture on Mortmain and Charitable Uses, delivered to the Articled Clerks of Members of the Manchester Law Association on the 2nd of January, 1845. By Mr. Joseph Grave, Solicitor. Manchester, 1845.

Lecture on the Law of Evidence, delivered to the Members of the Manchester Law Association and their Articled Clerks. By R. B. B. Cobbett, Attorney-at-Law. Manchester: Powlson and Sons.

The provinces are taking the lead of the metropolis in the matter of legal education, and setting an example which it behoves the Profession here to follow, or a country education will be not only the best for a foundation, but the best for "a finish."

And let the Inns of Court look to it. When the attorneys are taking such efficient measures for self-improvement, they who are endowed so amply with the means of giving to their pupils the largest course of legal instruction, and who may assure the members that due advantage is taken of the boon by the simple plan of an examination into a man's acquirements before they honour him with the title of "my learned friend," it is, we say, high time that they should devote a portion of their revenues to a provision for at least as large instruction for candidates for the Bar as is provided by the law association of a country town for the education of its articled clerks.

Here are two lectures gratuitously delivered at Manchester by solicitors resident there, and which for learning, for research, for the happy mingling of abstruse law with familiar illustration; for purity and even elegance of diction; for largeness and liberality of thought, may compare with the best legal compositions of our day. Mr. Grave's lecture on Mortmain is both an historical and a critical essay, tracing the law from its origin to the present time. Mr. Cobbett's lecture on the Law of Evidence is a very model of a popular summary of a wide subject. His arrangement of his theme is masterly, and, we believe, entirely original; but it is perfectly in accordance with common sense, and therefore peculiarly adapted to infix itself in the memory.

Both of these lectures deserve a wider circulation than the place of their delivery. They may be read with profit and pleasure by all students of the law. Of their cost we know nothing, but we presume it to be trifling. At all events, our publisher shall procure a few copies for the use of those who may desire to share the benefits enjoyed by the clerks of the members of the Manchester Law Association, to which be all honour for the great and successful exertions it has made, and is making, to exalt the Profession, and for having introduced such ornaments to it as Mr. Grave and Mr. Cobbett.

We regret that other claims forbid us to prove by extract the justice of these comments.

CONDITIONS OF SALE.

CONDITIONS CONCURRENT—RESTRICTIVE.

(FROM THE LAW REVIEW.)

3. Another rule applying to such conditions is, that a purchaser is at liberty to raise objections founded on information derived aliunde, and that he not confined to objections suggested by or necessarily deducible from the abstract. That document may be unexceptionable on the face of it, or within the purview of the conditions of sale; but an existing flaw in the title, however discovered, must be removed before the vendor can enforce his contract.

This was decided by the Court of Exchequer in the case of Shepherd v. Keatley (1 Cro. M. & R. 117), where one of the conditions of sale of leasehold estate was as follows:—"The vendors shall deliver an abstract of the lease and of the subsequent title under which the leasehold lots are sold, but shall not be obliged to produce the lessor's title."

The abstract was duly delivered, and an assignment was subsequently tendered to the purchaser for his execution: but he refused to accept it, on the ground of certain defects discovered aliunde by the purchaser in the lessor's title. The vendor thereupon brought an action for breach of contract: and by consent of the parties the facts were turned into a special case to be argued before the Court of Exchequer. In the course of the argument, Lord Lyndhurst, C. B. said, "The question is, not whether the plaintiffs were bound to produce the lessor's title, but whether the defendant [illegible] from taking objections to it:" and in delivering ju[illegible] "The whole case depends [illegible] words, 'shall not be obliged to produce the lessor's title:' and it seems to me that those words mean nothing more than there shall be no obligation upon the vendor to produce, for the satisfaction of the purchaser, any evidence of lessor's title..... The construction put by the Court upon the words used in Spratt v. Jeffery was, that they operated as a waiver of the objection. But there is nothing to shew that the parties in the present case had any intention of the kind. I do not say what my own opinion would have been upon the words in Spratt v. Jeffery. It is sufficient to distinguish them from the words here used." Mr. Baron Alderson likewise said: "Spratt v. Jeffery was a case not merely [illegible] producing the lessor's title, but a waiver of that title altogether. Possibly upon the words there used, I might not have come to the same conclusion as the Court of King's Bench did; but it is unnecessary to give any opinion upon that point, as those words differ from the expressions employed here. The not being 'obliged' to produce the lessor's title merely confers upon the vendor the power of enforcing the contract, without producing or giving evidence of that title; but that expression cannot prevent the purchaser from taking objections discovered by himself."

4. Where restrictive conditions of sale are prefaced or accompanied by a statement of facts or circumstances constituting the grounds or inducement for imposing a restriction upon the purchaser's right of inquiry, the purchaser, unless expressly precluded by the condition itself, has a right to call for evidence in support of the inducement thus put forward.

This was decided in Symons v. James (1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 487) by the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce. The sale took place under a decree, and the property was sold in lots. With respect to Lot 24, the 15th condition of sale was as follows:—"That as Lot 24 consists of a variety of allotments, which were awarded in the year 1784 to Robert Macreath, esquire, or his tenants, in respect of the manor, or some part or parts of the manor of East Brent, or of the lands held therewith, of which he was then the owner, which manor, together with such allotments and all lands held therewith, was subsequently purchased by the said George Symons; the title of vendors to the said manor shall be conclusive evidence of their title to the said Lot 24, and the vendors shall not be required to identify such lot with any part of the lands held with the manor, and conveyed to the said George Symons with the manor."

The twenty-fourth lot was sold, and an abstract of title was delivered to the purchaser, with the following title prefixed:—"An abstract of the title of the devisees of George Symons, esq., to four closes of freehold land, situate in Mark Moor, in the parish of Mark, in the county of Somerset, consisting of allotments No. 587 to 609, both inclusive, on the Mark Moor Inclosure award plan, and being Lot 24 in the particulars of sale." The abstract set out various documents, from which it appeared that a Mr. Dawes purchased the manor and lands from Mr. Macreath, made a conveyance to Symons, by which only eighteen allotments were conveyed in express terms to Symons. The master having reported in favour of the title, the purchaser took an exception, objecting that a good title had not been shewn to twenty-three allotments, according to the terms of the fifteenth condition of sale. The vendors contended that the latter clause of the condition saved them from the obligation of identifying the allotments, and relied on the probability that in consequence of change of boundaries, the eighteen lots specified in the conveyances were the only allotments remaining as they were originally allotted, but that the whole twenty-three lots were actually included in the deeds. But the Vice-Chancellor said he was not convinced that the vendors had discharged themselves from that obligation which was incumbent upon a vendor in circumstances of this description, and his honour proceeded thus:—"The fifteenth condition of sale, as a reason for imposing certain terms upon a purchaser, makes two assertions of fact. Whether the purchaser is or not to be bound by the condition must depend upon the accuracy of those two assertions in point of fact. The first assertion is, that 'lot 24 consists of a variety of allotments, which were awarded in the year 1784 to Robert Macreath, esq., or his tenants, in respect of the manor,' and so on. The second assertion is, "that the manor, together with such allotments, and all lands held therewith, was subsequently purchased by George Symonds.' Now, it appears to me, that it is incumbent upon the vendor to give evidence of those two matters of fact, and that to hold, that by reason of the condition following those assertions, the vendor is relieved from proving them, would not be fair or reasonable as between vendor and purchaser....... .. I apprehend that any ordinary reader of this fifteenth condition of sale would read it as importing that whatever Macreath had went to Symons.......... That, however, is not so, for it appears that much of what Macreath had did not go to Symons. I apprehend that, according to every rule which ought to guide a court in deciding a question of this description between vendor and purchaser, I must hold, that the purchaser is entitled to more evidence than he has hitherto received.......... I shall not either allow or overrule the exception, nor shall I part with the deposit, but I shall refer it back to the master to review his report; and, in reviewing his report, let the master inquire whether the lands contained in Lot 24 were comprehended in the conveyance of Dawes to Symons. And let the master have regard to any evidence which may be laid before him as to the enjoyment of Lot 24 since the year 1792."

(II.) Conditions remedial are usually, 1, Rescissory; and 2, Compensatory.

1. Conditions Rescissory.—Special conditions of sale generally contain a clause requiring all objections to the abstract to be stated within a limited time, and authorizing the vendor, in case of his inability to remove them, to rescind the contract.

According to Sir Edward Sugden (1 V. & P. 43), the late Mr. Bradley recommended that where it is understood at the time of sale that the vendor has only a doubtful title, a provisional clause to the following effect should be inserted in conditions of sale and articles of purchase, which would be sufficient, he thought, to obviate any doubt that might otherwise arise at the sale:—"That if the counsel for the purchaser shall, on the examination of the title, be of opinion that a good title and conveyance cannot be made of the purchased premises, within the time limited by the articles for carrying the same into execution; in that case the same articles shall be discharged, and not further proceeded in on either side."

Conditions founded on this principle are now in constant use; but owing to the various forms in which clauses of this kind have been worded, and to the conduct of the parties to the contracts, much litigation has ensued.

Upon conditions of this class it has been decided;

1. That where a vendor, having an option by the conditions of sale to rescind the contract in case of objections being made to the title, receives objections from the purchaser, and undertakes to remove them, the power of rescission is waived; and if the vendor, after thus entertaining the objections, should find himself unable to remove them, he will not be allowed to fall back upon the conditions of sale and rescind the contract, but will be placed in the same situation as if the contract had been originally unaccompanied by any such condition.

Thus in Tanner v. Smith (10 Sim. 410), which was a suit by vendors for specific performance, it appeared that by one of the conditions of sale the abstract was to be delivered to the purchaser or his solicitor within twenty days after the sale; and by another condition (the 7th) it was provided, that if the purchaser should raise objections to the title, which the vendors should not be able or willing to remove, and the purchaser should insist upon such objections, the vendor should be at liberty by writing under his hand to rescind the contract, on repaying to the purchaser his or her deposit money, without interest or costs; and that all objections which should not be taken, in writing, within ten days after the delivery of the abstract, should be considered as waived. The abstract was delivered within the twenty days; and within the next ten days the defendant sent to the vendors several written objections to the title. Upon this, the vendors intimated that the objections should be removed, and that a further abstract should be forthwith supplied, for the consideration of which ten more days would be allowed. Before the further abstract was delivered, the time for completing the sale had expired; and the defendant and purchaser had brought an action to recover his deposit. On a motion to restrain the action, the construction of the 7th condition came into question before the Vice-Chancellor of England; and his honour, after observing that it appeared to him to be a new condition, gave the following decision:—"My opinion is, that when objections to the title have been delivered within the ten days, then the vendors shall have the power of determining which of two courses they will adopt; that is, whether they will endeavour to remove or answer the objections, or whether they will put an end to the contract altogether. If they are either unwilling or unable to remove the objections, then they must pay back the deposit money, without either interest or costs. . . . If the vendor once elect to answer the objections, they are for ever thereafter precluded from exercising the option given to them by that condition to rescind the contract." His honour is further reported to have said, in the same case, "It seems to me a condition which is capable of being exercised at one time only. When objections are delivered, if the vendor says that he is able and willing to remove them, he is excluded at any time afterwards, whether upon the same objections or future objections, from availing himself of that condition to rescind the contract, on the ground that he is not able or willing."

In Morley v. Cook (2 Hare, 109, 110, n.), in which the purchaser filed a bill for specific performance, the 6th condition of sale contained the following clause: "In case any of the purchasers shall raise objections not herein provided for, and which the vendor shall not be able or willing to remove, the vendors shall be at liberty to rescind the contract, by writing under their hands, on repaying to such purchaser or purchasers his or her deposit, without interest, costs, or further compensation; and all objections not made in writing, and delivered to the vendor's solicitor within fourteen days after the delivery of the abstract, shall be treated as waived; and in this respect time shall be deemed the essence of the contract."

The sale took place on the 14th of January, 1841; and on the 25th, the vendor delivered an abstract, which was returned with queries and requisitions. The abstract was re-delivered with answers to the questions on or before the 17th of February, on which day the purchaser objected to the answers as insufficient. A correspondence and treaty then ensued between the parties in reference to the title until the 25th of March, when the vendor's solicitor gave notice that if the purchaser was unwilling to complete the purchase upon the title then shewn, the vendor would avail himself of the 6th condition of sale to rescind the contract, and he thereby rescinded the contract accordingly.

The Vice-Chancellor Wigram held the case to be concluded by the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England in Tanner v. Smith (10 Sim. 410); and gave his opinion that a treaty between the vendor and purchaser for the completion of the title by the former, after the purchaser's objections have been taken to the abstract, ought to be deemed a waiver of the condition; and that in equity, as well as at law, the condition once waived is gone for ever.

Upon the same point, Sir John Leach said, in Minchin v. Nance (cited 4 Beav. 277), "You cannot put an end to a contract under such a condition but at the first moment; and after permitting the other party to proceed, you cannot turn round and say, now I will put an end to the contract."

In Cutts v. Thodey (6 Jurist, 1027), the Vice-Chancellor of England followed his own former decision in Tanner v. Smith, and held that a vendor who enters into discussions with a purchaser respecting the objections to the title, waives his rescissory right, and all benefit of the purchaser's waiver or constructive waiver of such objections.

It is to be presumed, therefore, that when a vendor, by treating for the completion of his title after objections taken, has waived his right to rescind under the condition, all parties are, in the absence of special circumstances, remitted to the ordinary rules of a court of equity, in reference to questions of title, unfettered by the particular conditions of sale. (2 Hare, 113.)

But where a purchaser contends that if the vendor make any addition to the abstract first delivered, a new period of time corresponding with that mentioned in the condition begins to run in the purchaser's favour from the time of delivering such addition, then it is also presumed that the vendor's right of rescission will likewise recommence de novo: as the vendor's power to rescind the contract under the condition must be coextensive with the purchaser's right to object to the title under the same condition. (See per Wigram, V. C. 2 Hare, 113). The vendor, however, has it in his power, by a proper mode of framing the conditions of sale, to reserve to himself the right of rescinding the contract after entering into correspondence or explanations regarding the purchaser's objections; and considering the course of the decisions respecting the vendor's rescissory power, it appears to us that such an addition to the terms of the conditions of sale would be extremely prudent, as removing at least one ground of controversy and litigation.

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Wednesday, April 30.
Re DYNELY, a Lunatic.
Practice in lunacy—Leave given to the committee to oppose a railway bill.

Heathfield supported a petition by the committee of the estate for leave to oppose a railway bill before a parliamentary committee, upon the ground that the works would cut off certain springs belonging to the estate. The income the lunatic derived from this property was 636*l*.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The lunatic's estate is likely to be seriously injured if some means be not taken to prevent it. You may take the order in the form you ask for it.

Thursday, May 22.
Re STOCK, a Bankrupt.
Jurisdiction in bankruptcy—Taxation of costs—Commissioners—The Court of Review.

Kinglake applied to the Lord Chancellor, under the jurisdiction of the great seal in bankruptcy. There had been an error in the docket in the description of the bankrupt's residence, and on an application to the Court of Review a new docket had been directed, and also that the Commissioner (Evans) should tax the costs of the application, which were to be paid out of the bankrupt's estate. Mr. Commissioner Evans declined to take any steps in the matter, upon the ground that the matter had gone from his court to a higher tribunal. There being such a conflict of opinion, the parties made the present application.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Did the Court of Review suggest that such an application should be made?

Kinglake.—No.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I cannot make an order without first communicating with the Chief Judge.

May 22 and 23.
WHITE v. DOBBINSON.
Insurance—Contract of indemnity—Double payment—Award—Injunction—Lien.

An insurance on shipping is merely a contract to indemnify the insured against loss, and therefore when compensation for loss or damage has been received from other parties, the underwriters are discharged from all claim by the insured; and where the underwriters have paid the loss, and the assured party afterwards obtains compensation from other persons, the underwriters will have a claim to be repaid what they have paid under the policy, which claim they can enforce in equity. Persons under such circumstances will be restrained by injunction from receiving double compensations without providing for the underwriters' lien.

This was an appeal by the defendant Hicks against an order of the Vice-Chancellor of England, which restrained Hicks from receiving, and Messrs. and Co. from paying, a sum of 800*l*. which had been awarded in respect of damages done to the ship Diana, without first paying or providing for the sum of 205*l*. in respect of which the plaintiff claimed to have a lien on the sum so awarded.

The facts were these:—The defendant Hicks being the owner of the ship Diana, had effected an insurance upon her with the Port Marine Insurance Company for 600*l*. Dobbinson and Co. were owners of a ship called the Xenophon. In October, 1842, a collision occurred in the north seas between the Diana and the Xenophon, in which the former suffered so much injury that she was obliged to put into a Prussian port to refit, at the cost of 950*l*. for repairs, besides other expenses and losses occasioned by the delay. The Diana was also insured with the Forth Insurance Company, and soon after the accident Hicks settled with the Port Marine Insurance Company, as for an average loss, and received from that company the sum of 205*l*. in full for all claims under their policy. Hicks afterwards brought an action against Dobbinson and Co. (the owners of the Xenophon) for the injury done to the Diana, and the consequential losses, which before trial was referred to arbitrators, who awarded that Messrs. Dobbinson should pay 800*l*. to Hicks. The plaintiff, who is the officer of the Port Marine Insurance Company, then claimed to have a lien upon the sum so awarded, to the extent of the sum the company had paid to Hicks, upon the ground that the insurance was only a contract of indemnity against loss, and that when the owner of the Diana had received full compensation for damage from the owners of the Xenophon, he became trustee for the company to the extent of the sum they had paid in respect of such damage. On the plaintiff's motion the Vice-Chancellor of England granted an injunction as above stated. The defendant Hicks now moved by way of appeal to discharge that order. Hicks had assigned to the Newcastle Bank as a security for 900*l*. whatever should be recovered from the owners of the Xenophon.

Walker and Anderson, for the defendant Hicks.—They contended that the sum awarded was for damages and losses not covered by the sums received from the underwriters, which sums the arbitrators must have taken into their consideration. They cited Randal v. Corkran (1 Ves. sen. 98); Blaauwpot v. Da Costa (1 Eden, 130); Brook v. M'Doual) 1 Young & Collyer, Exchequer, 300); Cullen v. Butler (5 Maule & Selwyn, 461).

LORD CHANCELLOR.—I granted on this motion that Hicks has had a complete indemnity for the loss sustained by the collision awarded to him by the arbitrators; if they have not, he should have taken means to set aside the award. As it appears on this motion, Hicks submitted the whole case to the arbitrators, and they have given him a full indemnity. He is fixed by the award. In the present state of the case, I must consider that he has submitted to judges of his own choosing, and they have given him full compensation.

Walker.—Tulloch v. Edwards (12 East, 488) shews that a person may be entitled to double compensation. The settlement with the insurers was a final one, and the arbitrators must have considered the payment made by the company in estimating the sum awarded.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I consider that the arbitrators did not take into their consideration the payment by the company, and that they gave Hicks a full indemnity. What is an insurance but a contract of indemnity? Then Hicks having received a full satisfaction under the award, what right has he to retain money received from the insurance office as an indemnity for damage? I am rather inclined to rely on the award of the arbitrators, because they had all the facts and evidence before them, or they decided upon statements agreed to by the parties. If Hicks had received an indemnity before the payment of the money by the company, it would clearly have been contrary to equity that he should retain that money. Parke on Marine Assurances says, that a contract to insure is one of indemnity only, and that the insured shall not receive double compensations for a loss; but in case the loss has been paid, and the insured afterwards recovers the amount of damages from another source, the insurers shall stand in his place to the extent of the sum they have paid. That corresponds with the opinion by Lord Abinger in the case in the Exchequer.

Walker.—In Henson v. Blackwell (9 Jurist, 390), very recently decided by Vice-Chancellor Wigram, the principle of double payment was affirmed. There it was held that a creditor might receive the amount of an insurance effected on his debtor's life without accounting for the sum so received in reduction of the debt.

Anderson.—The bill states that the award is a compensation for the damages done to the ship only, which amounted to 1,047*l*. and that the consequential loss was 1,200*l*. There is a distinction between total loss and full satisfaction on the part of the insurers, and partial loss and average payment for compensation. The last case is in the nature of a compromise. Even if the plaintiff's claim is right, his only course is an action for money had and received.

Romilly and Wood, for the plaintiff, contended that all the cases shew than an insurance is only a contract for indemnity, and that where an insured party has received a sum for his loss from another quarter, the underwriters will be discharged; and it was indifferent in what order the money was received, for in all cases the party receiving twice for his loss is bound to account to the insurers. The award in this case was for both the damages to the ship and the consequential injury, otherwise it was wrong, and might have been set aside. Hicks should have provided by the terms of the reference for keeping distinct the sums awarded in respect of these two subjects, had he deemed it important; and not having done so, he cannot take advantage of any difficulty or confusion created by his own act.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I think that, for the purposes of this motion, I must assume that the arbitrators have given him full satisfaction.

Romilly.—Even if the plaintiff could have maintained an action, which is doubtful, that would not take away the concurrent jurisdiction of equity, for Hicks is a constructive trustee for the plaintiff to the extent of the sum paid by the company.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—A great many inquiries will be necessary in the cause before a decree can be made. There must be an inquiry as to the amount the arbitrators have awarded under the two heads, of damage, and consequential injury.

Romilly.—Yates v. White (5 Scott, 650); S. C. 4 Bingham New Cases; Ex parte Andrews (2 Rose, 410); S. C. 1 Mad. 573. If defendant relied on the objection of want of equity, he should have demurred to the bill.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—After Lord Abinger had sat for some time in equity, he expressed an opinion that the assured receiving double satisfaction would be a trustee for the insurers.

Romilly.—We are willing that the amount should be paid into court.

Wood cited Godsol v. Boldero (9 East, 71); Humphrey v. Arabin (1 Ll. & G. 318); 2 Parke on Marine Insurance, 905.

Chandless, for Dobbinson and Co.

Walker, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—On this motion I will not allow the claim of the Newcastle Bank to affect my decision. That security was taken subject to all the equities which would have affected the money recovered in the hands of Hicks himself. The decision on the main question in the present motion, must be founded on the assumption that the arbitrators have given complete compensation for damages done to the vessel. The underwriters undertake to indemnify the insured against losses if not otherwise paid; but when those losses have been paid, the insured has no claim against the insurers. Here the company have paid for a loss, for which the insured afterwards obtains full satisfaction, and it is contrary to equity that he should retain the money. The underwriters have a claim upon the fund awarded, and are entitled in some shape or other to recover back the money they have paid. The question as to the mode of proceeding to recover the money was raised in a very inconvenient form upon an interlocutory motion. But it had been decided that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain such a suit as the present; and after the cases cited, in which we have the clearly expressed opinions of Lord Hardwicke and Lord Northington, recognized by Mr. Baron Parke, and more recently by Lord Abinger, who at that time possessed considerable experience of the practice in equity, from having presided for several years on the equity side of the Court of Exchequer, I think I ought not, on a motion of this kind, to refuse to entertain the jurisdiction. As to the form of the injunction, the parties may consent to have the sum claimed laid out in Exchequer-bills. I must affirm the decision of the Vice-Chancellor with costs. The costs of Dobbinson and Co. must be paid out of the sum awarded, and the bill dismissed as against them.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

GARDNER v. MARSHALL.
April 29, May 3, and May 6.
Practice—Exceptions to Master's report—Bankruptcy of husband—Unsettled property of wife, to what extent, and under what circumstances, protected from the claims of assignees.

G. upon various occasions subsequently to his marriage, received several sums of money from his wife's father, amounting to about 6,000l. which were appropriated by G. to his own purposes. The wife's uncle by his will gave her a life interest in the residue of his property, with remainder to her children, subject to a certain annuity. The trustees of this fund advanced the whole of it to the husband and secured it by a mortgage of his brewery and plant, subject, however, to a prior mortgage of 12,000l. whereby the security became inadequate. The property so advanced by the trustees was found to amount to about 5,340l. and upon a sale of the brewery and plant, the produce of such sale was found to be insufficient by 900l. to meet this demand. Under her father's will the wife was entitled to the residue of his estate, subject to an annuity of 250l. and this interest she had been induced to assign to the trustees for their protection in their advances of the trust fund to her husband. The husband became a bankrupt, and the interest of the wife out of her father's estate after the death of the annuitant was represented to be but trifling. No settlement had ever been made upon the wife, either out of her own property or that of her husband, and the husband being wholly incompetent to maintain his wife, who with a large family had been living upon her own exertions, aided by the liberality of her friends, a bill was filed on behalf of the wife by her next friend, against the assignees of the husband, praying a settlement out of the property in question, and for an injunction. Upon a reference to the Master, to find what proportion the wife was entitled to out of the bankrupt's estate, he reported that the whole of the fund of 5,340l. ought to be settled upon the wife. To this report the defendants excepted. Held, that the Master was right in his conclusion, and that, under the circumstances of the case (to whatever extent the authorities upon the subject had gone), the wife was entitled to have the whole fund settled upon her.

From the Master's report it appeared that the plaintiff's husband, J. Gardner the elder, had had the sum of 6,000l. advanced to him by one of his wife's relatives, no part of which was settled upon her, but was appropriated entirely for his own purposes. Under the will and codicil of William Haydon, Mrs. Gardner was entitled to a life interest out of certain personal property, with remainder to her children absolutely. After the death of William Haydon, the trustees of his will advanced the whole of this property in which Mrs. Gardner had a life estate to her husband upon a mortgage of the brewery, with the fixtures and plant, which, however, was subject to a prior mortgage of 12,000l. About the month of March 1833, the then infant children of Mrs. Gardner, by their next friend, filed their bill against J. Gardner, the elder, and the trustees of the will of W. Haydon, on the ground of the insufficiency of this security, and praying that the trustees might secure to them the deficiency; and it was by a decree in the suit declared that the sum of 5,339l. 15s. 2d. was the clear residue of such personal estate; that new trustees should be appointed, and that the premises should be duly assured and conveyed to them, which order was carried into effect.

After the sale of the brewery, and satisfying former incumbrances, it was found that the residue was inadequate to satisfy the debt of 5,339l. 15s. 2d. there remaining only 3,621l. for that purpose, in addition to the sum of 894l. 10s. 6d, the valuation of the plant, &c.

By a deed dated 9th August, 1834, Mrs. Gardner charged all her interest under the will of Richard Haydon, named in the pleadings, for the purpose of making good any deficiency in the shares of her children under William Haydon's will.

By another indenture, G. C. Haines and Henry Marshall, having lent to J. Gardner, the elder, the sum of 800l. he thereby covenanted for the repayment of it, and it was declared that G. C. Haines and Henry Marshall should stand interested in (among other securities) the said Sarah Gardner's shares and rights under the will of Richard Haydon.

Under this will she was entitled to a life interest, which had not, by reason of the several advances and charges for her husband's benefit and to pay his debts, ever been of any service to her.

In 1840 a fiat in bankruptcy was issued against J. Gardner, the elder, since which period Mrs. Gardner had been without the means of supporting herself and family except by her own exertions and the bounty of her friends, she receiving little or no assistance from her husband during that period, they having lived separate for several years.

The Master certified that, having regard to the large amount of property which J. Gardner, the elder, had received from the estates of his wife's relations, and to her entirely unprovided condition, also her former circumstances in life, the interests, dividends, and proceeds of the residue of the personal estate of William Haydon, amounting to 5,339l. 15s. 2d. when raised, should be settled upon the wife for her separate use, free from the control of her husband, and with out power of anticipation.

This report was excepted to, and the question now raised was, whether, upon equitable principles, the Court would protect the wife's claim to such an extent as to direct a settlement of the whole of the wreck of her fortune upon her against the claims of her husband's creditors.

Anderton and Freeling, in support of the exceptions, urged that as the wife and her children would have been benefited by the husband's success in business, the creditors' claims ought to be regarded as well as that of the wife; at any rate, the whole amount ought not to be appropriated as suggested by the Master, and cited the cases of Wright v. Morley (11 Ves. 7; Beresford v. Hobson (1 Madd. 362); Ex parte Thompson (2 Mon. & Ayr.); Coster v. Coster (9 Sim. 597); Barden v. Deal (2 Ves. jun.)

Bethell and Rolt, for the Master's report, submitted that the assignees could only claim all that the husband was entitled to out of his wife's property, which amounted to nothing, so long as he was himself a debtor to her estate.

Cases cited: Oswell v. Probert (2 Ves. jun. 679); Watkyns v. Watkyns (2 Atk. 96).

JUDGMENT.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In the case of Coster v. Coster (9 Sim. 597), the Court felt itself called upon to give the husband only one-fourth of his wife's property. I there conceived that the wife ought to have three-fourths out of the property bequeathed to her, and that the Court in every such case should exercise its own discretion; but no case has arisen in which it has been expressly laid down as a fixed rule, what shall be the proportionable amount of the wife's property reserved to her. It must be guided by circumstances; and in so doing, it will take into consideration what is the amount of the wife's fortune; what portion the husband has already received, and what are the means left for the wife's maintenance. If the husband has already appropriated to himself the greater portion of her property, then the question arises, as precisely in the present case, what shall be done with the residue? After the marriage, it appears that the father advanced, at different times, to the husband various sums, amounting to about 6,000l. and by him appropriated to his own purposes, so that, although there was no actual settlement made at the time of the marriage, which took place in 1815, yet it, in effect, amounted to one. Then, as to the amount of property which she derived from her uncle's will, that was considered to be about 5,339l. for which no adequate security had been given. With respect to the husband's continuing to live with his wife, I think that desertion, on his part, would have been far better, for any assistance which he might render her by way of maintenance; for as he was not in a situation to aid her in procuring the necessary means of subsistence, she was, out of her own exertions and the bounty of her friends, compelled to maintain him. I am of opinion that the Master was quite right in coming to the conclusion he did, namely to have the whole of the miserable remnant of the wife's fortune settled upon her; and if there be no precedent for such a case, I will make one. Exception overruled.

CROSS v. CROSS.

Infant—Next friend—Inquiry as to which of two suits is most for infants' benefit—Costs.

One suit is instituted by a person interested to carry out an arrangement respecting partnership property, of which infants were entitled to a share, and another suit is proposed to be instituted by a next friend of the infants, objecting to the arrangement, and on a reference to the Master, he found that the proposed arrangement was for the infants' benefit, the next friend in the second suit was nevertheless held entitled to his costs, though no fault on examination could be found with the conductor of the first suit.

Mr. Cross was in partnership with Mr. Sewell as general warehousemen, and was entitled, as was supposed, to a large sum of money in respect thereof. On his death, his wife, Mrs. Cross took out administration to his estate, and on the 24th of June, 1842, entered into an arrangement with Mr. Sewell, whereby he was to pay her 15,000l. in full of all demands of her late husband on the partnership. This arrangement, however, could not be carried out effectually without a suit, as there were infants interested. Accordingly Mr. Sewell instituted a suit, but a Mr. Chapman objecting to the arrangements, and imputations of fraud, &c. being thrown out, a fresh suit was proposed to be set on foot by Mr. C. as next friend of the infants; and thereupon a petition was presented for a reference to the Master. The petition stated all the details, and prayed a reference to the Master to inquire whether the arrangement of June 1842 was a fit and proper arrangement, and whether steps should be taken to open up the settlement with Mr. Sewell. All parties attended in the Master's office with their respective accountants, &c. and the Master being satisfied that the arrangement was proper, notwithstanding the imputations, none of which were proved, so reported, and the present petition prayed a confirmation of that report, and a reference to tax the costs, and for payment thereof.

Kindersley (with him Glasse), for the petition.

Turner (with him Baily), contrà, objected to the payment of the costs of the reference out of the estate, amounting to nearly 200l. There was no ground for it on the Master's report. All the charges were shewn to be unfounded, on a careful examination of all matters by the parties, attended by their accountants.

Roupell, for defendants, George and William Cross.

Kindersley, in reply, said it was a contest between two suits, and it was not so unreasonable a proceeding on the part of Mr. Chapman to act as he did, that he should have to pay the costs out of his own pocket, inasmuch as Mr. Sewell had filed his bill to carry out the arrangement, and he was an interested party.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—On the one hand, there is danger of encouraging litigation by strangers on behalf of infants; and on the other hand, of deterring persons from undertaking the office of next friend; so that there is danger of an unsatisfactory conclusion. Cross and Sewell were partners, and an arrangement was entered into to pay a fixed sum to the representative of Cross. But infants were interested, and therefore this arrangement by the representative of Cross was not valid. It was conceived that there was something wrong in the arrangement, and that there were errors in the accounts, &c. The arrangement being made, two suits were the consequence; one maintaining the arrangement to be correct, the other impugning it. There being two separate next friends, an inquiry was directed as to which of the suits was best for the infants, and the Master reported in favour of Mr. Sewell's. There must have been something to induce him to say so. The matter then comes here, and the petition is found to contain imputations unfounded in the result; but the reference was only as to whether the arrangen[illegible] and proper, &c. and not as to whether there was fraud or not. The Master, however, reported on the allegations in the petition, and stated that no fraud was proved, though that was no part of the subject of reference. It turns out, however, that the investigation was fit and proper; and therefore, in this, as in other cases, as there appeared ground for inquiry, though it is expensive, I shall allow the costs out of the estate.

Taxation of costs—Special application—Order of course—Signing.

Hardy, on behalf of a mortgagor, made a special application on petition for the taxation of a bill of costs of the mortgagee. He said, the application being by a third party, his client had been informed by the secretary that such was the rule in such a case, by an order at the Rolls. A further ground for the application also was, that till the case of Re Pender (5 Law T. 170), the bill not being signed was thought not to be taxable.

Turner, contrà.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I shall inquire as to the rule you allude to, Mr. Hardy; but if it turns out that a common order only is necessary, you must pay the costs of this petition.

May 8. The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The case was this: there was a sum of money deposited to abide the result, and the bill was to be submitted to taxation, or to be the subject of an arrangement. The person who applied at the secretary's office could not explain the nature of the arrangement, and the secretary thought it ought not to be the common order of course, because of the alternative. It turns out, however, that no arrangement could be come to by the town agents to whom it was referred, and therefore it is the same as if there had been no such alternative proposed. So that it ought to have been the common order.

FOX v. WHITMORE.

Practice—Contempt for want of an answer—Commitment—Taking a bill pro confesso—Discharge.

Although a prisoner in contempt for want of an answer is entitled to his discharge after the time allowed by the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 36, s. 15, r. 13, has expired, without his being brought up by habeas corpus, to have the bill taken pro confesso against him, still if justice cannot be done without detaining him, the Court will do so.

In this case the defendant was imprisoned in the gaol of Derby on the 16th of January last, and on the 31st of the same month was brought to the bar of the court by habeas corpus, and committed to the Queen's Bench Prison. Reckoning from the 16th of January, the time within which he could be brought up on a habeas corpus, to have the bill taken pro confesso against him, under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 36, s. 15, r. 13, expired on the 27th of April, and as the plaintiff had not so brought him up, the defendant was entitled to be discharged. Accordingly, Teed moved that he be discharged, without costs, in the usual way.

Turner, contrà.—The defendant says he is a pauper, and therefore his case comes within the 6th and 7th rules of the 15th section of the Act, by which he is to be discharged, having done such acts as the Court directs. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—You have not obtained an order to take the bill pro confesso.] No; we want an answer from the defendant as to whether there was any settlement of certain estates by him on his marriage. These estates are in mortgage, and the suit being a foreclosure suit, if we were to obtain a decree, it would be inoperative, there being a settlement, and we having notice of it. This consideration takes the case out of the 13th rule. But even if that were not so, the time did not begin to run till he was lodged in the Queen's Bench Prison, by order of the Court, that is, on the 31st of January; so that the time for his being discharged from custody will not be till the 12th of May. Besides, during the pendency of the reference to the Master, and the Master's inquiry as to the fact of his poverty and inability to put in his answer, the time does not run. (Barnewell v. Cooke, 7 Simons, 320; Bates v. Frost, 9 Jur. 91.)

Teed, in reply.—If, after the defendant has been two months in any custody, the plaintiff neglects for six weeks to take the bill pro confesso, the defendant is absolutely entitled to his discharge. (Collins v. Collyer, 1 Cr. & Ph. 262.) Any time after the 16th of March the plaintiff might have moved to take the bill pro confesso.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Few of these cases are cases of compassion; generally they are cases of obstinacy, and unwillingness to obey the orders of the Court. If in this case any arrangement could be made to discharge the prisoner, it would be satisfactory to all persons. No doubt the 6th and 7th rules, &c. relating to a pauper, give an opportunity to the defendant of being discharged as soon as he performs his duty; they proceed on the supposition of there being willingness but inability on his part. The other rule is a spur on the plaintiff, and entitles the defendant to his discharge unless the plaintiff uses diligence. But that does not deprive the plaintiff of his right over the defendant, for he may be again attached and imprisoned, and the whole process may be gone through again. It is not necessary to say whether the two months are to be affected by the time of the reference to the Master to see if the defendant is unable to put in his answer from poverty. It is reasonable that it should, however. I assume that the plaintiff, if he had so desired, and did not want to have an answer, might have proceeded to take the bill pro confesso. If he had thought proper, he might have obtained the habeas in proper time; but not having done so, the plaintiff is entitled to his discharge, unless the Court see good cause to the contrary. This power is to be exercised by the Court on the motion of the plaintiff, at the time, it may be, of the motion being made to discharge the defendant; and accordingly here is the plaintiff making such application. There is enough to shew that justice cannot be done without detaining the defendant.

WESTON v. ROBINSON.

Action at law—Injunction—Breach of covenant.

The defendant demised certain land, of which he was owner, to the plaintiff, with covenants to build, &c. and the next day the plaintiff mortgaged to the defendant. The covenants were not performed by the plaintiff, and an action at law was brought against him by the defendant, to restrain which he filed a bill, and obtained a common injunction. Afterwards, an order nisi to dissolve being obtained by the defendant, cause was now shewn against it by

Bilton, for the plaintiff.—The action at law was commenced by the defendant, who is both mortgagee and lessor, on the 27th of June last, but is not now being proceeded with, the rent and costs having been tendered.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—What, then, is the dispute, if the defendant is not proceeding with the action?

Willcock, for the defendant.—The bill is filed and the injunction obtained restraining us from bringing any action whatever at law, not an action merely on the covenants, for breach thereof. Now we are both mortgagee and lessor, and though we do not seek to proceed in the action for the breach of covenant, yet we are desirous of pursuing our remedies as mortgagee, and we are restrained from doing so by the form of the injunction, which is unlimited. All we want is liberty to act on our rights as mortgagees

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Continue the restraint as to forfeiture in respect of the breach of covenant, leaving the defendant at liberty to proceed as mortgagee.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Re ALCOCK.

Solicitor and client—Taxation of costs.

Where a bill of costs had been paid under pressure, the Court considered it a sufficient special circumstance to refer the bill for taxation under the 41st section of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act.

This was a petition to tax a solicitor's bill of costs under the following circumstances. Certain freehold and copyhold property had been mortgaged, and was subsequently, upon a further sum being advanced upon it, conveyed and surrendered to the new mortgagee, upon trusts for sale and payment out of the produce of all the moneys then due to others and to himself, and for the payment of the balance to the mortgagor, and upon further trust to reconvey to the mortgagor such portions of the property as should not be required to be sold. The mortgagor died intestate, leaving Mrs. Wilkinson, one of the petitioners, his heiress-at-law, and she also became his personal representative. During the lifetime of the mortgagor, his solicitors sent to him their bill of costs in respect of the last-mentioned mortgage security, amounting to 39*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.* and after his decease the bill was again sent in. Mr. Wilkinson and his wife executed a power of attorney to Mr. Haworth, another of the petitioners, to sell the real and personal estate of the mortgagor, and to apply the same in a due course of administration. Notice was served, in the name of Mr. and Mrs. Wilkinson, upon the last mortgagee, of their intention to pay off the mortgage moneys at the end of six months. Mr. Wilkinson and his wife then conveyed all their interest in the real estate to Haworth, upon trusts for sale and payment of the incumbrances, &c. Haworth sold the estate in parts to nine purchasers, freed from the incumbrances; but the last mortgagee, who had the legal estate, being a necessary party to the conveyance, the drafts of the conveyance were sent to his solicitors, accompanied by a request that their bill of costs might be sent in within a reasonable time before the day on which the six months' notice expired. Two days before that day, viz., on the 11th of January, 1845, the bill was sent in amounting to 152*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, the first item of which was, "bill allowed, 39*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.*," being the bill before mentioned. The parties having met on the 15th of January, to complete the purchases, the mortgagee's solicitors refused to permit the redemption of the estates until payment of the principal and interest and their bill of costs. The petitioners' solicitor accordingly paid the full amount, but at the same time protested against the first and several other items in the bill. This petition was presented on the 22nd of March, 1845, stating the above facts, and complaining of several items in the bill, and praying that the bill might be taxed, and that the solicitors might refund what might be found to have been overpaid.

Russell and Metcalfe, for the petitioners.

Simpkinson and Heathfield, for the respondents, relied upon the cases of Re Thomson (Law Journal, 29 Jan. 1845) and Ex parte Andrews (8 Jurist, 327).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that, if he thought that the Lord Chancellor in Ex parte Andrews had intended to lay down any general rule that in such a case as this it was necessary to enter into a consideration of the items of the bill, he should probably enter into such consideration. But he did not think that his lordship had done so, and he would therefore say that without making a single observation or offering any opinion upon the items, the bills must be referred. He should direct the taxation upon the ground of pressure, not for a moment suggesting or intimating any opinion that that pressure was improper, but still there was pressure. Protest in itself was not material, but coupled as in this case with other facts, it was a circumstance to be considered. The reference must go to the master without any intimation of his honour's opinion upon any of the items or the principle of the bills, and without any expression of opinion whether or not the bills would be much or at all reduced.

EDWARDS v. BROWN.

Reversionary interest—Sale—Trustee.

Circumstances under which the Court set aside a sale of a reversionary interest, for an inadequate price, to the tenant for life of the whole of the property, and trustee of a portion of it.

The plaintiff in this case having a reversionary interest in landed property at Torquay, and in personal property, sold it, in Nov. 1835, for 1,700*l.* to the tenant for life, who was also, as the executrix of the testator, trustee of a portion of the property. This bill was filed to set aside the sale, and prayed also that the conveyance might be declared to be a security only for the repayment of the consideration money with interest. The evidence in the cause shewed that the full value had not been given.

Wigram and Prior, for the plaintiff.

Russell and Bird, for the defendant.

The following cases were cited: Gowland v. De Faria (17 Ves. 20); Hinksman v. Smith (3 Russ. 433); Aldborough v. Fryer (3 Cl. & Fin. 436); Bantree v. Watson (3 Myl. & Keen, 333); and Shelly v. Nash (3 Madd. 232).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In estimating the value of a reversionary interest of this description, the apparent amount of the property is plainly not all that is to be considered. The nature, position, and variety of the particulars of the property are, beyond all doubt, to be taken into consideration, in estimating the value of the interest sold. It is probably true that the landed interest in and about Torquay, has been progressively increasing in value since 1835. It is probably true also, that the purchasers from the defendant, from circumstances in which they were placed, gave, from personal reasons, very high price for their purchases. It may further be assumed as true, or as highly probable, that, circumstanced as this property was, the plaintiff would have found it an extremely difficult and expensive matter, by reason of making out his title, and furnishing abstracts, to effect a sale of his interest at a fair price to a stranger. After, however, giving all the weight due to each consideration, I have found it impossible, in my judgment, to reduce the fair value, the proper market value of the interest sold in 1835, to so low a sum as 1,900*l.* The price given was 1,700*l.*; and I think that on a sale of a reversionary interest by private contract, the difference between 1,700*l.* the money given, and 1,900 (so low as which I am unable, on the materials before me, to estimate the market value in 1835), even that sum of 200*l.* difference is material. Whether, however, of necessity, and in all cases, such a proportion of difference would be decisive, I do not say. The plaintiff, a young man, at the time of the sale under twenty-three years of age, not probably embarrassed in his circumstances, but certainly straitened, very desirous of having the command of money, having no property but this, very probably under no pressure for money, nor in debt, except that in November, 1834, four or five months after he attained majority, he borrowed 250*l.* on security of this property, and the whole was, as far as can be collected, expended before November, 1835, and no explanation was given why it was so. These circumstances are not to be disregarded; and it is to be added to them that of a considerable portion of the property, the reversionary interest in which was sold, the purchaser herself was the trustee, as being the executrix of the testator, under whose will the property was derived, and that she was the tenant for life of the whole of that property. Taking all these circumstances together, I am of opinion that this dealing for a reversionary interest by private contract, as the plaintiff questions it, cannot be allowed to stand, and as no time has elapsed to bar him, nor has his conduct been such as to preclude him, he is entitled to relief. The decree will, therefore, be, that the plaintiff, undertaking not to question the sales made by the defendant, declare that the deeds of sale to the defendant, dated in 1835, ought to stand as securities only for the payment of the sum of 1,700*l.* and such interest and sums of money as ought to be paid to her by the plaintiff, subject to such deductions as he may be found to be entitled to make thereout.

WARREN v. POSTLETHWAITE.

Signing—Publication of a will, what amounts to.

An acknowledgment or declaration by a testator in the presence of witnesses that an instrument is testamentary, amounts to a publication of that instrument as his will.

By a settlement, dated in February, 1832, and made upon the marriage of Mrs. Postlethwaite, certain property belonging to her was assigned to trustees, and she had a power reserved to her to dispose of it by any deed or deeds, instrument or instruments, in writing, to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of, and to be attested by, two or more credible witnesses, or by her last will and testament in writing, or by any codicil thereto duly signed and published in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, and in default of appointment, the property was to be held in trust for her next of kin. Mrs. Postlethwaite made a will, at the foot of which she signed her name and affixed her seal; then followed the signatures of three of her domestic servants; and underneath was the following memorandum in the testatrix's hand-writing:—"Signed and sealed at Hamburgh House, this 23rd day of July, 1834, in the presence of the above witnesses, all servants in the house." Two days afterwards the testatrix died. The question was, whether the will had been "duly published," so as to render it a valid execution of the power. Evidence of a conflicting nature had been gone into, as to the words made use of by the testatrix at the time of the execution of the will.

Swanston and D. James, for the plaintiff.

Freeling, Torriano, Bazalgette, Maule, Fisher, and Willcock, for the several defendants.

The following cases were cited: M'Queen v. Farquhar (11 Ves. 467); Bainbridge v. Smith (8 Sim. 86); Wright v. Wakeford (17 Ves. 458); Doe v. Burdett (4 Ad. & Ell. 1); George v. Riley (2 Curt. 1); Allen v. Bradshaw (1 Curt. 110); and Pennant v. Kingscote (7 Jurist, 754).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—How this case would have stood if the language of the power had required an attestation, it is not necessary for me to give an opinion. The language of the power requires only that the will shall be duly signed and published by the lady in the presence of two witnesses. It does not require sealing. An instrument is produced in the form of a will which is admitted to have been signed by her, and the names of three witnesses are also upon it. That she signed this with a testamentary intention appears clear, and could not reasonably be disputed, and has not been so. The first question is, did she sign it in the pre[sence] of two witnesses? There is at the foot of the instrument a memorandum [w]hich is admitted to b[e] in her hand-writing, "signed and sealed at Hamburgh House, this 23rd day of July, 1834, in the presence of the above witnesses, all servants in the house." The lady died two days afterwards. It is, as I have said, signed by her; and there is also the impression of a seal placed close to her signature. Now, whether the signatures of the witnesses are or are not to be connected with this attestation, it is immaterial, I think, to decide; I do not decide it. However that may be, this memorandum in her handwriting shews that her mind was addressed to the materiality or the prudence of signature being in the presence of the witnesses. If, according to the argument of some of those who oppose this instrument, this memorandum is to be considered as connected with the signatures of the witnesses, as far as the witnesses are concerned, then, the probability is increased that the signature was in their presence, because then they at least would have acknowledged that the signature was in their presence. I do not decide that point; for I am clearly of opinion, both upon principle and upon the highest authority, that where an attestation is not required, the mere circumstance that there is an attestation, specifying certain things, does not exclude evidence that other things were done besides those which are attested. For these reasons I do not decide that the signatures of the witnesses are or are not to be connected with the memorandum of attestation below those signatures. It being then probable, from the circumstances of the case, of which there is no question, and especially from the circumstance that this memorandum was written by the testatrix herself, that she did sign it in the presence of the three witnesses, or two of them, is that assumption inconsistent with the testimony of the witnesses taken together? I think that it is not. Taking the depositions of the three witnesses together, the probability that she actually signed, and not merely acknowledged her signature, in the presence of three or two of them is rather increased than diminished. I give, therefore, no opinion whether, in the case of a power such as this is, an acknowledgment of a signature is or is not equivalent to a signature. The just conclusion, in point of fact, from this document and from what the witnesses state, is, that it was signed by this lady in the presence of two witnesses. The next question is, whether it was published by her in the presence of two witnesses. It may be difficult to give an exact or full definition of the term "publication" used in the testamentary sense, but the authorities, I think, warrant me thus far, that whatever else, if any thing else, may be a publication of a will, it is a publication if a testator in the presence of witnesses acknowledges or declares an instrument to be testamentary. The question then is, whether it is the just inference from the document and the evidence that the testatrix acknowledged and declared this instrument to be testamentary in the presence of two witnesses. It is not to be expected that witnesses in this situation of life, or indeed in any condition of life, if not belonging to the profession of the law, should, at a distance of ten years, be able to say whether the expression used was "deed" or "will," or what was the exact and precise course of facts that took place, or the strict tenour of the words used. It is not to be expected. It would be dangerous, however, in a case of this description, to examine too closely and with too much minuteness the statements made upon the recollection of such circumstances as these at a great distance of time, where there is no imputation and no suspicion of fraud. It is clear, from what the witnesses say, that the testatrix summoned them for the purpose of effecting and completing a formal act of business. She seems, so far as one can collect from this instrument and from the circumstances, to have been a woman of good understanding and a woman of business. She was alive to the necessity of there being witnesses, or at least to its prudence; and it is quite clear that she did in some manner call the attention of the witnesses to the circumstance that it was a formal instrument, a matter of business affecting property, that they were attesting. Is it, then, a fair and reasonable inference from the circumstances that she misdescribed the instrument, or that she mentioned it to them as otherwise than it was? The probability is, that she mentioned it to them as it was. I am of opinion, that as, from the testimony of witnesses, it is not necessary to suppose she misdescribed the instrument (and in some manner she did describe it), so that testimony, in my opinion renders it reasonable to conclude that she did accurately describe it. I am of opinion, from the evidence, that the just conclusion is, that she signed this instrument as her will in the presence of two witnesses, and that, by declaring it in the presence of two witnesses to be her will, she published it, and therefore it must be established. What I have said is not to have the least reference to any case where attestation is required.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

Saturday, May 24.

BUCKLE v. FAWCETT.

Will—Survivorship—Distribution.

Ralph Rider, by his will, dated in 1806, devised all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust, after payment of certain charges, to the use of his nephew, Matthew Handley, during his life, and after his decease to the use of all and every the children of his said nephew, as therein mentioned; and in case his nephew died without leaving any children or the issue of children surviving him, then, upon trust, that his said trustees should convey, pay, and assure the said real and personal estate unto and equally between all and every the children of his cousins Mark Rider and Ralph Rider, and the survivor of them, share and share alike; but in case any such children should be then dead, leaving issue of his, her, or their body or bodies, lawfully begotten, that then and in such case such issue should have and receive and be entitled to such original portion or portions, share or shares, of the said trust property as the father or mother of such issue would have been entitled to if then living, as also such other portion or portions thereof as the father or mother of such issue so dying might have been entitled to by survivorship or otherwise under his will, equally, to be divided amongst them, if more than one, share and share alike; and if only one, the whole to such one, to be paid at their or his respective ages of 21 years; and named his said trustees also executors of his will.

Ralph Rider, the testator, died in 1806, without revoking his said will, and the same was duly proved by his said trustees and executors, who acted in execution of the trust thereof.

Matthew Handley married shortly after the death of the testator, and died in 1813, without having had any children.

Mark Rider had eight children, of whom three died intestate in the lifetime of the testator; two survived the testator, but died in the lifetime of Matthew Handley intestate; two died in the lifetime of the testator and before the date of his will, leaving issue; and the remaining one is now living, and a defendant in the suit.

Ralph Rider had three children, one of whom died in the lifetime of the testator and before the date of his will, leaving children, who claim a share in the trust property; the remaining two survived the testator, but died in the lifetime of Matthew Handley, leaving children, some of whom have since died, leaving children who claim a share in the trust property.

In consequence of the complicated claims which arose under the above state of facts, the trustees instituted this suit to have the trust property administered under the decree of the Court; and at the hearing of the claimants (Romilly for plaintiffs, and Prior, Phillips, Rolt, R. Palmer, and Wood for the other parties), the following cases were cited: Salisbury v. Petty (3 Hare, 86); 2 Jarman on Wills, 651; Doe v. Tiray (8 Barnewall & Cress. 23); Edwards v. Simons (6 Taunt. 213); Gray v. Garman (2 Hare, 268).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The question is, to what period the survivorship is to be referred: the grounds upon which the earlier cases have been decided make a distinction when dealing with real estate and when with personal estate, which has left the point in a very unsatisfactory state, and it is not easy to understand the distinction. I do not dispute the case of Forth v. Chapman, cited in Atkyns' Reports, but can see no analogy between that and the present case. The same construction must be made as if the testator had not in terms provided for real estate remaining unsold at the time of distribution. As to the word "and" connecting the bequest, it ought to be read "or;" as used in the previous sentence; the word "issue" must be read "children" and survivorship must be referred to the period of division, so that the children of those children who were dead at the date of the will are excluded; the effect will be, that children who survived both testator and tenant for life, and all children who died in the lifetime of tenant for life having children, will take, and if they died before division, their representatives will take.

SHIPTON v. RAWLINGS.

Breach of trust—Parties—32nd order of Aug. 1841.

Although suits for breaches of trust are within the 32nd order of Aug. 1841, the most guilty trustee cannot be omitted from being a party to the bill.

This bill was filed to make trustees liable for a breach of trust. When it came on for hearing, a preliminary objection was taken that all the proper parties were not before the Court, when the cause was directed to stand over, with liberty to the parties to amend the bill by adding parties as they should be advised. Great difficulty was found in adding the necessary parties, and it was considered best, under the circumstances, to bring the cause on again, and have the opinion of the Court whether it was essential to the progress of the suit that the absent parties should be brought before the Court. The facts of the case are so fully stated in the judgment, that it is unnecessary to make a previous statement of them.

Kenyon Parker and Follett appeared for plaintiffs.

Toaney, for the trustees, defendants.

Romilly, for a Mr. Sentence, a defendant.

For the plaintiffs it was contended that the claim in this suit came within the 32nd order of Aug. 1841, and that, therefore, the frame of the bill was good in having selected some only of parties liable to be proceeded against.

JUDGMENT.

WIGRAM, V. C.—The testator Shipton in this case, being possessed of certain leasehold property, consisting of houses held for terms of years, renewable upon payment of certain fines to the Bishop of Winchester, and other personal estate, made his will, dated the 8th of May, 1827, and bequeathed those leaseholds and all other his personal estate, to his wife, Sarah Rawlings, the defendant Rawlings, and a man named Dent, who is since dead, upon trust, to pay all his debts, and out of the produce of the residue of his property to set aside annually so much of the rents and profits of his leaseholds as would be sufficient to pay the rents reserved upon them, the fines paid on renewal of the leases, and keep the premises in repair; and what remained of the profits of his property, upon trust for the use of his wife, Sarah Rawlings, for life, and after her decease, as to six of the houses held under the see of Winchester, to the use of the plaintiff for life, and after his decease to his children; and as to the remainder of his leaseholds, to Mary Harding for life, remainder to her children, and appointed Sarah Shipton, his wife, Rawlings, and Dent his executors, and died in 1831. His widow, Rawlings, and Dent all proved the will, and the personal estate was found sufficient to pay all debts due by the testator, and other expenses, without trenching upon the leasehold houses. His widow Sarah entered into receipt of the rent of the leasehold houses, with the consent of the other trustees. No portion of the rents was laid aside to provide for the renewal of the leases or repair of the premises, and in 1834 Sarah Shipton, the widow, married William Sentence, a defendant. Previous to this marriage a settlement was executed between William Sentence, Sarah Shipton, and Jennings and Bowler, as trustees, wherein the will of the testator was recited, so far as the bequests to his wife extended, and all her property of every kind was assigned to Jennings and Bowler, upon trust, to the use of Sarah Shipton for life, and what Sarah Shipton had of her own was limited after her death to her husband for life, remainder to such uses as Sarah Shipton should appoint, and in default, as therein mentioned. After marriage with William Sentence, Sarah Shipton continued to receive the whole rents of the leaseholds, and no sum was ever set aside for renewals or repairs, and premises got very much out of repair. The widow of testator died, having made her will, and appointed away her separate estate, and made the trustees of her marriage settlement her executors. The bill is by Thomas Shipton and his children, and the other parties entitled after the death of the testator's widow, against the surviving trustees of the testator and the representatives of such as are dead; and Jennings, the surviving executor of testator's widow, was also a party, but is since dead, and the bill has not been revived against his representative. There is, therefore, no representative of the widow of testator before the Court. The bill alleges that the widow of the testator had 300*l.* of her own money at the time of her marriage with William Sentence, which she gave away by her will, and prayed that the trustees of the testator, and that Jennings and Sentence, for such parts as are due from the estate of Sarah Sentence, may be ordered to pay such sums as were necessary to set aside for the purpose of paying fines or renewals, and repairs, since the death of the testator. There is no representative of the widow before the Court, and yet the bill charges that the estates of William and Sarah Sentence are liable. For those breaches of trust before marriage the husband is not liable; the case is not within the new orders of August 1841. With regard to the breaches of trust after marriage, Rawlings says the estate of Sarah is liable; if it is, there is no doubt it is as to what occurred previously. It does not appear to follow, from the 32nd order of August 1843, that, because there is a primary claim against joint trustees, in all cases one may be selected. It has certainly been ruled by Lord Langdale that trustees are within the 32nd order; as in the case of two trustees, suppose they join to sell, and divide the property between them, I do not say that each is not liable to the whole, and cestui que trust can go against each or either; this has also been decided by Lord Cottenham; but there may be cases where trustees may be severally liable, and yet the Court will not suffer proceedings to be taken against one without bringing the other before the Court. Suppose one trustee only to act, receive the money, and only invest in his own name, that is a breach of trust in the non-acting trustee; and if the trustee who had the money sold it out to his own use, in that case, although the non-acting trustee may be liable, yet the Court would not allow the cestui que trust to go against the non-acting trustee without bringing the acting trustee before the Court. This is the case of Perry v. Knot (4 Beavan, 179), where Lord Langdale decided that the representative of the trustee who received the money must be made a party. In the present case, by the allegations in the bill, and in the answer of the other trustee, it is insisted that the 300*l.* ought to be set apart to meet the claim of the plaintiffs, and the question is whether this separate property is liable, which is very uncertain after her death. The case is this: the wife has property, the settlement is made; the effect is, that this separate property must be considered part of the trust property, and be set aside to meet this claim; a case may be made that the other trustees have a right to have this money first set aside, and I am therefore of opinion she must be represented in this suit.

Common Law Courts.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Tuesday, June 3.

REG. v. THE NORTH MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Construction of an agreement—Special damage, what.

Mandamus, at the instance of Sir W. Milner, to compel the North Midland Railway Company to make certain watering-places for cattle on lands intersected by the railway. The material parts of the return are set out in the judgment. This return had been traversed, and the case came on for argument (May 3) upon demurrer to these traverses.

Wortley, Q. C. and Addison, in support of the demurrer.—The main question intended to be raised is as to the construction of an agreement between the company and Sir Wm. Milner, set out in the return; that was an agreement for the payment by the company of a sum certain for all special damage occasioned by a deviation in the line of the railway; and we contend that the making of the ponds or watering-places required by this writ to be made is a special damage, for which the company has already paid under that agreement. The damage is the exclusion of the cattle from their old watering-places, and that is certainly of a very special character. It is therefore covered by the payment of the sum mentioned in the agreement. Further, this is not a "convenience" within the meaning of the agreement, which the company is bound to provide; but if it be, then it comes under the clause of the agreement which authorizes Sir Wm. Milner to make it himself, and recover the expense by action. In that case, therefore, he would not be entitled to proceed by mandamus.

Knowles, Q. C. (Cowling and H. Hill with him), contrà. — This agreement is supplementary to the Act of Parliament incorporating the company; under the 88th section of which they are strictly enjoined to make watering-places, and keep them supplied with water. By the agreement a certain sum is to be paid to Sir W. Milner for withdrawing his opposition to the proposed deviation; that deviation involving some further damage to the property of Sir W. Milner; and the subsequent part of the agreement only means that where the railway intersects a close, so as to leave one part of it uselessly small, the company are to throw that small portion into the adjoining land, if it should happen to belong to Sir William Milner. Case cited: Reg. v. The Mayor of York (5 T. R. 66). Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—The case of Reg. v. The North Midland Railway was a mandamus commanding the defendants, in pursuance of the Act of Parliament under which they were incorporated, to make ponds (or watering-places) in certain closes or pieces of land intersected by the railway, as prescribed by the 88th section of that Act. The defendants had made a return stating an indenture between Sir William Milner, the prosecutor of this writ, and themselves, by which, in consideration of his not opposing the alteration of their line, it was agreed that they should pay to Sir William Milner, as for the special damage thereby occasioned to the lands and tenements of the said Sir William Milner, and particularly to a mansion-house of his called Bolton Lodge, the sum of 5,000*l.* to be paid as therein mentioned, and to be exclusive of the value of the land which the company would require for the purposes of the said railway, and the ordinary damages which the company might commit either to the said Sir William Milner or his tenants, and which land and damages were to be valued and paid for by the company in the manner provided for by the Act, unless the parties to the deed should otherwise agree; and, further, that whenever the closes, or pieces or parcels of land or ground, belonging to him should be intersected by the railway, and if the adjoining land should belong to Sir William Milner, and he should require the same, they should be thrown into the adjoining land by removing the fences, drains, gates, and stiles in a sufficient and workmanlike manner, and that the company should and would, at their own expense, make and complete such fences, drains, gates, and stiles, and other conveniences, as might be required for the re-dividing of the fields on the same estate, which should be intersected by the railway, and for carrying them to the adjoining fields of the said estates for the purpose of convenient occupation.

The defendants then state that Sir William Milner gave notice that, in pursuance of the deed, he required them to make such fences, drains, gates, stiles, and other conveniences as might be necessary, setting out as one head of the works he required to be done, the ponds which are the subject of this writ. The defendants say they executed the works required, except the pond, and they conclude by alleging that the cutting off of ponds and watering-places, as stated in the writ, and the damages occasioned thereby, were part of the special damages covered by the 5,000*l.*; and further, that the ponds they were required to make were not conveniences within the meaning of the indenture last set forth. Sir William Milner has traversed both these assertions, to which the defendants have demurred. Technical objections were taken on both sides: it was argued on one side, that the matters traversed are matters of law, and not of fact; on the other hand it was argued, that the return is bad, and that it is repugnant. We do not enter into these objections, ... we are of opinion the indenture furnishes no sufficient answer to the writ. The special damages for which the 5,000*l.* were paid, are evidently such as were familiar to Sir Willliam Milner in the alteration of the line, of whatever nature they may be, and not such damages as might happen to any person whose lands were intersected; such damages are, in the very clause of the indenture, pointed out as ordinary damages, and the 88th section of the Act provides for them in terms. The indenture was made on the 1st of May, 1837; long after the Act, which passed on the 21st of June, 1836; and the clause in the indenture seems almost exactly to refer to that section among others in the Act. With respect to the other clause in the indenture, it is plain the word "conveniences" there used does not apply to all things necessary for the occupation of the land, but to all things necessary for the re-dividing and laying the intersected closes to the adjoining land for the purpose of convenient occupation; it is laying the lands together for which those words must be employed, not making fences and other conveniences; added to which, the 88th section obliges the company to supply water, and gives them power to go even over the lands of a third person; which, if the clause of the indenture were to receive the construction of the defendants, would relate only to making ponds on the lands of Sir William Milner. At all events, it cannot alter the obvious meaning of the indenture itself. Upon the whole, we are of opinion the prosecutor is entitled to our judgment, and the peremptory writ of mandamus must issue.

Judgment for the Crown.

Wednesday, June 4.

ST. KATHERINE'S DOCK COMPANY v. HIGGS.

The Commissioners of Sewers are entitled to unite distinct "levels" (or districts of sewers) into one "level;" and if the inhabitants of both derive any benefit from the common sewer, they may be rated together by a common rate.

Replevin against the defendant, for having, on the 29th day of July, 1842, in the parish of St. Botolph, Aldgate, in the county of Middlesex, seized a crane of the value of 600*l.* the property of the defendant, and unjustly detained it.

Cognizance—The defendant justified the alleged seizure and detention as a commissioner of sewers for the district of the Tower Hamlets.

Replication- -de injuriâ.

The action was tried at the sittings in London after Trinity Term, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the Court upon a special case. In the case it was found that the defendants were commissioners of sewers, appointed by the authority of the 11 H. 8, and various other statutes, for the district of the Tower Hamlets, comprising many parishes in the eastern parts of London, from Hackney to the Thames, and from the Tower to the Lea. For many years the whole district was divided into two smaller districts or "levels," for the purpose of sewerage,—the Spitalfields, and the Wapping level, —each being separate from the other, and the inhabitants of each being rated by a distinct rate. In 1825, the St. Katherine's Dock Company Act passed. The company took into their own hands the sewerage of the land adjoining their own property, and making a new main sewer to the river, down Nightingale-lane, formed a third level, known as the Nightingale-lane level. Up to 1837 this Nightingale-lane level, within which the St. Katherine's Dock Company was rated, was independent as to drainage, presentments, rates, and in all respects, of the commissioners. To that level the company had been annually rated to the amount of 16,000*l.* a year. In 1837, however, the commissioners united the Wapping and Spitalfields levels to the Nightingale-lane level, and made one rate for sewerage common to the inhabitants of the united levels. The company resisted the validity of that rate, and denied the title of the commissioners to unite the two levels. As to the benefit derived from this union by the company, the case found that "the Nightingale-lane level derived no benefit from the junction, their own drainage having been amply sufficient, and their own sewers used;" but it also found that "there was benefit to all the levels, taking them together." If the Court should think the rate bad, the verdict for the plaintiffs to stand—if the rate were good, the verdict to be entered for the defendant.

Dundas, Q.C. (Ogle was with him) for the plaintiffs. —Here there was no dispute as to the general principle that those who received the benefit of the sewer should pay the rate. (Rooke's case, 5 R. 99, b; Rex v. The Commissioners of the Tower Hamlets, 9 B. & C. 521; Soady v. Wilson, 3 Ad. & E. 263.) If, therefore, the St. Katherine's Dock Company received any benefit from this united level, they would be ready to pay for it; but the case distinctly found that they received no benefit whatever. There were four objections to the present rate: 1st. The Commissioners of Sewers had no authority to make a union of two separate levels. The word "level" was not to be found in any of the statutes of sewers, nor in the commission under which the defendants acted; but it had been used in Rooke's case in 1601, and in Dugdale's History of Embanking, and it had received a judicial interpretation by Lord Tenterden in the Tower Hamlets case, in 9 B. & C. It seemed to mean a separate range or district of sewers, and there was no evidence of any authority justifying the union of districts which had for years been separate. No instance of any such practice had been recorded except in the union of the Wapping and Spitalfields levels in 1803; but whether the consent of the parties had in that case been first obtained was not known. Manifest injustice would be worked by permitting such a union, which might be made for the good of the inhabitants of the one district, and to the injury of the inhabitants of the other. The commissioners, it had been held, were not entitled to assess by one rate for separate districts. (Reg. v. The Commissioners of the Tower Hamlets, per Lord Tenterden, C. J.) A separate level must have a separate rate. In the present case the inhabitants of the Nightingale-lane level would derive no benefit; nay, in one respect, they would suffer positive loss, viz. from the use of their sewers, by the additional water passing through them. (Masters v. Scroggs, 3 M. & S. 447.) The benefit of the 16,000*l.* a year paid by the company would be paid for the benefit of the rate-payers of the newly added level. Joining together the Nightingale-lane level with the other two levels, the company did receive some benefit from the level; but standing alone in their own level, as they wished to stand, they received no benefit whatever. Secondly. If the commissioners possessed the power of joining separate levels, it was a power not to be exercised arbitrarily for the benefit of one set of inhabitants, and for the injury of another, as in this case. But, thirdly, supposing them to have the power, and to have exercised it with discretion, there was no evidence of any union of levels having really taken place. Such a union was a solemn act, and there was no evidence here of any decree by, or entry into the books of, the commissioners. [COLERIDGE, J. May it not be contended that, whatever the district be called, if all the districts receive a common benefit, they should be assessed by one rate?] It was submitted not, upon the authority of the case in 9 B. & C. Lastly, there had been no notice of this union, and, having been done behind the backs of the plaintiffs, it was invalid as against them. (Stafford v. Hamston, 2 Brod. & B. 691.)

F. Kelly, Q. C. (Willes was with him) for the defendant. — These Commissioners of Sewers, a high and ancient court of record, to whose care the health and safety of eight hundred thousand people were intrusted, and who could have no personal interest in the question, were not to be presumed to have acted arbitrarily. The real question was, had they the power of making a new sewer? The Act of Parliament gave them unlimited authority to make any sewers in their district, and the whole difficulty had arisen from the word "level." There was no magic in that word. It involved no restriction of the authority of the commissioners — its use had arisen solely from the division of districts for the purpose of the rating, no one, undoubtedly, being liable to a rate who was not benefited by the sewer for which the rate was collected. When the Act of Parliament gave an unqualified authority to make sewers, it was for the plaintiffs to shew the limit or disqualification now insisted upon. If the union of two sewers, previously distinct, were for the benefit of both districts, ought it not to be made? Here the act of junction was not paid for by the inhabitants of the old Nightingale-lane level; but after the junction had been completed, they were assessed together with those who used the higher portion of their sewer. [PATTESON, J.—Then they are rated for a sewer, part of which lies at a great distance from their own property?] Yes; but how could it be prevented? With an increase of population it was frequently necessary to extend an old sewer. For each extension there could not be a separate rate, or else a separate rate might be required for each separate house. The question really came to this, were the inhabitants of the Nightingale-lane level benefited by the sewer for which they were rated? [PATTESON, J.—The case says that, alone, they are not benefited, and I cannot understand how they can be benefited by a channel of water flowing at a great distance from their abodes.] The case, however, found that, taking the levels together, they were all benefited by the sewer; and, being benefited by this united sewer, were not the plaintiffs liable, with all the rest of the inhabitants of the whole district through which it flowed? [PATTESON, J.—What I want to know is this: here there have been two levels and two rates. Why should they not be continued?] Could there be a new rate for every additional house? [COLERIDGE, J.—Ought the commissioners to lay an additional burden upon any part of the district without giving to it a corresponding benefit?] The discretion was left to the commissioners of arranging the whole drainage of the district for the benefit of the majority of its inhabitants. If the legislature had intended to make a division of the district permanent for the purposes of rating after a given time, it would have so provided. The powers given to the commissioners were most ample. (Stat. 2 Wm. & Mary, sess. 2, c. 8, s. 14, and all the subsequent statutes on sewers.) There could not be two rates for this one sewer. If the inhabitants of the Nightingale-lane level were rated alone, the rate would be objectionable by the omission of the other inhabitants; if the others were rated alone, they would object to the omission of the residents of Nightingale-lane. Now, all the inhabitants were benefited in common, though it was true that benefit was of very unequal amount. [PATTESON, J. —If the expense common to both were divided, and each party were assessed with his own share, could they complain that the others were not included?] There was no legal principle of apportionment upon which they could be so assessed. The only mode of rating was by assessment, not according to the benefit which each rate-payer enjoyed, but according to the value of his property. The name of each rate, too, must appear, and the name would not be applicable to both. If the proposition rested upon numbers, space of ground, wealth of inhabitants, a new principle would be introduced into the law. The whole principles of rating were explained by Lord Tenterden in the case in 9 B. & C., and those principles were inconsistent with the division of this rate. There was no force in the other objections.

Dundas, in reply.—A "level" was a recognised division of land, for the purposes of sewerage and of rating in connection with sewers; and that division, so recognised by the courts of law in various cases, could not be swept away by the decree of any body of commissioners. Cur. adv. vult.

Mr. Justice PATTESON now delivered the judgment of the Court.—He said that the defendant had acknowledged taking the goods in question as a distress for a tax or sewer's rate, and the question raised for the consideration of the Court was, whether that rate had been lawfully imposed. It appeared in the case that the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of Sewers for the Tower Hamlets extended over a large and populous district, within the limits of which a part of the premises of the plaintiffs stood. Previously to the year 1803 this district had comprised several distinct levels, such as Spitalfields, Wapping, and others. After that time three others were added. Until the junction of these several levels, each of them had been separately assessed, and were never jointly assessed till now. In 1825 an Act of Parliament had been passed for constructing certain wet docks, warehouses, &c. to be called the St. Katherine Docks, and the plaintiffs were constituted a corporation. A portion of the works of the plaintiffs were without, the rest were within, the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of Sewers; but no question on that fact arose here, for the difficulty in the present case was not as to the amount of this rate, but as to its legality. In 1827 a junction was effected between the districts of Spitalfields and Wapping; and in 1836 the commissioners had ordered a communication to be made between the Spitalfields and Wapping and the Nightingale-lane levels. The expenses of this junction were paid by a rate made exclusively by the Spitalfields and the Wapping levels, the only communication between which was effected by the sewer in Nightingale-lane. The question of benefit to the plaintiffs from these works of the defendant were, upon the evidence, somewhat doubtful, it being said, for the defendant, that they benefited in common with the rest of the neighbourhood; while the plaintiffs alleged that their own drainage was sufficient for their own purposes, and that they were more prejudiced than benefited by what the defendant had done. But it was observable that in this objection to the rating it was not stated that the inhabitants of Nightingale-lane level were more heavily taxed than before. Under these circumstances, the jury of sewers had made a presentment, under which they found that the plaintiffs were the owners of property liable to be taxed for the maintenance of these sewers. By a decree of the commissioners, made in 1838, the commissioners of the four levels confirmed the rate imposed in virtue of this finding. The important question then arose, whether the Commissioners of Sewers had power to unite these levels, which were before separate, and were separately assessed. What was their jurisdiction? It must, of course, be extensive. Their duties were necessarily those of great trust and great urgency. They were bound to provide all that was necessary and in the way the most convenient to the public; and if any district required new sewers, the commissioners might give orders accordingly. That power was clear, and by strict analogy the union of levels was a matter within their jurisdiction. The question of the greater or the less amount of benefit, or the absence of it altogether, was one, therefore, which was within their jurisdiction, and subject to their discretion; and if the operations of the commissioners were to be suspended till the precise benefit of each district could be ascertained, consequences of the most serious kind might ensue. It was said, however, that though the union of the levels might be necessary, still the assessments ought to be the same as before. It was not shewn here that they were greater, and it was clear that after the union (the power to make which appeared to be clear) there could not be separate assessments upon the separate levels. On the whole, therefore, their lordships were of opinion that there must be judgment for the defendant.

The verdict to be entered for the defendant.

REG. v. BUCHANAN.

An indictment upon 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 2, for practising as an attorney at quarter sessions will not be quashed upon certiorari, it not being clearly bad.

The Solicitor-General shewed cause against a rule obtained by Horne to quash an indictment which had been removed into this court by certiorari. (See Law Times, 216.) This indictment is against a Mr. Buchanan for acting as an attorney before the Court of Quarter Sessions at Canterbury. Much irregular matter has been introduced upon the affidavits by Mr. Buchanan as to the originator and the cause of this indictment. To this we have given the fullest denial, but the whole question is, whether the indictment which has been removed into this court, is sustainable. It is framed upon the 2nd section of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73. [DENMAN, C. J.—The question is, whether it is so clearly unsustainable that we ought to prevent it being tried.] It is objected that the 35th and 36th sections are to be looked at, and that as these sections impose certain disabilities and liabilities for practising without being duly qualified, and the offence itself is a new one, that this is the only remedy which can be adopted, and for this was cited 2 Hawk. Pleas, c. 25, s. 4; Castle's case (Cro. Jac. 643); Watson's case (1 Salk. 45). Those sections, however, only prevent recovery of fees, and render the person liable to be punished for contempt of court; and the rule deduced from the above cases is subject to this important qualification, that where there is a substantive prohibitory clause, although there be afterwards a particular provision, and a particular remedy given, there an indictment will lie upon the prohibitory clause, and the remedy is cumulative. That is laid down by Denison, J. in Rex v. Wright (1 Burr. 545). In Rex v. Harris (4 T. R. 202), Ashurst, J. laid down the principle in the following terms:— "It is a clear and established principle that where a new offence is created by an Act of Parliament, and a penalty is annexed to it by a separate and substantive clause, it is not necessary for the prosecutor to sue for the penalty, but he may proceed on the prior clause, on the ground of its being a misdemeanor." But this is not a new offence; and then this indictment is sustainable upon the principle laid down in Rex v. Robinson (2 Burr. 799), and Rex v. Boyall (832). For in such cases the remedy given by the statute is cumulative, and does not take away the former remedy (and see Rex v. Dickenson, 1 Saund. 135, g). If this is not an indictable offence, there is no punishment in respect of the public offence. The Court can punish only for the disrespect to itself, as for a contempt.

Horne, in support of the rule.—This rule must be made absolute. Where an offence is indictable before an Act of Parliament, and by the Act a penalty is annexed, no doubt it is cumulative; but if the offence was not indictable before, then the mode of proceeding by the statute can alone be pursued. Such is the uniform current of the authorities. (2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 4; Castle's case, Cro. Jac. 643.) Hawkins writes thus 'Where a statute makes a new offence, which was no way prohibited by the common law, and appoints a particular mode of proceeding, as by commitment, or action of debt, or information, and without mentioning an indictment, it seems to be settled at this day that it will not maintain an indictment, because the mentioning the other methods of proceeding only seems impliedly to exclude that of indictment." And this is the question in all the cases, and not the position of the clause in the statute which makes the offence. Thus, in Stephens v. Watson (1 Salk. 45), it was laid down that the keeping an alehouse was not punishable by indictment, because the statute made it punishable in another manner. The qualification put by Mr. Justice Ashurst is not to be found in any of the old authorities. (See cases already cited, and Rex v. Wigg, 2 Ld. Raym. 1163; Rex v. Manning, Fitzgib. 47; Rex v. Dixon, 10 Mod. 335; Com. Dig. tit. Indictment, E; 1 Williams' Saunders, 250, c.) But this was not an indictable offence. The words of the section are like that of 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, s. 1, but for 115 years no indictment was ever preferred. [PATTESON, J.—Does the 35th section apply to persons practising at quarter sessions? The words there are "any court of law or equity," but in the 2nd section the court of quarter sessions is expressly mentioned.] The Solicitor-General observed that it had been held that a bill for business done at quarter sessions is taxable. (Sylvester v. Webster, 1 D. P. C. 708; 9 Bing. 388.) [PATTESON, J.—The 22 Geo. 2, s. 12, contained an express prohibition against unqualified persons acting at quarter sessions. Lord DENMAN, C. J.—I am informed that, on application for re-admission, practising at quarter sessions is not considered to render the applicants liable to be fined.] There is no authority for saying that this was ever an indictable offence, and all the books of practice have been searched in vain, although the penalty has been sued for. (Matthews v. Royle, 6 Moore, 70.) [PATTESON, J. —Could there be any punishment for contempt, under sect. 35, at a subsequent court of quarter sessions?] Possibly not; this may be a casus omissus. [PATTESON, J.—It may afford reason to infer that the section does not apply at all to quarter sessions.] Rex v. Wright is no authority for the distinction as to the position of the prohibitory words in a statute. Mr. Justice Denison's dictum was extra-judicial, and the rule to quash the indictment was ultimately made absolute: and Lord Mansfield said, Crofton's case (Ventr. 63), in which it was held an indictment would lie, although the statute creating the offence inflicted a specific penalty, "had been denied many times." The 35th section cannot be independent of the second. By it a person being himself a plaintiff or defendant, and acting as attorney, is exempted from the penalties in that section, and yet, according to the construction now suggested, he might be indicted under the second. [PATTESON, J.—How can a man act as attorney for himself?] The Act contemplates such a case, and we must therefore say that it is possible. If it is held that the insertion of the penalties in a subsequent clause renders a person liable to be indicted under the general prohibitory clause, great inconveniences would arise, for it is now the practice to draw statutes in that way; as the Factories Act, the Merchant Seamen's Act, and many others.

By the COURT.—If the defendant had demurred, he probably would have had judgment by this time. This proceeding by rule is a most inconvenient mode of proceeding, unless it is most obviously and overpoweringly clear that the indictment is bad. It is also a very inconvenient course, as it introduces a number of affidavits which must be answered, and probably at great expense. We cannot say that this indictment is so obviously bad as to justify us in granting this rule, and, without giving any further opinion upon the case, the rule must be discharged.(a)

Rule discharged.

At a subsequent period of the day, Horne asked whether, if the defendant demurred, and the demurrer was decided against him, he would be allowed to plead over also according to the recent cases; but the Court declined to give any direction in the matter.

HALL v. JOHN LACK and EDWARD JOHN LACK.

Where a deed of annuity had been improperly set aside as well as a judgment upon a warrant of attorney, the Court of Queen's Bench in a subsequent term, under special circumstances, allowed the rule to be amended upon payment of costs, by limiting it to the judgment.

Kelly, Q. C. had obtained a rule to amend a rule made in last Easter Term, setting aside an annuity deed, a warrant of attorney, and judgment thereon, under the following circumstances:—On the 31st day of January, 1844, a rule had been obtained, calling upon the plaintiff, the Rev. Charles Ranken Hall, to shew cause why the warrant of attorney, and the judgment signed thereon, and the deed of annuity specified in an affidavit thereto annexed, should not be set aside on the following grounds. 1st. That the true and full consideration for the grant of annuity was not stated in the grant or memorial thereof, because two policies of insurance, on which a bonus had been declared on each, the bonuses amounting together to 735*l.* and of the value of 1,016*l.* 13s. at the time of the grant of the annuity, and assigned and delivered to the plaintiff, were part of the consideration for the grant of the said annuity. 2nd. That the pension is not assignable by law. 3rd. That no consideration was paid to the defendant for the grant of the annuity; but that Henry Merrick Elderton and Robert Philott, acting as attorneys for the grantor and grantee of the annuity, obtained the bills of exchange for 5,000*l.* from the defendant, and that if plaintiff ever advanced any money at all for the annuity, which was disputed, the said attorneys never have rendered any account to the defendant of the receipt and expenditure of the 5,000*l.* or any part thereof, and ever since the grant of the annuity refused to do so. 4th. That the covenants for repayment of extra insurance in the deed operate as assurance for the return of the principal money. 5th. That the grant was obtained from defendants by undue influence of the said Henry M. Elderton and Robert

(a) Lord DENMAN, C. J., PATTESON and WILLIAMS, JJ

Phillott, acting as attorneys for both parties, and by misrepresentation and fraud. By order of the Court, June 11, 1844, the matters in the above rule were referred to one of the Masters. Mr. Turner made his report on April 14, 1845. He found that the annuity-deed recited amongst other things that the plaintiff had lent to the defendants five sums of 300*l.* 200*l.* 2,000*l.* 1,500*l.* and 1,000*l.*, and that, as security for the repayment thereof, the plaintiff held certain bills of exchange drawn by one defendant and accepted by the other; that, in consideration of the cancellation of the said bills, an annuity of 804*l.* 11s. had been granted by the defendants during the life of J. Lack, and a warrant of attorney executed, and a power of attorney to the plaintiff and R. Phillott to receive the defendant's pension; and that the said bills had been delivered up by the plaintiff, and had been cancelled by the defendants; and that by the said deed the plaintiff released the defendants from the said sums secured by the said bills; and that the defendants, in consideration thereof, granted to the plaintiff an annuity of 804*l.* a year, and the defendant, J. Lack, assigned the pension as a further security. The Master further found that the warrant of attorney was duly executed, and judgment signed thereon, January 5, 1843, and that a memorial of the deed and the warrant of attorney were enrolled on Jan. 3, and that in the memorial the consideration and mode of payment were thus stated:—

"5,000*l.* sterling, made up of five several sums of 300*l.* 200*l.* 2,000*l.* 1,500*l.* 1,000*l.* sterling respectively, previously lent or advanced by C. R. Hall, to or for the use of J. Lack and E. J. Lack, and owing to C. R. Hall, upon the security of five several bills of exchange drawn by E. J. Lack upon, and accepted by J. Lack, and indorsed by E. J. Lack and H. M. Elderton, the said consideration being paid or satisfied by the cancellation or destruction of the same bills, and a release by C. R. Hall of J. Lack, E. J. Lack, and H. M. Elderton from the sums respectively secured thereby, and interest, for securing the same annuity or rent-charge."

As to the first objection, he found that the two policies of insurance formed no part of the consideration for the annuity; and as to the second, that the pension was assigned; and as to the third, he found that in April 1840, the plaintiff being about to leave England for the Continent, he executed a letter of attorney to the said Robert Phillott, in the said indenture mentioned, one of the attorneys of this court authorizing him to receive the dividends of and to sell the whole or any part of a sum of 7,787*l.* 10s. Reduced Annuities, standing in his name, and requested the said Robert Phillott to look out for some other investments for the same. And he found that prior to April 1840, and thenceforward during the whole period in which the transactions and matters hereinafter mentioned were going on, the said R. Phillott and the said H. M. Elderton, in the said indenture also mentioned, carried on business in London in partnership together as attorneys and solicitors, and that the said Elderton and Phillott were in such transactions and matters the attorneys of the plaintiff, and also the attorneys of the defendants, the said R. Phillott acting for the plaintiff, and the said H. M. Elderton and Robert Phillott both (but the said H. M. Elderton principally) acting for the defendants. And he found that the said R. Phillott, under the general authority given by the said letter of attorney, but without any further or particular authority or instruction from the plaintiff, and without his knowledge or privity, sold out the sum of 7,112*l.* 5s. Reduced Annuities, part of the said 7,787*l.* 10s. annuities, belonging to the plaintiff, at certain times specified. And he further found that the produce of the said sale, 6,392*l.* 19s. 1d. was received by the said R. Phillott; and that Messrs. Elderton and Phillott, previous to July 1841, had discounted, or caused to be discounted, at 20 per cent. bills of exchange to a large amount, drawn by one of the defendants and accepted by the other, and amongst them the bills of exchange amounting to 5,000*l.* mentioned in the said annuity; and that the said Phillott, in discounting the last-mentioned bills without the plaintiff's knowledge or consent, applied for that purpose part of the said moneys belonging to the plaintiff; and that the defendant J. Lack was aware at the time that the said bills, or at all events one of them, were or was discounted by Phillott with the plaintiff's money. He found, also, that out of these moneys Elderton and Phillott paid debts and liabilities of J. Lack, but that the accounts were not settled between the parties. And further, he found that the plaintiff never did lend or advance to the defendants, or either of them, the several sums of money, 300*l.*, 200*l.*, 2,000*l.*, 1,500*l.*, and 1,000*l.* as mentioned in the annuity-deed, unless the Court should think that, under the above circumstances, a loan was to be implied; and that the said Elderton and Phillott never did, nor did either of them, render any account to the defendants as to the 5,000*l.*; but that it did not appear any application had ever been made prior to the execution of the deed.

As to the fourth objection, the Master set out the covenant for the opinion of the Court; and as to the fifth, that there was no fraud, unless the circumstances above detailed amounted to such fraud.

The Court decided upon the third objection, and on the 6th of May the following rule was made, after argument:—"Upon reading the rule made in this cause, on Tuesday, the 11th day of June, in Trinity Term last past, the report of Charles Robert Turner, one of the Masters of this court, and upon hearing Mr. Lee, of counsel for the plaintiff, and Mr. Whateley, of counsel for the defendants, it is ordered that the warrant of attorney, the judgment signed thereon, and the deed of annuity named in the affidavit in the rule made in this cause on Wednesday, the 31st day of January, in Hilary Term, in the seventh year of her present Majesty mentioned, be set aside." This rule was served upon the 7th or 8th of May; but as it seemed to be admitted too late for any motion to be made in Easter Term. On the first day of Trinity Term, Kelly, Q. C. obtained the following rule, upon an affidavit as to the facts relating to the service, and upon the objection that the Court had no power to set aside the annuity-deed, as none of the objections brought it within the operation of the 6th section of the 53 Geo. 3, c. 141. On Wednesday (June 11),

Whateley, Q. C. and Corrie shewed cause against this rule.—There is a preliminary objection to this rule, that it is not drawn up upon reading the Master's report; and, consequently, the proper materials are not before the Court. If, however, the report is to be referred to, it appears from it that there was no consideration between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that there was no actual advance of any sum. The deed has, therefore, been rightly set aside; but, at any rate, the rule cannot be reopened. It has been heard, argued, and decided upon, and the rule made absolute in the terms of the rule nisi. In Earle v. Brown (10 A. & E. 412), where, in consequence of the non-enrolment of a subsequent deed for a reduced annuity, that deed, together with the former deed and warrant of attorney, and a power of attorney to receive a pension, had been set aside, the Court refused in a subsequent Term to revise the rule by limiting it to the last deed. (Earle v. Brown, 4 Jurist, 8.) In Ex parte Lewis (2 A. & E. 135), on an objection under the 2nd section, the Court set aside the annuity-deed. [PATTESON, J.—In the report of that case there is an omission. The decision was also upon objections raised under the 6th section; I made a note of it at the time.] Here there was a retainer under the 6th section. The discount at 20 per cent. amounted to a retainer within the words "any pretence whatever."

Kelly, Q.C. (with whom was W. Lee, Q. C.) in support of the rule.—This rule has been obtained because the former rule was drawn up with a manifest error. It must have been intended to set aside the judgment only. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Is your rule properly drawn up, without referring to the Master's report?] Yes; it is to alter the existing rule, and it is therefore sufficient to refer to the rule and the affidavit as to the service. It is merely an appeal to the Court whether the judgment, as given, is the judgment they intended to give. The Court may, for their convenience, refer to the report, but it is in fact, an appeal to the memory of the Court. [WILLIAMS, J.—The report was part of the materials we decided upon.] Suppose, within an hour of the judgment, this rule had been drawn up and served, I might have come into court, and put it to the Court whether it was intended to be so drawn up. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It would not have then been necessary to have a rule.] Nor is it now necessary to refer again to all the materials upon which the original rule was drawn up. The lateness of the service prevented any application in the same Term. It is clear that there was a mistake. In none of the five grounds stated is there any thing to bring the case within the 6th section, unless it be the third. But there was neither any part of the consideration returned, or paid in notes, which were subsequently cancelled, or paid in goods, or retained on pretence of answering the future payment, or any other pretence. The finding of the Master negatives any of these grounds, which are the only objections under the 6th section.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It would always be a matter of very great regret that we should have made a mistake which could not be remedied; but it is necessary that there should be rules observed as to reopening questions, or litigation would never be concluded. Here the first objection is that the rule is improperly drawn up in consequence of the omission to refer to the Master's report. To this, however, it is answered, and we think correctly, that the motion is, in fact, only an appeal to the recollection of the Court, and we are asked whether or not we did decide as we are said to have done by the rule complained of. We therefore think we may entertain the question. When the rule was made absolute, it necessarily included the grounds of the rule, and when the grounds of the rule are looked at, it is manifestly inconsistent to say that they afforded reasons for setting aside the annuity-deed. It was admitted too by Mr. Lee that he did not press his view of the 6th section so strongly upon the Court as he should have done, had they not then expressed their strong opinion in favour of the application generally.

It was then a rule sought for upon certain grounds and made absolute upon different grounds, and therefore I think it may be corrected.

PATTESON, J.—The only part of the 6th section within which this case could possibly be brought, is, "if the consideration, or any part of it, shall be retained upon any pretence of answering the future payment of the annuity, or any other pretence;" and it is said that here it was retained because there was no consideration. The Master finds that there was no loan upon the bills, and how, then, could there be a retainer? The allowance of this amendment must not be drawn into a precedent that the Court will reconsider matters solemnly decided.

WILLIAMS, J.—I believe the rule has been constantly acted upon, and it is only under the very special circumstances of this case that we allow it to be infringed upon; and especially because upon the rule, which includes the grounds of objection to the deed of annuity and warrant of attorney, (a) the error is apparent, as upon those grounds, the judgment could not have been intended to be pronounced as it was; and this the Court can see on the materials before them.

Rule granted, upon payment of costs and the costs of the application.

Thursday, June 12.

VYSE v. BIRD.

This Court having given judgment for the defendant on demurrer, nobody appearing for the plaintiff when the case was called on, afterwards restored the case to the special paper, and when the case came on for argument again, judgment was given for the plaintiff, nobody then appearing for the defendant. Held, that the Court has authority to correct any judgment which it may pronounce during any part of the sitting at which it is pronounced; and that therefore there was no ground for setting aside the second judgment signed for the plaintiff. But the Court refused to discharge a rule obtained for that purpose with costs.

Swann shewed cause against a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the judgment signed for the plaintiff on demurrer should not be set aside. The action was on a promissory note, containing also counts for money lent, and on an account stated; to which the defendant had pleaded to the first counts special plea; to the second and third counts, non assumpsit. To the replication to the first of those pleas the defendant demurred; and on the 1st Feb. 1845, the demurrer came on for argument. Counsel then appeared on behalf of the defendant, but none appearing for the plaintiff, judgment was given for the defendant; accordingly, on the 7th, judgment was signed and entered up for the defendant. On the 4th of Feb. however, upon the application of counsel for the plaintiff, it was ordered that the cause should be restored to its place in the special paper, which rule was not served on the defendant until the 10th Feb.; but the officer of the court had previously given the defendant information of the fact. After some correspondence between the parties, the case, having been restored to the special paper, came on for argument upon the demurrer; and then no counsel appearing for defendant, the judgment was given for the plaintiff, and was signed and entered up on the 20th May: a rule nisi to compute had also been obtained. It was now sought to set aside that judgment for the plaintiff; but the learned counsel contended that it was perfectly competent to the Court to correct its own judgment; and that the judgment for the plaintiff having been signed by the authority of the Court, and that authority not having been in any way recalled, it was a perfectly regular judgment.

Hugh Hill, contrà, submitted that two inconsistent judgments could not stand; and that it was at all events incumbent on the plaintiff to have set aside the judgment signed for the defendant, before availing himself of the authority of the Court to sign judgment for the plaintiff. The Court had given its judgment in favour of the defendant, and after that judgment had been signed and the roll carried in, it was a very strong course to allow a different judgment to be signed in the same cause.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Whatever is done at one sitting is to be taken as done at the same time; and if, therefore, in any case we come to a decision which we afterwards think wrong, we have the privilege, during the same sitting, of making it right. In this case we gave judgment against a party, whose counsel, when he came, was clearly entitled to be heard; and that being so, there was no authority to sign judgment for the defendant. Besides, I have great faith in the virtue of consent, and I think consent ought to be readily presumed in a case of this sort. Then, unless the Court is informed that it has done something incorrect, the judgment signed for the plaintiff is good; because it was signed under the authority of the Court. The rule to compute must be made absolute, and the other rule discharged.

The other judges concurred.

Swann applied to have the rule discharged with costs.

(a) In pursuance of R. G. 42 Geo. 3.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We cannot do that. This case may be a lesson to parties that we cannot grant any indulgence in cases of this sort; and that if counsel do not appear when a case is called on, their clients must pay the costs.

Rule discharged, without costs.

MORRIS v. MANASTY.

A pension granted for services rendered to the East India Company, by resolution of the Directors, is not within the 14th section of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, so as to be liable to be charged with the payment of a judgment debt by a judge's order.

A rule nisi had been obtained for setting aside an order of Mr. Justice Wightman, charging an annuity standing in the defendant's name in the books of the East India Company with the payment of 216*l*. 3*s*. 8*d*. due to the plaintiff on the judgment in this action, unless cause should be shewn to the contrary within six calendar months. It appeared from the affidavits, that by resolutions of the Directors of the East India Company, the last of which was dated the 5th May, 1842, a pension of 100*l*. a year had been granted to the defendant; that he had assigned it by indenture to a person of the name of Collett, who had given notice of the assignment to the East India Company.

Hugh Hill, for the plaintiff, now shewed cause. —This order is made under stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 15; but, according to the 15th clause of that Act, this application is premature until the order of the judge has been made absolute; and here there is no proof even of any service on the judgment debtor. (Brown v. Bamford, 9 Mee. & W. 42; Rogers v. Holloway, 5 Man. & G. 292.) The questions which arise here are, first, whether this is an annuity within the meaning of the 14th section of the Act; and, secondly, whether the defendant could assign this annuity by deed for the benefit of a third party; and they are too grave and important questions to be disposed of summarily on motion. (Wells v. Foster, 8 M. & W. 149.)

The Solicitor-General, Wigram, Q. C. and Forsyth, for the East India Company, and Watson, Q. C. for Mr. Collett, in support of the rule.—Application was made to Mr. Justice Wightman to discharge this order; but he indorsed the summons, "No order;—without prejudice to any application which may be made to the Court." He in effect referred us to this Court; and it would be a monstrous thing to suppose that by an order of this sort a stop could be put upon stock for a period of six months without any means of redress. Brown v. Bamford is quite distinguishable. Further, the statute does not apply to this case. The 14th section enacts "that if any person against whom any judgment shall have been entered up in any of her Majesty's superior courts at Westminster shall have any government stock, funds, or annuities, or any stock or shares of or in any public company in England (whether incorporated or not), standing in his name, &c. it shall be lawful for a judge of one of the superior courts, on the application of any judgment creditor, to order that such stock, &c. or such of them, or such part thereof respectively, as he shall think fit, shall stand charged with the payment of the amount for which judgment shall have been so recovered," &c.; but the pension granted to the defendant is neither "government stock, funds, or annuities," nor is it "any stock or share of or in any public company in England."

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We are of that opinion.

Rule absolute.

REG. v. PAINTER.

A rule for a mandamus to justices, commanding them to issue a warrant to levy a distress upon one T. C. for a poor's rate due from him as a shareholder of a public bridge, having been made absolute, and the justices having made a return thereto, this Court granted leave to C. to make an additional return on payment of costs.

Crompton and Pashley shewed cause against a rule calling on the prosecutors to shew cause why Henry Chasemore should not have leave to make a return to the mandamus issued in this case (see 5 Law T. 91), or to amend the return of the justices. The return made by the justices raises all the points formerly discussed, and has been demurred to; and if Mr. Chasemore wished to make a distinct return, he should have applied when the rule nisi was before the Court. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—How are you prejudiced?] The effect was, that the joinder in demurrer was delivered one day too late to put the case into the Crown Paper.

M. Chambers and C. Clark, contra, were not called upon.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We should look very narrowly at such an application, if the interests of the other party could be affected by it: even if it involved a loss of time, we should pause before we granted it; but it is clear this case could not have been brought on this Term. But there being no prejudice to the other side, we do not think the application unreasonable, of course upon payment of all the costs.

Chambers.—Then the two returns may be incorporated; that will do away with the demurrer. [COLERIDGE, J.—Not necessarily so; they may demur to part and plead to part.]

Crompton.—If they plead, we ought to be able to try at the next assizes.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Yes; if they plead to issue, I think it ought to be done in time for the next assizes.

Rule absolute on those terms.

CHARLESWORTH v. ELLIS.

The omission to enter an appearance before signing judgment and issuing execution upon a warrant of attorney, is an irregularity only, and cannot be taken advantage of after a reasonable time has elapsed:—Semble, per Patteson, J. that it would be different in an action.

An affidavit that deponent has searched the book in which appearances are entered, and that no appearance has been by or for defendant is sufficient.

A rule nisi had been obtained (May 26) for setting aside judgment signed upon a warrant of attorney, the execution issued thereon, and all subsequent proceedings, on the ground that no appearance had been entered. The affidavit as to that point stated that the deponent had "searched the appearance-book, in which appearances are entered, and that no appearance has been by or for the above-named defendant." It appeared that judgment was signed by the plaintiff upon a warrant of attorney on February 6th; that execution issued on the 24th April; that the sale took place on the 2nd May; that on the next day a docket was struck, and on the 5th of May a fiat of bankruptcy issued; that at the first public meeting after the fiat the assignees were chosen, and that this application was made with the consent of the assignees.

Knowles, Q.C. shewed cause.—First, the affidavit is defective; it says, "no appearance has been by or for the defendant;" not "no appearance has been entered by or for" him. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It says that the party has searched the book in which appearances are entered, and that none has been for the defendant: that is, none has been entered for him.] Then, first, it is not necessary to enter an appearance before signing judgment on a warrant of attorney; there is nothing to appear to; but, secondly, the want of appearance is at most an irregularity only; and if so, this application is too late; citing Williams v. Strahan (1 N. R. 309); Fynn v. Kemp (2 Dowl. 620); Hawkins v. Hassel (12 M. & W. 776; 1 D. & L. 1006); Kemp v. Matthew (8 Scott, 399); Bircham v. Tucker (8 Scott, 469). To set aside a judgment for irregularity, the parties must come within a reasonable time after knowing that judgment [illegible] signed, Grant v. Flower (5 Dowl. 419); that is, within a reasonable time after he knows of the proceeding in which the irregularity took place, and not after he knows of the irregularity itself. (Esdaile v. Davis, 6 Dowl. 465; Routledge v. Giles, 2 Cr. & J. 163.)

Pashley, contrà.—1. To sign judgment in an action without an appearance, is a nullity (Roberts v. Spurr, 3 Dowl. 551); and it makes no difference that there is a warrant of attorney authorizing the plaintiff to sign judgment, especially as the authority is "to appear" for the defendant in one of the courts, and receive a declaration. It is no answer that there is no writ to appear to; because in an action a party may appear if he please, without a writ, which is only a mode of compelling him to come. Grant v. Flower, Williams v. Strahan, and Hawkins v. Hassel, are distinguishable. The cases in 8 Scott are not reported elsewhere; and Bircham v. Tucker proceeds upon the assumption that Kemp v. Matthew decided a point, which it did not decide, according to the report of it. [PATTESON, J. To what is the defendant to appear?] He is to appear in the action in which, according to the warrant of attorney, the declaration is to be received. [PATTESON, J.—There is none. This is altogether a different case from that of an ordinary action. Certainly, Mr. Archbold in his Practice, on the subject of warrants of attorney, and under the head "Judgment, how signed," says, "Enter an appearance for the defendant" (Chitty, 7th edit. p. 697), but he gives no authority for it.] This Court does not favour laxity of practice. (R. v. The West Riding Justices, 3 M. & S. 494.) A warrant of attorney is an authority which must be executed entirely. (Co. Litt. 52, a & b.) But even if this is a mere irregularity, it is not waived under the circumstances of this case.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—I have no doubt that Mr. Scott's report is quite correct. He is a very accurate reporter; and when it is said that these cases are not reported elsewhere, I am sure that they would have been, if wrong, with a long note in explanation; but if this were an irregularity, it would be waived by length of time. It is quite clear that the bankrupt knew all about it long ago.

Rule discharged.

Re HOLT.

Watson, Q. C. applied for an order to the examiners to examine and admit a Mr. Holt as an attorney. They had refused to do so, assigning as a reason that he had been convicted of a misdemeanor together with another person; the offence was that of a conspiracy. The service had been properly completed. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It was a conspiracy by means of perjury to fix a man with a judgment without any previous notice.] He states it was for imprisoning a person under those circumstances; but that before the trial he communicated the whole of the circumstances to the prosecutor, who did not press for judgment.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—If a man submits to be found guilty to a charge such as this, is this a person fit to be clothed with the authority of this Court as its officer? Has he not been convicted, and would this Court do its duty to society by allowing such a person to practise as an attorney? We cannot grant this application.

Rule refused.

REG. v. SIR RICHARD DOBSON and OTHERS.

Judgment upon an indictment for nuisance.

Indictment against the proprietors of the Greenwich Pier Company, for a nuisance in encroaching on the river Thames. The defendants had suffered judgment by default; but in the affidavits now filed they had set up a license from the Corporation of London to make the encroachment.

M. Chambers moved for judgment upon the defendants. They had admitted the nuisance by suffering judgment by default, and they were not at liberty now, upon affidavit, to set up a right to do that which was the nuisance complained of. Nothing had been done to abate it, and it became necessary, therefore, for the watermen of Greenwich, who were injured by the nuisance, and were the parties prosecuting the indictment, to apply for the assistance of the Court.

Badeley, for the defendants.—The defendants are all of them most respectable persons, and little likely to do any thing which they believed to be illegal; the works which they are carrying out, if completed, would be very beneficial, instead of injurious, to the navigation of the river, though, in their present incomplete state, they might be, to some small extent, an obstruction. The rights of the watermen and the Greenwich Pier Company have been the subject of much angry feeling and litigation, but the imputations thrown out in the affidavits on the other side are unwarrantable. They have the benefit of the public in view, and have acted upon a legal right to do as they have done. They have acted with the best intentions, and have been prevented from completing the work only by the acts of the prosecutors, who have thrown every difficulty in their way.

PATTESON, J. pronounced judgment.—This was an indictment for a nuisance in the river Thames by means of the Greenwich Watermen's Company's pier. The motion was first for a new trial, and then there was an agreement to abide by the original judgment, and this was after the reference. The only course left is to pass the usual sentence, that the writ be issued by the sheriff to abate the nuisance, with a nominal fine of 5*l*. This writ will remain in the sheriffs' office till next term, which will give the parties the opportunity of removing the nuisance, and of so arranging the matter themselves.

Friday, June 13.

REG. v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE TOTNESS UNION.

An order of two justices, under 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 27, directing relief out of the workhouse to be given to an adult person, from old age or infirmity of body unable to work, ought not to be made without summoning the overseers of the parish interested in opposing such order: and if such an order is made ex parte, this Court will not enforce obedience to it by mandamus.

Quære, whether such order ought to be directed to the guardians of the union.

Mandamus to the Guardians of the Totness Union, commanding them to obey an order of two justices, directing them to give relief to one Elizabeth Perring, an adult person wholly unable to work, and so certified to be of his own knowledge, by one of the said justices, without requiring her to reside in any workhouse. Return setting up the invalidity of the order, and demurrer thereto.

Watson, Q.C. in support of the demurrer, contended that the order in question being made under the 27th section of 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76, had fully complied with all the requirements of that section, and was therefore good. That section provided that "in any union to be formed under that Act, it shall be lawful for any two of his Majesty's justices of the peace, usually acting for the district wherein such union may be situated, at their just and proper discretion, to direct, by order, under their hands and seals, that relief shall be given to any adult person, who shall from old age or infirmity of body be wholly unable to work, without requiring that such person shall reside in any workhouse; provided always, that one of such justices shall certify in such order, of his own knowledge, that such person is wholly unable to work, as aforesaid, and provided further that such person shall be lawfully entitled to relief in such union, and shall desire to receive the same out of a workhouse." The clause therefore required no notice to the parish, and none was necessary; and further, the order was properly directed to the guardians, who are the only persons having a discretionary power as to the mode and quantity of relief.

M. Smith, contrà.—It is monstrous to suppose that the legislature could have intended that two justices alone should have the power of controlling the guardians, a body to which, ex officio, all the magistrates of the county belong. The order should at all events have been directed to the overseers; that would have avoided the flagrant absurdity involved in the other course; and there are cases in which the legislature has necessarily invested overseers with a discretionary power as to the mode and quantity of relief. The overseers would afterwards be subject to the auditors, who would not pass their accounts if they contained improper items of relief. But, secondly, this order was made ex parte, and that is contrary to the principle laid down in Painter v. the Liverpool Gas Company (3 Ad. & E. 433). The overseers of the parish to be charged should have been summoned, or the guardians,—somebody, in fact, to protect the rates. Both justices are to be satisfied of all the necessary facts, and they involve both the settlement and chargeability, as well as the inability to work; that is to be certified by one magistrate of his own knowledge; but that certificate is not alone sufficient; and how can the magistrates satisfy themselves on these points without summoning the parish officers? [PATTESON, J.—The 9 Geo. 1, c. 7, s. 1, expressly provides that no justice of the peace shall order relief "until such justice hath summoned two of the overseers of the poor to shew cause why such relief should not be given;" and if, when relief was ordinarily given out of the workhouse, the overseers were to be summoned, I can see no reason why they should not be summoned under this clause, giving a special authority to order relief contrary to the general scope of the Act.]

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—This principle must prevail with regard to this order, the object of which is to affect a parish to a certain extent with regard to matters which are more likely to be within their knowledge than in that of other parties. It is true that a certificate of one of the justices is required, but it is not said that that shall be all sufficient. It is quite possible that the magistrate may have been imposed upon; and there is nothing therefore to take this case out of the general principle, that when a party was to be affected by any thing to be done against him, he should have an opportunity of shewing cause why that thing should not be done.

The other judges concurred.

Watson, Q. C. mentioned that, in the new edition of Burn's Justice, a form was given precisely similar to that in the present case.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It is very difficult to know what would be a right order.

Judgment for the defendants.

MURRAY v. THE QUEEN.

An indictment for bigamy need not contain any other averment of the subsistence of the first marriage at the time of the second than is involved in the usual allegation, "A. B. his former wife, being then alive." In the record of the sentence it is not necessary to make any reference to the statute or statutes under which it is pronounced.

Error on an indictment for bigamy, assigning for cause that the indictment was defective in not averring a continuance of the first marriage at the time of the second; and that the record of the judgment was bad in stating it to be passed in pursuance of the statute in that case made and provided; whereas the sentence for the said offence was regulated by more statutes than one.

G. T. White (with whom was Couling) for the plaintiff, argued that both on reason and on authority the averment, that at the time of the second marriage the first marriage was continuing, was essential to the description of the crime of bigamy. The statutes both of 1 Jac. 1. c. 11, and 35 Geo. 3, c. 67, shew the necessity of that averment, for they use the words "any person being married;" and Lord Coke, in his reading on the statute of Jac. 1 (3 Inst. 88), puts that construction upon those words. The being married at the time of the second marriage is of the essence of the offence; and the omission to own it is a material defect, which cannot be supplied by any implication or intendment. The averment must be positive and distinct; and the words "his former wife" being still alive are not sufficient; they are mere description. It is quite possible, consistently with this indictment, that the first marriage may have been dissolved before the second took place; and if so, there is no offence; and the possibility of that ought to be excluded. The indictment is in the words of the statute, but that is not enough. As to the second point, the record of the judgment is defective. It appears to be founded upon one statute only; whereas it does, in fact, depend upon several. First, the 35 Geo. 3, c. 67, provides that this offence shall be subject to the same punishment as those who were convicted of grand and petit larceny. Then, the 4 Geo. 1, c. 11, enacts that persons convicted of grand or petit larceny should be sent to some of her Majesty's colonies or plantations in America for seven years; and by the 19 Geo. 3, c. 74, the punishment of transportation to America was altered to transportation to America or elsewhere. All these statutes are in force, and ought all to have been referred to. Where an offence is prohibited by one statute, and the punishment altered by another, the indictment must conclude contra formam statutorum. (R. v. Adams, 1 Car. & M. 299.)

The following authorities were also cited: Porter's case (Cro. Car. 461); Duchess of Kingston's case (20 How. St. Tr. 355); Starkie's Crim. Pl. 434; R. v. Millis (10 Clark & Fin. 534); Archbold's Crim. Pl. 361; 1 Hawkins, P. C. c. 43; Thursby v. Plant (1 Wms. Saund. 235, note 8); Fryer v. Combes (11 Ad. & E. 403); Dayrell v. Hoare (12 Ad. & E. 356); R. v. M'Gregor (3 Bos. & P. 106); Lolly's case (1 R. & R. 237); 2 Burn's Eccl. Law; Fletcher v. Calthrop (14 L. J. M. C. N. S. 49).

Waddington, for the Crown, was not called upon.

By the COURT.—It is stated in express terms that the first marriage did take place; and why is a divorce to be presumed? On the contrary, the assumption is that the status of marriage continues, until the contrary is shewn. Besides, the allegation is distinct that at the time of the second marriage "the former wife" was still alive; and that description would not be at all correctly applicable, if the first marriage had been annulled. As to the second point, it was wholly unnecessary to refer to any statute in the record of the judgment; the only question is, whether the sentence is one which the Court had authority to pronounce; and that is not disputed; but if any such reference were necessary, a reference to one statute is sufficient, as it is by one statute that the Crown, with the advice of the Privy Council, appoints the places to which offenders are to be transported.

Judgment for the Crown.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF EAST SUSSEX.

Upon demurrer to a return to a writ of mandamus commanding justices to hear an appeal, the Court gave judgment for the defendants, it being stated on the return that the justices had decided every point submitted to them.

Mandamus to the justices of East Sussex, commanding them to enter continuances and hear an appeal between the parish of Westham, appellants, and the parish of Eastbourne, respondents.

The return set out the order of removal and examinations, and twenty-five grounds of appeal at length. It then, in substance, stated, that on the hearing of the appeal, the appellants objected to the validity of the order of removal, on the ground that no complaint in writing appeared either on the order or the examinations; that the sessions overruled the objection; and that the appellants raised no other objection whatever to the order of removal or examinations; that thereupon the respondents objected to the sufficiency of the grounds of appeal, as leaving untraversed a sufficient portion of the examination to support the order; that the appellants argued against that objection; but that the sessions held it good; and that the appellants did not offer to go into any other part of their case, and did not require that the respondents should be put to proof of any part of their case; and did not require the decision of the sessions upon any other point; that therefore the sessions confirmed the order, with costs, and had not entered continuances, in obedience to the writ, because the appeal had been already heard.

Demurrer and joinder.

Fitzherbert, in support of the demurrer.—This is an improper return. The justices knew that the point upon which the mandamus issued was, whether the appellants had waived their objection to the want of a complaint in writing; and they ought to have made a return upon that point; instead of which they have evaded the object by a general statement of what took place. The return is not untrue; because it says that we argued against the respondent's general objection to our grounds of appeal; but it is insufficient, because it omits to state that we did at that time insist upon our objection to the order; and that was the proper time for us to do so. In effect they refused to hear; several grounds of appeal are set out on the return; and it ought to have been shewn that in some way they were disposed of; but that is not done; and no argument can be raised against us from the statement that we did not require to go further into the case; because, after the decision upon one general objection to all our grounds of appeal, it would have been useless to go on.

Johnson and Creasy, contrà, were not called upon.

By the COURT.—If this return is true, then the justices have heard the appeal; if false, it should have been traversed. Judgment for the defendants.

Saturday, June 14.

DAWSON v. GREGORY.

In debt against an administrator on the judgment of a court baron, upon an issue of nul tiel record,—Held, that the judgment was sufficiently proved by the virâ voce testimony of the officer of the Court present at the trial, and the production of levari facias issued by him, there being no records in that court, and no form of judgment proper to that court. Held also, that plene administravit could not have been pleaded; and that, therefore, evidence that defendant had fully administered could not be received on an issue elongavit vel non.

Debt upon a judgment for 4*l.* 14s. 6d. and 16*l.* 10s. 11d. costs recovered in the court baron of G. Lane Fox, esq. at Wakefield, against the defendant as administrator of one Gregory, deceased, suggesting an elongavit.

Pleas—1st, That there was no such record; 2nd, That at the time of the said judgment defendant had fully administered; absque hoc, that he had since eloigned.

At the trial, verdict for the plaintiff, with full da-......

The defendant tendered evidence that he had fully administered; but Coltman, J. held that the issue was on the elongavit, and that the plea of plenè administravit had been fully disposed of in the court below. A rule nisi having been obtained for a nonsuit or new trial, pursuant to leave reserved, Watson, Q.C. and Thompson shewed cause.—The defendant here had no right to give evidence of plenè administravit; that would have been a proper plea in the court below; and if the defendant neglects to plead it there, or pleading it, it is found against him, he cannot set it up as a defence in an action on that judgment; and if he cannot plead it, neither can he give evidence of it. (Dyson v. Wood, 3 B. & C. 449; Phill. on Evid. 629; Irving v. Peters, 3 T. R. 685; Arundell v. White, 14 East, 216; Henderson v. Henderson, 13 L. J. N. S. (Q.B. 274.) As to the 1st plea, there was sufficient evidence of the judgment in the virâ voce testimony of the officer, who was present at the trial, and in the production of the writ of levari facias, which was the consequence of it.

J. Henderson, contrà.—The judgment below was given in opposition to the advice of the presiding barrister; however, it is admitted that the judgment is conclusive of the facts; but here there is no proper proof that such a judgment exists. The evidence is this; a person comes forward and says that there are no records in this court baron; but that there was such a trial, and that he, as the officer of the court, issued a levari facias, which he produces, and which is the first and only written evidence of the judgment. That document only recites that there has been a verdict for the plaintiff, but contains no further expression of the will of the Court; the levari facias itself is against the goods of the intestate; but the verdict in no way specifies whether execution is to be de bonis propriis, or against the goods of the intestate. Although the defendant may not be at liberty to plead plene administravit, evidence of it cannot be excluded, because it applies to the issue elongavit vel non. (Vooght v. Winch, 2 B. & A. 662.)

The COURT were of opinion that the proof of the judgment was quite sufficient, it being admitted that there was no precise form proper to the judgments of that Court; there being the virâ voce testimony of the officer that the trial took place in his presence, and that he made an entry of the verdict for the plaintiff; and the levari facias being the customary mode by which that Court expressed what was meant by a verdict for the plaintiff. With regard to the second point, if a plea of plene administravit had been pleaded, it would have been demurrable; and that being so, no evidence in support of such a plea could be read. It was quite obvious that the issue was really on the elongavit. —— Rule discharged.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday.

EDMONDS v. EVANS.—Action for criminal conversation. Plea, Not guilty. A rule nisi having been obtained for leave to add other pleas setting up as a defence that at the time when the grievances complained of were alleged in the declaration to have taken place, a deed of separation had been executed by the plaintiff and his wife; and that they were then, in pursuance of that deed, living separate. The Solicitor-General and C. Clark shewed cause, and contended that the pleas afforded no defence. By the COURT.—This is too doubtful a question to be decided on motion; the pleas may be added, and then their validity can afterwards be questioned. Hawkins, in support of the rule, was not called upon.

Rule absolute, the plaintiff to summon a special jury in London or Middlesex, and the defendant to take short notice of trial.

SILVESTER v. USQUEY.—Rule calling on the plaintiff's attorneys to shew cause why they should not deliver up all the papers in the cause without costs, or why they should not proceed in the action without any costs, or why the plaintiff should not be at liberty to appoint other attorneys; and why his present attorneys should not pay the costs of this application; referred, by consent, at the suggestion of Lord Denman. Watson, Q.C. shewed cause, and Duncan, in support of the rule.

ALCOCK v. NETHERSOLE.—Rule enlarged for a week, that the plaintiff might have time to consider whether he would consent to a reference. Knowles, Q.C. to shew cause. The Solicitor-General and Borill, in support of the rule.

HILTON v. LORD GRANVILLE.—T. F. Ellis, Attorney-General of the Duchy of Lancaster, intimated to the Court that it was the intention of the Queen to have a trial at bar in this case if the rule for a new trial should be made absolute; and applied to the Court to state whether they considered an intimation from him, as Attorney-General of the duchy, sufficient, without any intimation from the law officers of the Crown, mentioning the case of The Duchy of Lancaster (Plowden, 212), in which it was considered that the Crown held the duchy with the personal prerogatives; but, the Solicitor-General being present, the Court thought it would be better to remove all difficulty by receiving the intimation from him. The Solicitor-General accordingly informed the Court that it was her Majesty's intention to have a trial at bar in this case.

COMMON v. FRASER.

Rule to shew cause in chambers on affidavits already made.

GREEN v. BIRCH.—This was an application for a rule to pay certain money to the assignees of the estate of the defendant; in opposition to which it was contended that a writ of error might be brought, which would reverse the judgment in virtue of which the money was due. By the COURT.—We must not take the money out of safe custody to give it to a party who may prove to be not entitled to it.

HALL and WIFE, Executrix, v. SIMPSON.

Rule nisi.

Saturday.

FERRAND v. MILLIGAN.—Trespass quare clausum fregit. Plea—A right of way. Rule for a new trial on the ground of the verdict being against the evidence, discharged. Wortley, Q. C. and Tomlinson shewed cause. Baines, Q. C., Addison, and Ingham, contrà.

HARGREAVES v. WOOD.—Assumpsit on a guarantee. Rule to set aside the verdict on the third plea, which raised a question as to the construction of the guarantee. Wortley, Q. C. and Hoggins, for the plaintiff. Knowles, Q.C. and Cowling, for the defendant. Cur. adv. vult.

BROOKS v. BOCKETT.—Part heard. The argument to be resumed on Saturday next; and Skillbeck v. Garnett, involving a similar point upon the Attorney and Solicitors Act, to be brought on at the same time.

LITTLECHILD v. BANKES.—A note of this case will appear next week.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Thursday, May 29.

DAVEY v. WARNE.

A surveyor, appointed under the 57 Geo. 3, c. 29, (The Metropolitan Paving Act), has no right, under the 75th section of that Act, to remove a ladder placed against a house in his district for the purpose of whitewashing the house. A license granted under the same section to erect a board, scaffolding, &c. at No. 14, Porter-st. does not authorize the licensee to erect one in another street, which forms one of the sides of the house 14, Porter-street.

When an Act of Parliament provides that a plaintiff shall not recover in any action for any thing done under the Act, unless a certain notice shall have been given, the defendant must plead the want of notice, or he cannot avail himself of it.

Action of trespass for seizing and taking divers ladders, washtubs, and whitewash of the plaintiff, whereby plaintiff lost a contract for whitewashing a house in Porter-street.

The first plea was as follows:—

The defendant as to the said trespasses in the declaration mentioned, so far as they relate to two of the said ladders, and to the said cords, says, that after the making and passing of a certain Act of Parliament, made and passed in the session of Parliament holden in the twenty-third year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled, "An Act for better paving, cleansing and lighting the parish of St. Anne, and such part of Cock-lane as lies in the parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, within the liberty of Westminster, and for removing and preventing nuisances therein," and after the making and passing of another Act of Parliament, made and passed in the session of Parliament holden in the fifty-seventh year of the reign of his said late Majesty, King George the Third, intituled, "An Act for better paving, improving, and regulating the streets of the metropolis, and removing and preventing nuisances and obstructions therein," and before the said time, when, &c. in the declaration mentioned, and on the second Thursday in the month of February, A.D. 1843, to wit on the 9th day of February, in the year last aforesaid, the inhabitants of the said parish of Saint Anne, Westminster, then having a right to assemble in the vestry of the said parish, did, according to the power and authority by the said first-mentioned Act of Parliament given, assemble and meet in the vestry-room of the said parish, between the hours of ten in the morning and two in the afternoon of the said last-mentioned day, and did then and there elect and appoint twenty-one persons, namely, Henry Williams, &c. [setting out the names] the same then being householders and resident in the said parish, and assessed to and paying their respective shares of the rates or assessments made by virtue of the first-mentioned Act, to be a committee for the better and more effectually carrying the said first-mentioned Act into execution. And the defendant further says, that at and always from the time of the passing of the said secondly-mentioned Act, the said parish of St. Anne was, and yet is, included within the operation of the said secondly-mentioned Act. And the defendant further says, that after the said appointment of the said twenty-one persons to be commissioners as aforesaid, for the purposes aforesaid, and while they were such commissioners, and after the making of the secondly-mentioned Act, and before the said time when, &c. in the declaration mentioned, to wit on the 10th day of February, A.D. 1843, there then being no surveyor or surveyors of the pavements within the said parish of St. Anne, the said commissioners then being the persons having the control of the pavements of the said parish, so [e]luded as aforesaid, and having then first duly taken and subscribed the oath required by the said first-mentioned Act to be taken by the committee men or commissioners, according to the first-mentioned Act, did, at a certain meeting of the said commissioners, then by them holden, in the vestry-room of the said parish, within fourteen days after they were so chosen, according to the power and authority given to them by the said secondly-mentioned Act in that behalf given, duly and legally appoint the defendant to be the surveyor of the pavements within the said parish of St. Anne, he the defendant, then, at the time of the said last-mentioned appointment, being a competent person in that behalf, and a housekeeper, and having an office within the said parish of St. Anne, which appointment he, the defendant, then accepted, before the said time when, &c. in the declaration mentioned, to wit on the day and year last aforesaid. And the defendant further says, that at the time of the last-mentioned meeting, and at the respective times when they so took the said oath, and so appointed the defendant to be such surveyor, the said commissioners were each of them resident and a householder in the said parish of St. Anne, and assessed to and paying his share of the rates and assessments made by virtue of the said first-mentioned Act, and also seised and possessed of real and personal estate together of the value of 2,000*l.* over and above debts and reprisals, and did not hold any office of profit, and was not in any way interested or concerned in any contract or work to be done in or about the execution of any of the powers of the said first-mentioned Act. And the defendant further says, that under and by virtue of the said last-mentioned appointment, he, the defendant, continued to be and was the surveyor of the pavements within the said parish of St. Anne from the said time when he was so appointed as aforesaid, up to and until, and at and after the said time when, &c. in the declaration mentioned. And the defendant further says, that after his said appointment as such surveyor of the pavements aforesaid, and while he continued such surveyor as aforesaid, and before the said time when, &c. in the declaration mentioned, to wit, on the day and year in the declaration mentioned, he, the plaintiff, did, at No. 14, Porter-street, being a house fronting a street called Porter-street, on one of the sides of the said house, and fronting Newport-court, hereafter [me]ntioned, on one of the other sides of the said house, [w]rongfully and unlawfully, for the purpose of using the same in doing some plasterers' work at the said house, set up in a certain public place in the said parish of St. Anne, and within the jurisdiction of the said secondly mentioned Act, and within the jurisdiction of the said defendant as such surveyor as aforesaid, which said public place then was called Newport-court two of the said ladders in the declaration mentioned, and then so set up the same there that each of the said ladders was so then and there set up in the manner following, that is to say, by tieing the said two ladders together with the cords in the declaration mentioned, and placing the same, so tied, against the said No. 14, Porter-street, in such a manner that one [of] the said ladders then stood upon the ground of Newport-court aforesaid, and was prevented from touching the said No. 14, Porter-street, by reason of its being so tied to the other of the said two ladders; and that the other of the said two ladders rested against the said No. 14, Porter-street, and was supported and prevented from touching the ground by the first-mentioned of the said two ladders, contrary to the form of the said secondly mentioned Act; and then wrongfully and unlawfully, and contrary to the form of the said secondly-mentioned Act, continued the said two ladders so, as aforesaid, wrongfully set up, as aforesaid, in the said public place, as aforesaid, until the defendant, at the said time when, &c. in the declaration mentioned, then and still being the sur[veyor] of the pavements within the said parish for the time being, as such surveyor, in pursuance of the said [se]condly-mentioned Act, in order to pull down and remove the same two ladders and cords, seized and took the said two ladders and the said cords, by which the same were so tied, as aforesaid, and then pulled down, and removed, and carried away the same to a convenient place, and there kept the same until the defendant did, at the request of the plaintiff, restore the said two ladders and cords to the plaintiff, doing no unnecessary damage to the plaintiff on the occasion aforesaid. And the defendant further says, that he was not, at the time of his said appointment to the office of surveyor of the pavements, as aforesaid, nor after such appointment, at any time before or at the said time when, &c. in the declaration mentioned, did he become a commissioner or a trustee or a person having the control of the pavements of the said parish of St. Anne, by virtue of the said first-mentioned Act, or any other local Act or Acts of Parliament, or otherwise, nor a pavior, or mason, or dealer in stones; and that he had not, at the time of such appointment, as aforesaid, or at any time afterwards, before or at the said time when, &c. in the declaration mentioned, any share or interest in any employment or contract for the pavement, or reparation of the pavement, of the said parish of St. Anne, nor in any other public works under the said commissioners, being the persons having such control as aforesaid alone; and that he, the defendant, did not before or at the said time when, &c. in the declaration mentioned, cease to be a housekeeper, or to have an office within the said parish of St. Anne, nor otherwise become disqualified by virtue of the said secondly-mentioned Act.—Verification.

There was another plea to the same effect, justifying the removal of other ladders.

As to the wash-tubs, &c. the defendant pleaded payment of forty shillings into court, and no damages ultra.

To the first plea the plaintiff replied as follows:—Firstly. The plaintiff as to the plea of the defendant by him pleaded as to the trespasses in the declaration mentioned, so far as they relate to two of the said ladders, and to the said cords therein mentioned, says, that the said two ladders, so tied with the said cords, were, just before the said time, when, &c. to wit, on the day and year in the declaration mentioned, necessarily and properly set up, as therein mentioned, for the purpose of doing plasterers' work to and repairing the said house, No. 14, Porter-street, by the leave and license in writing, before the setting up the said two ladders, and before the said time when, &c. to wit, on the 13th day of Dec. A.D. 1843, had and obtained under the hand of the defendant, then being such surveyor as aforesaid, for the purpose of doing the said plasterers' work, and repairing the said house, No. 14, Porter-street, which said license then specified the length of time for which the said ladders when so set up might be continued, to wit, for two days, according to the form of the statute in such case made; and at the said time, when, &c. the said period in the said leave and license specified had not elapsed, and the said ladders were then necessarily and properly set up for the purpose aforesaid, according to the said leave and license.—Verification.

The replication to the second plea was similar to that to the first.

To the third plea, the plaintiff replied that there were damages ultra, upon which issue was joined.

The rejoinders to the replications to the second and third pleas traversed that the said ladders were set up by the leave and license of the defendant, modo et formâ.

Upon this issue was joined.

At the trial before Pollock, C. B. at the sittings in Middlesex, it was proved that a ladder having been set up by the plaintiff on the footway in Newport-court, in the parish of St. Anne, Westminster, against the wall of a house, No. 14, Porter-street, and another having been set up in Porter-street against the house No. 15, in that street, they were both, together with some other things covered by the payment into court, removed by persons acting under the orders of the defendant, who was the surveyor of pavements of the parish of St. Anne, within which the houses were situated, and who was duly appointed under the provisions of the 57 Geo. 3, c. 29, s. 2 (local and personal). Before putting up the ladders it appeared that the plaintiff had applied for a license to the defendant to do so, he believing himself not to be entitled to do so without it. The following leave was accordingly granted:—

"Parish of St. Anne, Westminster.

"I, Edmund Warne, being the surveyor of pavements for the parish of St. Anne, Westminster, do grant Mr. Davey, of 11, Princes-row, this license to erect ladder at No. 14, Porter-street.

"This license is granted by me, the said surveyor, two days; and as soon as the work is completed, the said Davey must give notice in writing thereof to the surveyor of pavements for the time being of the said parish, in order that the paving and other property displaced or injured may be restored by proper workmen under his direction, the expense of which being ascertained, the balance (if any) of the deposit money is to be returned to him, the said Davey.

"This license will be void, and subject the persons to whom it is granted to —— penalties for violations of the law, if he or they at any time neglect to form a board or platform and rail for foot-passengers round such board, and cause the same to be lighted from sunset to sunrise; or if he or they neglect to paint the scaffold-poles and ladder white at least eight feet from the ground upwards, if required so to do; and if the platform and paving adjoining thereto be not kept clean and free from rubbish or other obstruction.

"EDMUND WARNE."

The ladders, however, having been set up, as it appeared to the defendant, in places and in a manner not warranted by the license, he ordered them to be removed. It was contended by the plaintiff at the trial, that as to the ladder set up against the house No. 14, Porter-street, that at all events was within the meaning of the license, which must be taken to authorize the putting it up against any part of the house itself, whether upon the side in Porter-street, or upon that in Newport-court. It was contended for the defendant that the license was to be construed strictly, and could only authorize the setting up the ladder in Porter-street itself. It was also contended that the defendant was entitled to notice of action under the statute, and that the notice which had been given being insufficient, the defendant was entitled to succeed on that ground, although he had not pleaded the want of notice. The learned judge was of opinion that the license did not warrant the putting up the ladders either in Newport-court against the house in 14, Porter-street, nor in Porter-street against No. 15, and the defendant had a verdict.

Humfrey having obtained a rule for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, or for judgment non obstante veredicto, upon the first and second issues,

Jervis and Monteith now shewed cause.—The Lord Chief Baron was right. A license of this sort is to be construed strictly for the public benefit. If this had been a hoard instead of a ladder, Newport-court might have been stopped altogether. [ROLFE, B.—Would not a license to erect a ladder against Covent Garden authorize you to erect one in Bow-street against the wall of the theatre?] The question is, whether this is a description of the house, or of the place where the ladder is to be put. There is another point to the advantage of which the defendant is entitled on this motion. The statute 57 Geo. 3, c. 29, s. 132, requires a notice to be given twenty-one days before the commencement of any action for any thing done in pursuance of this Act, signed by the attorney for the plaintiff, and provides that no person shall recover in any such action, unless the notice has been given. No such notice has been given here. It is not signed by the attorney. [ALDERSON, B.—Can you take advantage of that without having pleaded it?] I submit that the Act requires the evidence to be given in every case, whether it is pleaded or not. (Wagstaffe v. Sharpe, 3 M. & W. 521; Wills v. Langridge, 5 A. & E. 383.)

Humfrey, contrà.—The case of Wagstaffe v. Sharpe was decided upon the construction of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 194, of which the language is very much stronger than that of the present Act. The language of the 21st section of that Act is, "that no apothecary shall be allowed to recover any charges claimed by him in any court of law unless such apothecary shall prove on the trial that he was in practice as an apothecary before the 5th of August 1815, or that he has obtained a certificate to practise as an apothecary from the Master Wardens and Society of Apothecaries." The statute now under consideration only makes it necessary that the notice shall have been given, but it leaves the question whether it has been so or not to be properly raised by the pleadings. It does not require the proof whether it is a matter in issue or not. Notwithstanding the stronger language of the statute cited in Wagstaffe v. Sharpe, the Court there had very great doubts about the question raised. Parke, B. there said in his judgment, "This case has been the subject of much consideration, but we have at length come to the conclusion, that as this is only a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, we are bound by the decision in the Court of King's Bench in Shearwood v. Hay, and Wills v. Langridge, however great the doubt which some of the members of the Court may feel as to the propriety of that decision." It is submitted that, in the present case, no advantage of the want of notice could be taken without a plea to that effect. It is also submitted that the license did justify the placing the ladder in Newport-court. The words, "No. 14, Porter-street," are a mere description of the house, and the license was sufficient to enable the plaintiff to place his ladder against any part of the house or on any side of it. Lastly, the plea is bad. It attempts to set up a justification under the 75th section of the 57 Geo. 3, c. 29, which, after prohibiting the setting up of certain things therein specified, authorizes the surveyor of pavements to pull them down if erected. The words of the section are, "That no person or persons whomsoever shall erect, place, set up, or build in any street or other public place, in any parochial or other district within the jurisdiction of this Act, at any time or times hereafter, any hoard or scaffolding, or place or erect any posts, bars, rails, boards, or other thing by way of inclosure for the purpose of making mortar, or of depositing or sifting, screening or slacking any bricks, stone, lime, sand, or any other materials for building or reparing any house or other tenement or erection, or for other works, or for any other purpose, without leave or license first had and obtained under the hand of the surveyor," &c. A ladder is not included among the things prohibited. If the Court is of this opinion, the plaintiff will be content with judgment non obstante veredicto, and will not press for a new trial.

He was here stopped by the Court.

ALDERSON, B.—It seems to me that the Act of Parliament extends to inclosures only. It extends to hoards and scaffoldings eo nomine, and to other matters if they are inclosures. With respect to the notice, we are all of opinion that the want of it ought to have been pleaded. It is an important point, and I believe we have no doubt about it. On the other point we have no doubt that the Lord Chief Baron was right. The public are entitled to be protected. Suppose this had been a hoard or a scaffolding, the public might have been quite excluded from Newport-court. It might have been stopped up. These notices must be strictly construed for the good of the public.

Rule absolute for judgment non obstante veredicto.

SMITH v. ROCKE.

Action on an attorney's bill.

An attorney who had been retained to conduct the defence of an action brought against a party, obtained a verdict for his client; a rule for a new trial was subsequently obtained, but two assizes having passed without any further step being taken by the plaintiff to proceed to a second trial, the attorney sent in his bill of costs, which the defendant promised to pay. Held, that this was reasonable notice to his client of his intention to determine the contract between them and to retire from the further conduct of the suit, and that the promise to pay the bill was a concurrence by the defendant to the termination of the relation of attorney and client which had subsisted between them.

This was an action of debt for an attorney's bill.

Pleas—Money paid, and Never indebted.

The plaintiff had a verdict for 62*l.* with leave for the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit. It appeared that some time in 1843 an action was brought against the present defendant by a person named Bell, whereupon the defendant retained the present plaintiff, Smith, to defend the action. In the course of the cause, Smith made an admission which was in some degree prejudicial to his client's case, and might, it was said, have lost him the verdict; but, notwithstanding that, the defendant had a verdict; a rule nisi for a new trial was afterwards obtained, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence, and this rule was ultimately made absolute, on payment of costs, but no steps were taken by the plaintiff to take down the cause for trial again; and, consequently, after the lapse of two assizes (it being a country cause), the present plaintiff sent in his bill of costs to the defendant for defending the action, which the defendant promised to pay as soon as he could get 50*l.* or 60*l.*; but said "money was then very scarce with him." No payment, however, being made, the present action was brought, and a verdict taken for the full amount of the plaintiff's claim. The present rule was obtained on the ground that the plaintiff had been guilty of negligence, in making admissions which had prejudiced his client's case, and also that the contract between an attorney and his client was an entire one, and that the attorney could not sustain an action for his bill of costs in a suit until that suit was brought to an end.

J. Gray now shewed cause, and contended that, as to the charge of negligence in the attorney, that could not be sustained, as he had got a verdict for his client, and therefore it could not be said that he had received no benefit. Then, as to the question of the entirety of contract, it may be admitted that where an attorney commences a suit, he is bound to carry it on to its termination, unless he give his client reasonable notice of his intention not to proceed further with it; but here, it is contended that the delivery of the bill was a notice to the client that the attorney did not intend to go on with the case, and the promise to pay the bill must, it is submitted, be taken to be an assent by the client to the attorney's withdrawal from the suit. Then it was done at a very reasonable time, just after the summer assize, when the cause could not be taken down for trial by the plaintiff until the next spring, and there was, therefore, plenty of time for the defendant to retain a fresh attorney.

Cases cited: Harris v. Osborn (2 Cromp. & M. 629); Vansandau v. Browne (1 Bing. 402).

Godson, Q. C. and Hugh Hill, in support of the rule.—First, there has been no sufficient notice to the client of the attorney's intention to determine the contract between them. He ought to have informed the client that the next step in the cause was to take the cause down by proviso, but that he did not intend doing so, or proceeding further with the suit. He should have given reasonable notice of his intention to withdraw from the suit. [PLATT, B.—What would you call reasonable notice?] Why, he should have said, "You may try by proviso. I shall not do so for you; pay me my costs." [ALDERSON, B.—Surely the delivery of the bill is both giving notice that he will not proceed further and asking for costs. POLLOCK, C. B.—What could the attorney do more in the way of demanding money? Here was a bill delivered and a promise to pay without there being any duress.] But it is submitted that the mere delivery of the bill will not put an end to the contract, for the whole question is, was this contract put an end to? And it is contended that this was a continuing contract until there should be an express notice by the attorney that he would not go on further with the suit. Then he was guilty of negligence. [ALDERSON, B.—It is a strange thing to say that an attorney has been guilty of negligence who wins the verdict.] Then he should at all events have informed his client what was the next step in the cause. Here no advice whatever is given, and no sufficient notice of the intention to withdraw.

Case cited: Nicholls v. Wilson (11 M. & W. 106).

By the COURT.—This rule must be discharged. There is no question as to the general rule of law that an attorney is bound to carry on a suit to its termination, unless he give reasonable notice to his client of his intention to retire from the further conduct of it; but then is there such reasonable notice here? We think there was. It is reasonable to infer from the conduct of the parties that there was an agreement between the parties that the relation of attorney and client which had existed between them should be put an end to. Here a bill is delivered at a very proper time, when there was a pause in the suit, and there is a promise to pay that bill; the client was not put in any difficulty, but had ample time to supply the place of the attorney before any other step in the cause could be taken, if any ever should be, which seems very doubtful, from the fact of the plaintiff having let two assizes pass without attempting to proceed. Then as to the supposed negligence, the attorney won the verdict, and the admission complained of was only in the cause, and would not affect a second trial. The rule must therefore be discharged. Rule discharged.

LAURENCE v. CLARKE.

Notice to produce.

A notice to produce a bill of exchange (which was declared on, but was not in issue in the cause) was served at the attorney's office in Oxford-street at half-past eight the night before the trial of the cause in London:—Held, insufficient. Held also, that the defendant could not refer to the bill in any way at the trial without having given a notice to produce it.

This was an action by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange. There was no plea denying the acceptance. At the trial, the defendant proposed to give evidence of the circumstances under which the bill was given; but it was objected that could not be done, as the defendant could give secondary evidence of or refer to the bill without having given a notice to produce the note. A notice was then put in and read, when it appeared to be headed "in the Common Pleas" instead of the Exchequer, and that it was only served at half-past eight on the night before the trial, the service not being personal, but merely by leaving at the office of the attorney in Oxford-street. The client lived in London. The learned judge who tried the cause held this notice to be bad, and refused to admit the evidence, and the plaintiff had a verdict.

Petersdorff having obtained a rule nisi for a new trial on the ground of the rejection of evidence,

Jervis, Q.C. now shewed cause, and contended that the notice to produce was clearly bad and insufficient on two grounds; 1st, for being entitled in the Common Pleas instead of the Exchequer; and, 2nd, that it was not served in time. Here the bill was not in issue, as there was no plea denying the acceptance; therefore the attorney was not bound to have it, and should have had some time given him to communicate with his client, which it was not shewn that he had here, as it did not appear that the notice had ever come to his hands. The notice was not sworn to be served until half-past eight on the night before the trial, and this was only by leaving it at the office; and it might be that the attorney went straight to the court the next morning, without going to his office, as his cause was first.

Wordsworth, same side.

Cases cited: Harvey v. Morgan (2 Starkie, 19); Byrne v. Harvey (2 M. & R. 89); Holt v. Miers (9 C. & P. 191).

Petersdorff, in support of his rule.—This was a notice not to produce papers which it was probable the client might have, but the very bill declared on, and there was quite sufficient notice to the attorney by leaving this notice to produce at his office the evening before the trial. [ALDERSON, B.—I think this is not a sufficient service. It is stated to be "by leaving at the attorney's office" at half-past eight the night before the trial, and may have been by putting it under the door. The question is, has the party had reasonable notice? I think he has not. I do not express any opinion on the point put, as to the notice being entitled in the Common Pleas instead of the Exchequer; but I think this service was not in time.] Then it is submitted that no notice was necessary. The evidence proposed to be given was not parol evidence of the contents of the bill, but merely of facts which took place at the time it was given. [Rolfe, B.—That is, you wanted to prove that at the time a certain paper writing was given, certain concomitant circumstances took place, and then you seek to refer to that piece of paper writing, which is in the hands of th other party, without having given him notice to pr luce it; how can you do that?] It is submitted that there dmission of the existence of the bill on the pleadings by both parties.

By the Court.—If the party wished to refer to the bill, he should have given a proper and reasonable notice to produce it; he has not done that, and therefore we think the evidence was properly rejected. The referring to the note in any way is seeking to give parol evidence of its contents; that he could not do, and therefore this rule must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

Thursday, June 12.

Lumley v. Dubourg.

The plaintiff had discharged a rule for judgment, as in case of a nonsuit, upon giving a peremptory undertaking to try at the next sittings. He took all the necessary steps and duly entered his cause, although it was low down in the list. The cause was, ultimately, from press of business, made a remanet to the next sittings. The defendant had obtained judgment, as in case of a nonsuit, on the ground that the plaintiff had not proceeded to trial in pursuance of his undertaking: Held, that, under those circumstances, the defendant was not entitled to judgment, and that the Court would enlarge the plaintiff's undertaking.

The plaintiff not having proceeded to trial in due time, the defendant had applied for and obtained a rule for judgment, as in case of a nonsuit, which had been discharged on the plaintiff's giving a peremptory undertaking to try at the next sittings in Middlesex. The cause was duly set down pursuant to the undertaking, but it stood late in the list, and owing to the press of business, was not tried, but was made a remanet. The defendant then obtained a rule absolute for judgment, as in case of a nonsuit, on reading the previous rule.

Hoggins afterwards obtained a rule to set aside the judgment and other proceedings taken pursuant to that rule.

Ogle now shewed cause, citing Ward v. Turner (5 Dowl. 21); 14 Geo. 2, c. 17.

Hoggins, contrà, citing Gilbert v. Kirkland (2 Dowl. 153).

By the Court.—The rule must be absolute. The plaintiff has done all in his power to proceed to trial, and has only been prevented by the act of the Court.

Rule absolute.

Re Carus Wilson.

Fry mentioned this case again, and inquired whether the Court had come to any conclusion upon the point raised yesterday, whether a habeas corpus in this case might be made returnable at chambers. The Court, however, said that they had had an opportunity since yesterday of looking into the affidavits, and they were not of opinion that this was a case in which, upon the merits, a habeas corpus ought to issue.

Writ refused.

Froude and Wife v. Towell.

Account stated.

A letter offering to pay a certain sum of money discharge of a disputed account, followed by a tender of the sum, which is refused, is not evidence of an account stated.

Debt.—The declaration contained a count for the use and hire of a boat, and also a count upon an account stated.

At the trial before Wightman, J. at the last Wiltshire Summer Assizes, the plaintiff failed to prove the letting to hire of the boat, and relied upon the following evidence to support the account stated:—

First, a letter written by the defendant to the female plaintiff, before she married the other plaintiff, in which he says—

"You had better let Thomas have the boat and horse, and I will give you the odds of money. I let William have 5*l.* when he bought the first boat, and 30*l.* when he bought this; and paid Mr. Theobald for the clothes. You can have the money as you want it."

The following letter was then put in, written by the defendant's attorney to the plaintiff's attorney; and the defendant's attorney proved that it was written by the defendant's direction:—

"Mr. Powell has brought me your letter, and stated to me the circumstances respecting it. At the time of his son's decease he was indebted to Mr. Powell in a sum of 42*l.* advanced him for the particular purpose of investing in the purchase of the boat. After his decease, Mr. Powell sent two persons to the widow, who gave up the boat to them on Mr. Powell's account—the widow consenting to receive the balance of the value of the boat after deducting his debt. The boat has been valued by a competent person, and Mr. Powell has caused to be tendered the difference so agreed to be received; he has therefore acted an honest and upright part, and he is willing to pay a properly authorized party the difference which the widow has refused."

A witness was called, who proved that by the defendant's direction he made a tender of 24*l.* the balance of the boat, to the female plaintiff, which she refused.

Verdict for defendant, with liberty to move to enter verdict for plaintiff, with 24*l.* damages, if Court shall be of opinion there was any evidence to go to the jury upon an account stated.

Cockburn Q. C. afterwards obtained a rule accordingly.

Crowder, Q. C. shewed cause, and Cockburn not being present, the Court discharged the rule; but upon application they consented to re-open it, and hear Cockburn, who was now heard in support of the rule, citing Knowles and Others v. Michel (13 East, 250); Highmore v. Primrose (5 M. & S. 65); Tucker v. Barrow (7 B. & C. 623); Wayman v. Hilliard (7 Bing. 101).

Pollock, C. B.—I do not see any reason whatever for varying the judgment of the Court that the rule should be discharged. I have no doubt any distinct admission of a particular sum as due will be sufficient. That is not the case here. The only admission here is an offer to pay a certain sum if the other party will take it, which she refused to do. You might as well say a tender, not accepted, would be evidence of an account stated.

Alderson, B.—Here is a tender of 24*l.* refused. Surely it would violate all one's ideas of common sense if that were held to be an account stated.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

ON ERRORS FROM THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

(Argued Feb. 3: determined June 14, 1845.)

Before Tindal, C. J., Parke, Alderson, Rolfe, and Platt, BB., and Coltman, Maule, and Cresswell, JJ.)

Scott v. Wedlake, Administrator.

A plea of ne unques administrator should conclude with a verification, and not to the country.

2. A judgment that the writ be quashed on a demurrer to such a plea is erroneous.

This case arose on a demurrer to the plea, which plea the Court below thought good and sufficient in law.

Atherton now appeared in support of the writ of error and of the demurrer, and contended that the plea had improperly concluded with a verification instead of to the country.

The action was brought against the defendant as administratrix, with the will annexed, of one Thomas Wedlake, and the declaration contained two counts, the first of which was on a promissory note made by the deceased, and the second on an account stated with him. To this declaration the defendant pleaded that she was not and never had been administratrix of the goods and chattels of the deceased, and the plea concluded with a verification. The plaintiff thereupon demurred specially on the following grounds:—That if the plea was to be taken as merely denying that the defendant ever was administratrix at all, or liable as such, the plea improperly concluded with a verification, and ought to have concluded to the country; that if the said plea was to be taken as alleging that although in point of fact the defendant was once administratrix, but that in point of law she had ceased to be so at the time when the plea was pleaded, or that at the time when that plea was pleaded she had ceased to be liable as administratrix, yet the plea was bad for uncertainty, as not shewing how and in what manner the defendant ceased to be administratrix, or to be liable as such, and likewise bad for duplicity, in insisting on such defence, and also in denying that the defendant ever was administratrix. That the said plea was informal and repugnant, because it did not expressly admit or deny that the defendant was administratrix at the time when the action was commenced. That the said plea raised an immaterial issue, namely, whether the defendant was administratrix at the time or when that plea was pleaded; and, lastly, that it was repugnant and informal in saying that the defendant was not (that is at the time when that plea was pleaded) administratrix in manner and form as in the declaration alleged, the declaration containing no such allegation; the Court below gave judgment that the writ be quashed.

Atherton first objected that the judgment so entered was erroneous, as the plea was in bar, and not in abatement, and therefore it was wrong to adjudge that the writ be quashed. He then maintained the demurrer. The Court below decided that the words "is not" in the plea are words of surplusage. But these words cannot be so rejected. They refer to the time of the plea. (De Brit v. Papillon, 1 East, 502.) The administratrix may not have been so at the time of the writ, but have become so since, and therefore the allegation "never hath been" would be improper and insufficient to meet the case. If the replication omitted to traverse the words "is not," it would be bad. (Dendy v. Powell, 3 M. & W. 444.) The plea ought to have concluded to the country. It amounted to a traverse of the character ascribed to the defendant. The Court below thought the precedents warranted the conclusion with a verification, but all the precedents are cases of executors. There is no form of ne unques administrator in the old books. Atherton referred to Co. En. 144 a.; Rastell, 322, 330; Winch, 341.

Corrie, contrà, said there was a form for an administrator in Rastell, 321.

Atherton.—It is very true that Mr. Chitty gives the conclusion for the administrator with a verification (3 Pleading, 808, 6th edition); but he had inadvertently forgotten the distinction between the case of an executor and administrator. In the former case the plea not only avers that the defendant never was executor, but also that he "never administered" any of the goods of the testator, and the replication must negative both allegations. New matter is therefore clearly introduced in that case. But here the replication is merely a repetition of the declaration that the defendant was administratrix. This distinction is recognised by Fowler v. Cooke (1 Salk. 297). Here there is no new matter alleged in the plea.

Corrie, contrà, said, first, that it was only a plea in abatement (Com. Dig. "Pleader," 2 D. 12, and 2nd); that whether the defendant be named executor or administrator, was immaterial; it was a mere name of office—a wrongful intermeddler may be termed an executor. It is a mere allegation that the party is the representative of the deceased. This is an exception to the general rule of a traverse concluding to the country, and is good on precedent. The plea of liberum tenementum in trespass concludes with a verification, though it is an argumentative traverse. When the traverse includes all the declaration like non assumpsit, it must conclude to the country; but when it selects part of the declaration, with a verification. The plea would be bad if it did not include something not in the declaration. The time between the writ and the declaration must be included. An executor and administrator are one—and the allegation that the defendant never administered is mere surplusage.

Atherton, in reply, said that if there is an identity between an executor and administrator, the precedent of the former must be followed, and the plea must allege that the defendant never administered, which would clearly be introducing new matter.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Saturday, June 7.
(Before Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.)
Re YATES, a Bankrupt.
Postponing certificate.

Where a bankrupt, under the excitement of liquor, had given another party an I O U to enable him to prove against his estate, but, on the proof being tendered, the bankrupt came up and opposed the proof, stating to the Court the circumstance, the Court will, nevertheless, postpone the granting of the certificate for twelve months.

This bankrupt had been in partnership with another party, and both had become bankrupt. Under the separate estate of the bankrupt, the assets were more than sufficient to pay twenty shillings in the pound; but there was scarcely any thing for the joint creditors. At the last meeting, which was a meeting to declare a final dividend on the separate estate of the bankrupt, a party appeared to prove a debt on two I O U's, amounting together to 27*l.* The bankrupt having heard that this party was about to prove on the I O U's, came up from a distance to oppose the proof. In examination he stated that the party, whom he had previously known, came to him some time since, and proposed to give him the I O U's dated previous to the bankruptcy, to enable him to prove, and that the amount he received upon such proof should be divided between the bankrupt and himself; the bankrupt at first refused, but afterwards, having been supplied with drink by the party, he consented, and gave the two I O U's, dated previous to the bankruptcy. The solicitor for the assignees, upon being asked by the Commissioner whether he had any thing to say against the granting of the certificate, said he had not, and recommended the bankrupt to the merciful consideration of the Court, he being a young man.

His HONOUR said, I don't think I ought to pass such a fraud. Am I to grant to this bankrupt, the same benefit I should to an honest man? or ought I to grant on the score of compassion that which I should not on the score of justice? I shall postpone the certificate for twelve months.

(Before Mr. Commissioner EVANS.)
Ex parte the ASSIGNEES of PAGE, a bankrupt.

A party summoned to this Court to admit a debt due from him as administrator to his late partner, cannot set off against such claim a debt due from the plaintiff to him as surviving partner.

This was a summons issued on behalf of the assignees of Page, a bankrupt, under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 11, calling upon defendant, as administrator to his father, to shew cause why he should not admit a debt alleged to be due from his father to the estate of the bankrupt. The sum claimed was for work done by the bankrupt for the father of the defendant. The defendant and his father were in partnership; and the bankrupt and the firm had for some time previous to the bankruptcy, and also previous to the death of the father, which happened about the same time, had mutual dealings. The bankrupt was indebted to the firm for goods sold in a larger amount than that now claimed by his assignee against the defendant. The defendant claimed, as administrator to his father's estate, and as surviving partner of the firm, to set off the debt due from the bankrupt's estate to the firm, against the debt due from his father to the bankrupt.

Sturgeon, for the assignees, contended that they were entitled to payment from the defendant, as administrator to his father's estate, of the sum claimed for work done for the father on his private account; and although the bankrupt, no doubt, intended to set off the one demand against the other, yet the set-off could not be allowed against the assignees, but the defendant must prove against the bankrupt's estate in respect of the debt due to the firm.

His HONOUR.—The defendant, as administrator to his father, cannot insist on a set-off, or refuse to pay the amount claimed. Although mutual credit between the firm and the bankrupt appears to have been intended, that intention cannot be acted upon in this court, no agreement to that effect having been made. The defendant cannot set off the debt due to him as surviving partner against the debt due from him as administrator to his father. There cannot be a set-off where the debts are in auter droit.

(Before Mr. Commissioner FANE.)
In the matter of SAWYER, an Insolvent Debtor.

Where a party has taken advantage of his position as an attorney fraudulently to obtain money from a client, the Court will visit him with the utmost extent of punishment allowed by law in cases of fraud. The proviso in the 28th sec. of 7 & 8 Vict. cap. 96, "that no debtor shall be imprisoned on any process for more than twelve calendar months," does not give authority to the Court of Bankruptcy to release an insolvent at the expiration of that time.

This case was heard some time since, when the Court took time to consider.

His HONOUR now gave judgment.—This was an application by James Sawyer, an attorney, for an order to be made under the 28th section of the Insolvent Act of 1844, to protect him from being further detained in prison. The insolvent has given in a list of debts, to the amount of 6,622*l.* and a list of assets, which up to this time have produced nothing. [It is unnecessary to state the facts from which the Court arrived at the conclusion that the insolvent had been guilty of fraudulent practices towards his client.] The question is, what course I ought to pursue to act in accordance with the 28th section of the Act of last year; and I consider that, in a case of such gross fraud, where an attorney avails himself of the confidence which his client reposes in him as a friend and capable adviser, to cheat that client, and more particularly where, as in this case, the cheat operates upon the greatest portion of the unfortunate client's means of subsistence, I ought to shew the utmost severity which the legislature appears to have sanctioned. I have looked into the Insolvent Debtors' Court Act, and I find by the 78th section of that Act, that where a prisoner has contracted a debt by means of fraudulent pretences, he is nevertheless to be released from prison, at the latest, after having undergone two years' imprisonment; the legislature therefore has, as I conceive, sanctioned the doctrine that for no fraud, however gross, shall a man be kept in prison for more than two years, unless indicted and convicted; and in submission to that view, I will make a protecting order on the 4th day of April, 1846, when the insolvent will have lain in prison two years, and will then, if applied to, make an order under the 29th section for his release. I cannot release the insolvent under the proviso at the end of the 28th section, because that proviso does not give any authority to the Court of Bankruptcy.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

Re DRURY.

Where an insolvent's petition has been twice dismissed on mere technical objections, the Court will allow him to petition a third time.

This insolvent came up for his first hearing, when Higgins, attorney, of Bath, stated that two previous petitions in this court had been dismissed. It was a great hardship to creditors to be brought so repeatedly before the Court.

Stone, for the insolvent, said that the two former petitions had been dismissed on purely technical grounds; the first dismissal was in consequence of the omission of a creditor, the last was in consequence of the insolvent's not having complied with an order of the Court to furnish an account, which non-compliance arose from the neglect of the insolvent's solicitor, who had not made out the account as ordered; and the insolvent's counsel was then unable to explain the cause of its absence.

His HONOUR assented to this, and the hearing proceeded. On Higgins stating that he was not then prepared to go into his case, a day was named for the final order.

Wednesday, June 11.
Ex parte REES, re SCOWCROFT.

A mortagee may give up his security, and prove the mortgage debt four years after the bankruptcy, without accounting for the rents and profits, where no proof can be given that he had ever taken possession, as mortgagee, of the mortgaged premises, even where the mortgage was made to him as trustee for the bankrupt's wife under her settlement, and the bankrupt's wife has remained with her husband in possession of the mortgaged premises since the date of the mortgage.

Greville, solicitor, applied to file a proof of 1,000*l.* for money advanced to the bankrupt by the Rev. William Rees, as trustee for the bankrupt's wife, under a marriage settlement produced to the Court, for which sum the said trustee held no security, save and except a certain indenture of mortgage, which was offered to be given up to the assignees for the benefit of the estate.

Homes, for the assignees, objected to the proof. The marriage settlement produced contained a power to advance 1,000*l.* at the request, in writing, of the bankrupt, upon security of a farm called Robleston, of which the bankrupt had a beneficial lease. The money had been advanced in July 1840, about six months before the date of the fiat; and the mortgage produced and now offered to be given up was dated in December 1840, only eighteen days before the date of the fiat. The assignees never disputed the validity of the mortgage, but had allowed Mr. Rees to take possession of the mortgaged property in trust for Mrs. Scowcroft, the bankrupt's wife, and she had been residing on the farm, receiving the profits thereof uninterruptedly from the date of the fiat until the present time, upwards of four years. The lease so mortgaged to Mr. Rees had now become nearly valueless, and Mr. Rees therefore wished to give up the mortgage, and prove his whole debt without accounting for the receipts in the meantime arising from the mortgaged property. Homes submitted that, before the proof could be received, the mortgagee should account for the profits of the farm in the usual manner of mortgagees in possession, up to the time of the security being given up to the assignees. Greville denied that Mr. Rees had ever taken possession of the farm as mortgagee; the mortgage-deed had always been in possession of Scowcroft, the bankrupt, and was not executed by Rees, the mortgagee. Mr. and Mrs. Scowcroft had been in possession, by permission of the assignees, in the same way as they possessed the farm before the mortgage; and Rees had never done any act equivalent to taking possession as mortgagee. The possession of Scowcroft and his wife was no possession by Rees as mortgagee. Homes proved the payment of rent on one occasion after the mortgage by Rees, to the landlord of the farm. Greville said this was merely an advance by Rees of the money for the payment of the rent, and was never intended in any way as an act of ownership as tenant in possession of the farm. Scowcroft himself had paid the rent since, and the single payment made by Rees was only an advance of the rent for Scowcroft.

His HONOUR.—Under these circumstances, I think the assignees have failed to make out their case of the mortgagee having taken possession. The proof is simply for the principal debt (which it appears was actually advanced by Rees), and not for any interest on that debt. If the assignees think they can shew by any other evidence that Rees actually took possession as mortgagee, I will adjourn the proof at the expense of the estate; otherwise the proof will be received.

Proof received.

Friday, June 13.
Re INIGHT.

Where an insolvent, having obtained leave to amend his schedule, inserts items which clearly shew that the former schedule was wilfully false, the petition will be dismissed.

The Court will retain jurisdiction over a petition whenever it is desirable for the creditors to do so, notwithstanding a case has been made out for dismissal.

In this case, the first hearing had been adjourned for the insolvent to amend his balance-sheet. The former balance-sheet contained an item of expenditure set down at 10s. a week for 194 weeks, but in the amended balance-sheet, the insolvent had entered the same item, for the same period, at 15s. a week.

Homes, for an opposing creditor, contended that the leave to amend the balance-sheet was given in order that the insolvent might insert therein some additional information to his creditors, but the amended account contained matter which completely falsified the former balance-sheet; if it had been proved on the first hearing that this item ought to have been 15s. instead of 10s. a week, the petition would have been dismissed, for such a variance extending over so long a period as 194 weeks, could not have been accidental, but must have been wilful. Leave to amend, except in cases of mistake, does not mean leave to contradict entirely the former matter stated; the items in the amended balance-sheet should be more minute, more in detail, than, and elucidatory of, the former account, but certainly not inconsistent with it. By this amended balance-sheet, it is clear that the former one contained a statement wilfully false. Homes also pointed out another item, which had been inserted in the amended account, and could not have been accidentally omitted in the former one.

His HONOUR.—The order to amend was certainly not intended to give the insolvent permission to insert items shewing that the former account was false. The petition must be dismissed.

Packwood, solicitor for a creditor, asked the Court to adjourn the final order sine die, as it would be beneficial to the creditors to retain jurisdiction over the estate.

His HONOUR consented, and then, instead of dismissing the petition, refused to name any day for the final order, directing that insolvent should not be permitted to apply for another hearing for six weeks.

Circuit Reports.

SPRING ASSIZES. NORFOLK CIRCUIT.
Cambridge, March, 1845.
(Before Mr. Baron PARKE.)
DOE dem. WHITE v. OKEY.

Landlord and tenant—Ejectment—Agreement of demise—Notice to quit.

Where an agreement of demise for a year, from the 25th March preceding its date in June, of two cottages and pasture land, requires six months' notice of determination, that notice must follow the general rule, and expire at the end of the current year, though there is a clause for the payment of a proportionate part of the rent reserved for any time less than a year that the tenant shall occupy the premises.

Ejectment for the recovery of two cottages and a close of pasture land.

It appeared from the evidence of the plaintiff, that the defendant, being in the occupation of the premises in question, entered into an agreement with the lessor of the plaintiff for the further enjoyment of the same, of which the following is a copy:—

"Memorandum of an agreement made and entered into this 25th day of June, 1842, between Hamilton White, of Grantchester, in the county of Cambridge, of one part, and James Okey, of the same place, of the other, whereby the said H. W. hath agreed to let to the said J. O. and the said J. O. hath agreed to hire all that, &c. as the same are now in the occupation of the said J. O. for one year, from the 25th of March last, and so on from year to year, until this agreement shall be determined by one of the said parties giving, in the first or any subsequent year, to the other of them, six months' notice in writing for that purpose, at and under the clear yearly rent of 30*l.* payable half-yearly, viz. on the 29th September, and 25th March, or a proportionate part thereof for any time less than a year that the said J. O. shall occupy the said premises."

The defendant remained in the occupation of the demised premises till the 23rd of July, 1844, on which day the lessor of the plaintiff, deeming that he was enabled so to do, under the peculiar terms of their agreement, gave to him a notice to quit, determinable on the 1st of February, 1845, being a short period over six months. The defendant, however, contending that he was entitled to the usual notice determinable at the end of the current year, refused to give up the premises, whereupon this action was brought.

Byles, Serjt. (with whom was O'Malley), in opening the case to the jury, contended that the agreement reserving a proportionate part of the rent for any time less than a year that the tenant might occupy the premises, contemplated the power of putting an end to the tenancy by six months' notice, which might determine at any period of the year.

Gunning, contrà, for the defendant.—The lessor of the plaintiff must be called. There is nothing in this case to obviate the necessity of a six months' notice, to expire at the end of the current year of the tenancy created thereby. It is, indeed, contended that this agreement is taken out of the general rule by reason of the clause for the payment of the rent or any proportionate part thereof for any time less than a year which the defendant might occupy the demised premises; but it is apprehended that there are two clear answers to that argument. The habendum, in the first place, dates from "March last," a period of three months anterior to the date of the instrument, and the parties might very well, under such circumstances, contemplate the power of putting an end to the tenancy at the expiration of the first year, in which case, under this peculiar clause, there would only be nine months' rent to be paid in the first year, though the holding would commence from the March, and would therefore extend over the whole year. This might very well be the meaning of the parties, for they use the expression, "occupy the premises," with the view, no doubt, of regulating the payment of rent. This, however, does not at all militate against the application of the general rule which regulates the proper period for giving notices to quit; for though the parties here might contemplate the cessation of the tenancy at the end of the first year, it does not at all follow that they intended to waive the right to six months' notice, determinable at the end of the first year as well as at any subsequent one, as, indeed, the agreement says. In the next place, it might be that this peculiar clause was introduced because the parties contemplated putting an end to the tenancy by mutual agreement. In such a case that clause might be introduced to guard against the tenant's refusal to pay a rent proportionate to the actual duration of occupation, by saying that the time for paying rent had not yet arrived, while it would, in like manner, protect him from any attempt on the part of the landlord to make him pay rent for the whole half-year, because he had occupied the premises during a part of it. Now the courts all lean to the necessity of bringing the expiration of tenancies to the end of their current year, and even where there is a quarterly payment of rent reserved and notice, it has been held that the notice must expire at the end of the current year. In either of the cases just put, the words of the lease would be satisfied without any interference with the general rule of law as to the proper period for the termination of the notice to quit. The words of the agreement are clear both as to the necessity for a six months' notice and as to the habendum, and the only peculiar passage refers to the time for the payment of the rent; so that, on the whole, it is submitted that the proper notice has not been given in this case, and that the defendant must have a verdict.

PARKE, B.—My present impression is, that the six months' notice ought to expire at the end of the current year according to the usual rule, and that the clause as to the proportionate rent refers only to the first year.

Byles, Serjt. submitted that the action was well brought, and that the notice had been properly given under this agreement. The defendant's counsel admits, by his first proposition, that the usual principle does not govern this case, as the current year means the current year of the term, and the clause is for any part of a year.

PARKE, B.—No. The agreement is well satisfied by Mr. Gunning's argument on the first point raised by him in objection to the sufficiency of this notice. There is a demise for a year on the face of the agreement, which is in truth but one for nine months, with a proviso for six months' notice, and to that case the clause relating to the proportionate rent is applicable.

Byles, Serjt.—Neither is the second argument tenable, for the termination of the tenancy by agreement would not require any reference to the terms of the lease. An agreement would, of course, introduce special terms.

PARKE, B.—That may be: but my opinion is, and strongly so, that the agreement is to be construed to mean a notice determinable at the end of the current year, otherwise the tenancy might be determined in a manner which would work injustice to one party or the other by the capricious selection of the period at which the notice might be given. Under these circumstances, I shall direct a verdict for the defendant. Verdict for the defendant.

NISI PRIUS COURT.

Bury St. Edmunds.

(Before Mr. Justice PATTESON.)

REGINA v. WELHAM.

Misdemeanor and felony—Merger—Indictment for inciting to commit felony—Requisites.

In an indictment for inciting another to commit a felony, the party charged to have been incited must be shewn to have been aware that the act contemplated was a felony. If the party incited is not an innocent agent, and the act incited be committed, the party inciting is a principal felon, inasmuch as he is an accessory before the fact to a felony, and the misdemeanor merges in the felony.

The indictment, which had been removed into this court by certiorari, charged that defendant on, &c. at, &c. falsely, wickedly, and unlawfully did solicit, move, incite, counsel, and command one Robert Hood feloniously and unlawfully to steal, take and carry away a load of wheat in the straw of the value of 40s. one load of unthreshed wheat of the value of 40s. and one load of straw of the value of 10s. of the goods and chattels of one James Ward. A second count laid the property to be in John Henry Gell and others.

Byles, Serjt. (O'Malley with him) called several witnesses for the prosecution, from whose testimony it appeared that the defendant was a miller living in the parish of Haughley, in the county of Suffolk, where the prosecutor, Mr. Ward, occupies a large farm. Some time ago a dispute arose between Mr. Ward and Mr. John Henry Gell and other gentlemen, the trustees of a charity called "Dr. Triplett's Charity," who claimed the tithe over certain portions of his property. The consequence of this dispute was that in 1842 Mr. Ward "set out the tithe" of several acres of land, which was repudiated by the trustees; and as neither party would remove it, the wheat was left on the ground to rot, and eventually was eaten by the prosecutor's pigs, when he turned them into his fields. In 1844, similar disputes arose, and on the 28th of August, 1844, a large quantity of wheat in the straw was set out by the prosecutor, as tithe for the trustees, who again refused to take it. Not far from the defendant's mill lives one Robert Hood, a publican, and it was proved that on the 6th of September Welham went to Hood's house, and calling him out, told him to "go and take his (Welham's) waggon, and get the wheat." This Hood at first declined to do, but on Welham's saying "Go and get it, and get some men to help you and I'll be answerable if any thing happens," Hood assented, and, going into his tap-room, asked the company there assembled, who had overheard this conversation, to "go and help him get the wheat in Mr. Ward's field, and stack it on the Null Hill." Some of them assented, and went to Welham's for the waggon and horse but Hood remained at home. While the men were on Welham's premises they saw him, and received from him some directions about the matter. After which they went to the field at o'clock p. m., and were engaged in loading the waggon with the tithe wheat, when Mr Ward came up and ordered them to desist and leave his field. This they did, and returned with their horses to Welham, who, on learning what had happened with the wheat and the waggon, said, "I would have brought them away by force if I couldn't by any other way." These men, on cross-examination, denied all knowledge of the matter, and asserted that they did not think they were doing any harm in obeying Hood's wishes. This being the case for the prosecution, Prendergast (with whom was Power) submitted that the case had entirely failed. The evidence adduced by the prosecutor proved a felony in the defendant, if any offence had been committed at all by him, and as the charge was that of a misdemeanor, this indictment fell to the ground, for the minor offence was merged by law in the major one.

PATTESON, J.—That question is now under discussion. The judges are engaged in discussing it, and are inclined to think that the principle has hitherto been quite misunderstood.

Prendergast.—At all events the law is, that if a clear felony is proved to have been committed, any one who is an accessory before the fact is indictable for a principal felony, and not for a misdemeanor. Now here, if the men employed by Hood under the directions of Welham committed a felony in removing the prosecutor's wheat from his field into Welham's waggon for the purpose of taking it to his premises, he is then not liable in this form, but as an accessory before the fact, and that is a felony, not a misdemeanor.

PATTESON, J.—The case, however, is not even so strong as that. Hood was the only person spoken to by Welham, and he did not commit any felony, for he staid at home, and employed others to go and get the wheat.

Prendergast.—The defendant was proved to have spoken to one of the men who did take the wheat before they went to the field, when they were getting the horses. There was, therefore, a complete adoption on his part of the felony, and the wheat was beyond all question stolen by them in point of law.

PATTESON, J.—Yes, that is so. I find he did speak to Chamberlayne. If, therefore, Chamberlayne committed a felony, the defendant did so too; but the witness was an innocent party, and I very much doubt whether a man can be indicted for inciting a felony when the party charged to have been incited does not intend in what he does to commit a felony. I would wish, however, to obtain my brother Parke's opinion on the subject, and ascertain whether he agrees with me in thinking that the party incited must be aware of the contemplated felony and intend to commit it, and that the misdemeanor merges in the felony. His lordship then retired for a few moments, and on his return said—I have spoken to my brother Parke, and we are both clearly of opinion that there can be no inciting to commit a felony unless the party incited knows that the act in which he is about to engage is a felony. On the other point, Baron Parke agrees with me in saying that the misdemeanor merges in the felony. Both those objections, therefore, must prevail in this case, and the prisoner must be acquitted. Not guilty.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Wednesday, June 11.

(Before the full Court.)

CARROLL v. CORNEILLE.

Practice—Commissioners for taking affidavits in England—Insufficiency of jurat.

A commissioner of the Court of Exchequer (a) in Ireland for taking affidavits in the county of Middlesex, omitted to certify in the jurat of an affidavit that he knew the deponent, or any person who certified that he knew the party. Held, that the affidavit was thereby vitiated, and could not be used.

In this case, which was an action upon bills of exchange, by an indorsee against an indorser, on a former day, a conditional order had been obtained to stay the plaintiff's attorney from proceeding further in the cause, until he should furnish the defendant with notice, in writing, of the plaintiff's addition and residence.

J. D. Fitzgerald now moved to make the conditional order absolute, and was about to read the affidavit of the defendant, when

Babington, contrà, objected to its being used. It appeared to be an affidavit sworn before a commissioner of this Court for the county of Middlesex; but in the jurat the commissioner has omitted to state that he knows the deponent, or that he knows any person who has certified that he knows the deponent, contrary to the rule laid down in Yeo and Billings' Exch Prac. 12, and to the printed instructions given to commissioners, (b) and attached to their

(a) The Court of Queen's Bench, in Warren v. Mullen (Batty, 574), and Elkin v. Snow (1 Jebb & S. anno 1838), held that a similar omission did not vitiate an affidavit taken in England, but intimated their opinion, in Elkin v. Snow, that the practice ought not to prevail; and in 1840 made an order that affidavits taken before their commissioners in Ireland, or elsewhere, shall contain a certificate of his knowing the deponent, or some one who knows him; so that the above cases can no longer be considered an authority for such an omission.

(b) The printed directions to commissioners upon this point are, "You are to take care that the person making the affidavit be known to you, or to some creditable person who can inform you it is the true person that makes the affidavit, and the person informing you must say 'he knows the party.'" commissions (1 Stewart's Forms, 525), and to the form given in Ferguson's Pract. Forms, 702.

Fitzgerald.—This objection is not now open to the plaintiff. An affidavit has been filed as cause against this conditional order, which merely states that, as deponent is advised and believes, the affidavit upon which the conditional order was obtained is "irregular, informal, and insufficient, and contrary to the rules and practice of this honourable Court." It should have stated what the irregularity was, as then we might have withdrawn the conditional order.

PENNEFATHER, B.—That affidavit is quite right, the plaintiff must lodge some affidavit with the officer as cause, or else the rule would be made absolute; then he takes the objection the first time he comes before the Court.

Fitzgerald.—Although I admit it has been the practice for Irish commissioners to certify to their knowledge of deponents, I am informed it is not the practice for English commissioners to do so; besides, it is to be presumed that the commissioners, who are persons of respectability, when they take affidavits, are satisfied of the identity of the parties.

Babington.—It is peculiarly necessary that the practice of the Court should be adhered to in this case. The affidavit purports to be made by the defendant, who describes himself therein as a coal-merchant, resident in Limerick. It appears that, after action brought, he had gone over to Middlesex and made this affidavit for the purpose of staying proceedings. A prosecution for perjury committed in such an affidavit would be very much embarrassed by the commissioner's not having certified to the deponent's indentity. The defendant is entitled to no favour, as, before the conditional order was obtained, notice of trial had actually been served for Friday last, which the plaintiff could not act upon in consequence of that order.

The COURT were all of opinion that the affidavit could not be used, and directed the conditional order to be Discharged with costs.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

No further progress has been made with any of the pending measures that more immediately interest the Profession. The Common Law Courts' Process Bills have been "quietly inurned;" and at this late period of the session it is probable that most, if not all, of their comates will share the same fate. The Justices' Clerks Bill may be more fortunate. Even at the risk of wearying our readers with repetition, we must in this place also urge upon them the necessity of doing something, and that promptly too, to procure the omission from the Small Debts Bill of the clause permitting others than attorneys and counsel to appear for the parties in all matters relating to insolvency and bankruptcy.

Bills in Progress.

A Bill intituled "An Act for giving a Remedy by way of Declaratory Suit."

1. Persons apprehending an intention in other persons to dispute their rights may file a bill against them. Court may direct an issue.—Whereas it hath been found in the law and practice of Scotland that great benefit results from giving to parties an easy method of establishing rights before the same are contested by any process of litigation thereof, saving much expence and anxiety, and preventing the loss of evidence touching the same; and whereas it is expedient that a like remedy be given to her Majesty's subjects in other parts of the United Kingdom, under proper regulations, and with such alterations as may best adapt the same to the system of law therein established; Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that it shall and may be lawful for any person possessed of any estate in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, whether at law or in equity, or of any personal estate, or of any office or franchise, or of any casement, or of any right or claim to such estate, office, franchise, or easement, to file his bill in the Court of Chancery in England or in Ireland, setting forth the nature of his said estate or right or claim, and suggesting that he is apprehensive that the right of which he stands possessed in such estate, office, franchise, or easement may be disputed, or that the right or claim which he alleges is denied by the adverse possession of other parties and to pray that the parties whom he may suggest as likely to dispute the same, or the parties who do at present deny the same, as the case may be, shall full answer make to the matters of his bill, whereupon such parties, being duly served with notice, and the bill, according to the practice of the said courts, shall be required to answer according to such practice, and the plaintiff filing the bill may reply thereto, according to such practice, and upon an issue being therein joined the Court shall proceed to hear the same, or to order a commission for examining witnesses, or to direct an issue to be tried at law, as to the Court shall seem meet: Provided always, that at any stage of the proceeding it shall be lawful for the said Court to direct an issue to be tried at law, and provided that either party may require such issue to be tried: Provided further, that upon the trial of any issue under this Act all bills of exceptions shall be carried before the Court out of which the record shall come, and be disposed of therein, and all motions for new trial shall likewise be made therein, and the judgment of the said Court shall be given upon the issue, and shall declare the finding of the jury according to such finding; and the said judgment, with the matter of any exceptions taken in the course of the proceeding, shall be examinable by the courts of error in like manner as if the issue had been tried and judgment given in any action first brought in the said court out of which the record shall have come; and the said judgment, if not brought by writ of error before any court of error, or the judgment of the court of error before whom it may be brought, shall be final and conclusive upon the Court of Chancery out of which such issue shall have been sent, in further dealing with the subject matter of such suit.

2. Defendants may plead or demur.—Provided always that it shall be lawful for any party defendant to such bill to plead any matter in law or in equity, or to demur to such bill (except for want of parties); and the Court shall decide on such plea or demurrer, allowing or overruling the same, or ordering the plea to stand for an answer, according to the practice of the said Court, and as it shall deem just.

3. Plaintiffs may except to answers.—Provided also, that it shall be lawful for the said plaintiffs to except to the answer made by any defendant, and for the Court to decide on such exception according to such practice as aforesaid.

4. Court of Chancery may send a case for opinion of a court of law.—Provided further, that in any stage of such proceedings it shall be lawful for the said courts to send a case for the opinion of any court of law, according to such practice, whether any party shall require them so to do or not; but that if either party shall require it such courts shall be bound to send such case; and the certificate of the Court, with the case sent, may be carried by writ of error to the courts of error, in like manner as if a judgment had been given in an action before such court of law; and the judgment, if not brought under review of the court of error, or the judgment of the court of error, shall be binding and conclusive upon the Court of Chancery from which the case had been sent in further dealing with the matter of such suit.

5. Court of Chancery may refer matters to masters.—And be it enacted, that in further proceeding with such suit the said Court of Chancery shall have power to refer any matters connected therewith or arising therefrom for inquiry to the masters of the said courts; and such masters shall proceed therein and report according to the practice of such courts; and such reports may be excepted to, according to such practice, and such orders may be made upon such reports as the Court shall think just, and as shall accord with their practice.

6. Court of Chancery may make decree declaratory only of rights.—And be it enacted, that the said courts shall make such decrees upon the matter of the said bills, after the whole shall have been fully inquired into, as shall appear just according to law and equity, but such decree shall only declare the rights of the said parties, and shall not affect the present possession or enjoyment of any estate or easement or other right; but such decree shall be conclusive and binding upon all the parties to such suit, and all persons claiming under or through them, in all courts of law or equity whatsoever, as often as any suit or action shall be brought in any court of law or equity by or against any such parties, or any persons claiming by or through them.

7. A person may file a bill to declare his own legitimacy.—And be it enacted, that any person may file his bill to have his legitimacy found and declared by sentence of such courts, making parties defendants to such bill any persons who may be suggested as likely to dispute the same; and the proceedings in regard to such bill shall be the same as hereinbefore enacted and provided in regard to any bill filed touching an estate in possession, or easement, or other right enjoyed by any party.

8. A person may file a bill to declare another's bastardy.—And be it enacted, that any person having any interest, or who may appear likely in future to have any interest, in proving any person to be a bastard, may file his bill praying to have the bastardy found and declared by decree of such courts, and making party defendant to the said suit the person whose bastardy he seeks to have declared, and the proceedings in regard to such bill shall be the same as hereinbefore enacted and provided in regard to bills filed by parties claiming to have right to any estate or easement from which they are excluded by parties in possession.

9. Question of validity of any marriage may be sent to the Consistorial Courts.—Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the said courts to direct, in such cases of suits to declare legitimacy or to declare bastardy, to send the question of the validity of any marriage which may come in dispute, the parties to which marriage are both still living, to be tried by the Consistorial courts, according to their practice, and subject to appeal before her Majesty in Council, or if in Ireland before the delegates; and the decrees of such courts, and the orders of her Majesty in Council, or of the delegates in Ireland, shall be conclusive and binding in respect to such marriage in the said Courts of Chancery, in dealing further with the bill out of which the question touching such marriage shall have arisen.

10. Particulars of decrees of legitimacy and bas-

tardy.—And be it enacted, that the decree of the said courts in the matter of such suits touching legitimacy and bastardy shall only declare the parties suing or defending respectively to be legitimate or bastard, as the case may appear to be, and shall be conclusive and binding upon all parties to such suits, and upon all parties claiming through or under them, in all courts whatever.

11. Appeal to Parliament.—Provided always, that all orders and decrees made in suits under this Act shall be liable to be questioned by appeal to Parliament, in like manner as if the same had been made in any suits now competent by the law and practice of such courts.

12. Effect of decrees i Chancery in respect to the House of Lords and claims of peerage.—Provided always, and be it enacted, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed or taken to conclude or bind the Lords' House of Parliament in any inquiry which may arise before them touching the rights of any person claiming any right of peerage, but that the decrees made by the Court of Chancery touching the said rights shall and may be receivable in evidence before the said House, or any committee thereof, in any case arising before the said Lords' House of Parliament.

13. Saving rights of the Crown.—Provided further, that no such decree or decrees shall be conclusive or binding upon her Majesty, her heirs and successors, in the case of any claim of any person to have a writ of summons issued calling such person to the Lords House of Parliament.

14. Costs.—And be it enacted, that the costs of all parties to any suit brought under this Act shall be paid by the party preferring the bill, such costs to be taxed and allowed according to the practice of the court in which the same may be brought in taxing costs as between solicitor and client.

15. Courts having jurisdiction may make regulations for directing the practice under this Act—Regulations to be laid before Parliament.—And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor of England, with the advice and consent of the Master of the Rolls and one or other of the Vice-Chancellors, and for the Lord Chancellor of Ireland with the advice and consent of the Master of the Rolls, to make rules and regulations for directing the practice of their several courts in all suits brought under this Act; and for the Lord Chief Justices of the Queen's Bench of England and Ireland, with the advice and consent of the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas and the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, to make rules and regulations for the trial of issues, and granting certificates on cases sent under this Act, out of the Courts of Chancery in England and Ireland respectively; which rules and regulations shall be binding upon the said courts respectively, unless a resolution shall be passed by either House of Parliament disapproving of the same; and copies of all rules and regulations made under this Act shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within six weeks after the same shall be made, if Parliament be then sitting, or within six weeks after the beginning of the next session, if Parliament shall not be sitting when such rules and regulations are made.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

SMALL DEBTS.

THURSDAY, June 19.—Lord BROUGHAM, bringing forward again his Bill for the more effectual recovery of small debts, observed that it had been withdrawn in another place in consequence of its having contained a clause enacting that a fee of 1s. should be paid in certain cases to the gaolers of prisons. He had struck the words "fee of 1s." out of the bill, which he trusted would satisfy the privilegians elsewhere, and he begged to move that the Bill be read a first time.

LAW REFORMS.

Lord CAMPBELL rose to move that a committee of their lordships be appointed to search the journals of the other house, in order to discover what had been done with certain Bills that had been sent down by their lordships. The noble lord observed, that his impression was, the committee would find the further proceedings of those Bills had been postponed for six months. It became necessary to extend the former Bill to Ireland, because it was necessary that parties who were domiciled in Ireland, who contracted debt there, and who afterwards became absentees, should be made fully liable for the amount of the debts which they so contracted, and that process should be issued out so as to make their property liable also. Their lordships must at once see that it was necessary not to limit the Bills to England and Scotland.

All the law lords and all the lay lords concurred in the measure: the Government also sanctioned it; and he therefore felt himself called upon to move that a committee be appointed to search the journals of the other house in order to see what had become of the Bill. —The LORD CHANCELLOR said, the Bill had been introduced in the course of the last session of Parliament; that he approved of it; that some delay had arisen in consequence of the necessity of laying it before the Lord Advocate. It was again introduced this session, but the real fault of the delay rested not with his noble and learned friend who had last addressed their lordships, but with the hon. and learned member of the other House to whose care the Bill was intrusted—the Bill had been sacrificed to a few jokes—it never had been really opened; and when the House went into committee on it, a motion was carried without discussion that it be recommitted that day three months. — Lord CAMPBELL said, that though the Bill had not been proceeded with in the other House, yet he hoped that the hon. and learned member who had been intrusted with it would long continue a member of the united Parliament, and that that hon. and learned gentleman would see now, and at all future times, the great advantage of continuing the united character of that Parliament in secula seculorum.—The LORD CHANCELLOR wished to say that no imputation whatever rested upon the hon. and learned gentleman to whose name reference had been made—he believed him to be a most estimable person. —The conversation then dropped.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

CHANNEL ISLANDS.

FRIDAY, June 13.—Mr. ROEBUCK wished to ask the right hon. baronet the Secretary for the Home Department a question with reference to a notice which he had on the books with respect to the Channel Islands. He wished to know whether the right hon. gentleman was of opinion, from the circumstances which had been brought under his consideration, that the state of these islands called for inquiry, and if so, whether he was prepared to recommend to her Majesty in Council to order any such inquiry to be instituted?—Sir J. GRAHAM said that certain circumstances which had been brought before him relative to the administration of justice in the Channel Islands, had convinced him that some inquiry was necessary, and he had therefore thought it his duty to call the attention of the President of the Council to the subject, with the view of recommending her Majesty to advise an inquiry to be instituted into the present state of the criminal law in the Channel Islands, into the mode in which that law was administered, and also into the tribunals which existed in these islands.

USURY LAWS.

MONDAY, June 16.—In the absence of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir G. CLERK obtained leave to bring in a Bill to continue an Act of her present Majesty for exempting certain bills of exchange and promissory notes from the operation of the usury laws.

DROPPED BILLS.—In the House of Commons last evening there were three Bills for amending common law process, which were in as many minutes postponed for twice the number of months. This little triad of Bills was the offspring of the senatorial wantonness of a noble lord, and they had actually come through all the stages of the upper House, but were now given up with the consent of their author, on his finding that they were not approved by the profession generally. Here is a lesson for another law lord in the like case offending, if a schoolmaster may be taught! It would be an agreeable surprise to us if Lord Brougham were to follow his learned brother's example, and give up even three of his nine bills—any three he pleases.—Times.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

SIR JAMES GRAHAM has, according to the newspapers, directed the release of some three or four persons committed by the magistrates for non-payment of penalties for offences against the Game Laws.

Now, without vindicating the severity of the law, which we would gladly see mitigated, we much question the propriety of this mode of accomplishing the object. The effect upon the vulgar mind is to impugn, not so much the law, as its administrators. Doubtless in their neighbourhoods the magistrates who pronounced the sentence, and not the law they were compelled to observe, are deemed by the people to have been thus rebuked by the Government. Respect for the magistrates cannot but be grievously impaired and their influence shaken, where it was most desirable that it should be supported by the superior powers. If the law be too severe, the proper course is to mitigate that severity by a new law; if the magistrate be injudicious or partial in its administration, he should first be rebuked, and if he continue to err, dismissed. But nothing of the sort is charged against the magistracy in the cases in question, or, at least, there has been no censure, as there should have been, had they been the cause of the interference of the Government. We presume, therefore, that it is the law, and the law only, that Sir JAMES GRAHAM has intended to condemn; and if so be, we cannot hesitate to meet with unqualified reprobation the course he has adopted, as fraught with incalculable mischiefs to the administration of justice.

REVIEW OF MAGISTRATES' CASES IN EASTER AND TRINITY TERMS.

THERE have been many decisions during the last two Terms which tend to elucidate and develop Parish Settlement Law. We shall endeavour in this and our next Number to present to our readers those which are of the most use, in order that they may be made applicable to the approaching Sessions; although some, in which judgment is not yet pronounced, and others of minor moment, must necessarily stand over.

SECONDARY EVIDENCE.—Reg. v. Orton (5 Law T. 53).—This case decides that a notice to produce a rate-book in the form of a summons from a justice, served upon the overseers of the parish in which the pauper is supposed to be settled, will not be sufficient to let in secondary evidence at the hearing before the removing magistrates. The Court held this bad, inasmuch as it was a summons to the overseer to appear, and to bring with him the rate-book signed by a justice, and not by the overseers of the removing parish. We confess we are quite at loss to understand this decision. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 70, expressly enables justices to summon witnesses to appear and give evidence. Lord DENMAN, C. J. said there were means to compel attendance; they appear to us to have been taken in this case.

FINAL DECISION OF THE SESSIONS.—Reg. v. Bakewell.—The Court will not interfere where the Sessions have exercised their judgment, and come to a decision upon a matter of fact which they are alone competent to determine. The question here was, which of two churches, both called Biwell Church, was meant in an examination which the justices held to be ambiguous, and they quashed the order, subject to a case. As Lord DENMAN said, "They did wrong only in granting a case. The case put to the Court must be one of law, not of facts, which the Sessions alone can decide. Reg. v. Kesteven (1 Bit. & Sym. M. C. 8) will be strictly observed.

PRACTICE—CERTIORARI.—Reg. v. Appleby (5 Law T. 71).—Where a material variance between the writ of certiorari and the return becomes known to the Court incidentally, prior to the argument upon a rule to quash the certiorari and return, they will take notice of it, and make the rule absolute. Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Sevenoaks (Law T. 725).—The service of notice of certiorari upon two of the justices mentioned in the caption of the order of sessions is primâ facie sufficient, it not being shewn that they were not present when the order was made.

EMANCIPATION.—Reg. v. Lilleshall (5 Law T. 71).—The question herein submitted to the Court was whether, to entitle a pauper to a settlement ex parte paternâ, the evidence of which was acknowledgment by relief to the father after the pauper had attained the age of twenty-one years, it was necessary to negative a presumption in law, founded on the mere fact of his having attained the age of twenty-one years, that the pauper had been emancipated, and did not form part of his father's family at the time when the circumstances that constituted the acknowledgment took place.

The Court held that it was not necessary to negative an exception, and that there is no presumption that a person of full age must be emancipated; and even where the father's settlement is not gained till after the son comes of age there is no need to state that the son is unemancipated, no facts shewing that he is emancipated.

EVIDENCE.—Reg. v. St. Anne, Westminster (5 Law T. 71). Evidence of the production of letters of administration before the justices need not be given, if they are sent to the appellant parish. And this applies as a general rule in all cases where documents are produced. They should be sent to the receiving parish, or a copy of them, but they need not be identified in the evidence as the same produced before the justices. But where the document, though produced, is not sent to the appellants, the order is thereby nullified, as has been decided in a subsequent case, to which we shall hereafter refer.

JURISDICTION — ENTRY OF APPEAL.—Reg. v. Sevenoaks (5 Law T. 73).—An order of removal was made July 29, served August 7; on Oct. 14, the sessions being Oct. 17, notices of grounds of appeal were served, but dated September 7. The respondents did not appear at the October sessions, nor was there then any entry or respite of the appeal. At the next Epiphany sessions, without any further notice, the appellants obtained, in the absence of the respondents, an order to quash, with costs.

The Court held that in such a case there was no jurisdiction; that attorneys ought to be careful not to plunge parishes into litigation for want of a little openness in their proceedings. The appeal was not entered and reported in October; at least, if it had been so, the appellants would have shewn it in their affidavits. The attorney of the respondents swears that he is "informed and believes" that there was none, and the appellants ought to have answered his affidavit.

STATEMENT OF SETTLEMENT — BASTARD'S BIRTH AND PAYMENT OF RATES.—Reg. v. St. Paul's, Covent-garden (5 Law T. 91). —Sufficiency of examination.—"In or about" the year 1833 is an insufficient statement of the period of birth, in the case of a bastard, for as it depends on whether the child was born before or after the 14th August, 1834, where it is settled, it is material to state the day of its birth with certainty. A ground of appeal is likewise bad, according to the case of Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Ripon (5 Law T. 90), setting up a settlement by payment of rates under 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, s. 2, if it omits to state that the tenement consisted of "a separate and distinct" dwelling-house or building.

AUDITORS OF PARISHES.—Reg. v. Inhabitants of Burnham (5 Law T. 92).—An auditor who has continued to act without re-appointment by the Poor Law Commissioners under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 37, is a district auditor within the meaning of the Act, and a certiorari will lie to remove the accounts. CONFESSIONS OF PRISONERS.

THE MAGISTRATES OF AYLESBURY AND THEIR CHAPLAIN.

THE dispute between the magistrates of Aylesbury and their chaplain, as to whether the latter was bound to give up the confession of a criminal, is one of not less interest than importance to the public.

It involves, too, a sufficiency of legal matter to insure for it a place in a journal of jurisprudence.

The case we allude to is that of TAWELL, who was found guilty of murder (by poisoning), and condemned to die. Whilst awaiting that sentence, he made a written confession of his guilt, and on the eve of the execution delivered it to the chaplain of Aylesbury gaol, with an injunction that it should not be made public. The chaplain under such circumstances received it, and when called upon by the magistrates to give it up, refused; hence arose the dispute in question. The chaplain, however, afterwards gave it up to the Home Secretary, Sir JAMES GRAHAM—but this is beyond our purpose. The question for us to consider is, whether a chaplain of a gaol is justified in RECEIVING a confession from a person condemned to die, with a condition attached to it, viz. that it shall not be made public, or, in short, accompanied with any other condition. If we take the answer to be in the affirmative, there cannot be a doubt that a disclosure to magistrates or any one else would be prohibited as contrary to all principles of honesty, notions of good faith, and obligations which morality imposes. The question is, therefore, not as to the propriety of disclosing, but of receiving such a confession as we have mentioned. The more readily to solve this difficulty, we must inquire what is the end contemplated by inducing a wretched criminal to confess. It must be generally admitted, whether it be for the inward satisfaction of the jury, for the proof it affords of the efficacy of the criminal laws of this country, or for the sake of humanity itself, that the public confession of guilt is most desirable. It puts an end to our doubts and fears, and vindicates the law of the land; for in that hour the law may be said to triumph; yet, notwithstanding these advantages to the individual and the public, a confession has a higher office than the compesure of the timid or the vindication of the law. It is the first sign of repentance, and a part propitiation for the guilty soul. A guilty man may surely hold commune with his Maker through the intervention of his confessor in private, and yet not be less acceptable to Him of infinite mercy. The acknowledgment of a guilty person's sins is not so much a matter between him and his fellow-man or the public, as with him and his Maker. In fact the law of the land has had its course, and its sentence will be fulfilled. The confessor or chaplain of a gaol is no officer of it, and being elected and paid by the magistrates makes him no servant of theirs; for, as a confession of a criminal after conviction is out of the pale of the criminal law, so is the duty of a chaplain as regards such confession beyond the control of the magistrates. This, then, must be understood, that a chaplain is engaged with a criminal to induce a confession, not for public purposes, but for the atonement of the guilty one's own sins, and as a mediator between him and his Maker. The most extreme case we could put of a chaplain, would be that he refused to make known to any one the fact of a criminal making a confession. This, however, did not happen in the case before us. The chaplain refused to give the detail only of the written confession to the public. And it has been contended that he ought to have received it unrestricted, or not at all. This we are inclined to doubt. Suppose a criminal to refuse confession except certain conditions be appended to it; or, which is more reasonable, that he is deterred altogether from making a confession, because he knows it will only be received unrestricted. Would it not be more advantageous to the public to receive it under such circumstances, than to refuse or prevent its being tendered at all? It must be remembered that the confession would not have been made except under and subject to conditions; so nothing would be lost, but, on the contrary, a restricted confession obtained. It may be said, to withhold any part of a confession, or to receive it with a condition that its details should not be divulged, would compromise the law, and defeat the ends of justice, for that it may contain an accusation against third parties, and implicate others who are not in custody or even suspected; but even in this case, the only one, perhaps, in which a chaplain could not refuse to divulge, it would be his duty to tell the criminal beforehand that a confession could be received with no such terms. But there are other motives besides a wish to screen others from the penalty of the law, which induce a criminal to attach a condition to his confession that it should not meet the public eye; such as the pain it would cause those who must be named in conjunction with the prisoner, and the discomfiture of others who were friends or relations of the murderer, though all equally innocent of any participation in the guilt, yet all anxious to avoid such an unpleasant notoriety. Neither would it be possible for the criminal (though willing) to omit such unpleasant detail in every case; for, to give a semblance of truth to a statement of this sort, it is often absolutely necessary to detail the whole circumstances—who, for instance, were visited before and who after the bloody deed was accomplished; and it may be added, that though the prisoner were to mention his guilt in the detailed confession of another offence upon the same victim, its further publicity might not only be useless to the public, but hurtful to the feelings of any who had been acquainted with him. On the part of the magistrates of Aylesbury, it is said that the chaplain, being their servant, has no option, but is bound to disclose every thing which is communicated to him in his official capacity, and that he, as chaplain, is no judge of what might be beneficial and what detrimental to the public good; and that there is an implied contract existing between master and servant, which obliges the latter to disclose any thing and every thing affecting the former. Admitting this doctrine for a moment, are not the magistrates themselves servants,—subordinates to the minister, and the minister the servant of the public? And in such capacity, what more powers have they to judge for the public, in the stead of the public judging for themselves, than the chaplain of a gaol? If a chaplain of a gaol is a mechanical officer, without any discretion or judgment, in what respect do the magistrates or the minister differ? Then every word and every movement of a criminal must be detailed and given with great exactness to the public. Our notions of public policy and general expediency incline us to think such a doctrine would be most detrimental to the public interest. And that not only ought every public officer to have a liberty of discretion in proportion to his abilities, but that the chaplain of a gaol in particular should judge of the circumstances under which he ought to receive the confession of a criminal, because it would induce a confession where otherwise it would not be made, and thereby benefit the criminal and be advantageous to the public, without a chance of any corresponding evil result. SETTLEMENT.

1. OF BASTARD, WHERE THE MOTHER AFTERWARDS MARRIED, AND HER HUSBAND HAD DIED.

June 8, 1844.

Clerk of the Docking Union—Stated, that Mary Williamson, widow, aged 31 (formerly Mary Roy), on the 21st April, 1834, was confined with an illegitimate child in the parish of Burnnam Westgate, where she then lived, and in which she was settled. In the year 1837 she married Thomas Williamson, of Burnham Sutton, farm-labourer, on which she, with the child, followed her husband's settlement. In March 1843 the man died, since which time the parish officers of Burnham Sutton considered the child to belong to Burnham Westgate, and claimed a year's maintenance of the latter parish for the child. Inquired, whether the child actually belonged to Burnham Westgate; and, if so, whether the parish of Burnham Sutton could claim a year's maintenance.

Ans.—As the bastard child alluded to was born before the passing of the Poor Law Amendment Act, it will not follow its mother's settlement under the 71st section of that Act, but it still belongs to the parish of its birth, which appears to be Burnham Westgate. The child being above the age of nurture, may now be removed to that parish; but the Commissioners know of no authority under which the parish of Burnham Sutton can recover from Burnham Westgate the relief already afforded to the child, which while it was residing in Burnham Sutton that parish was bound to provide.

2. BY RENTING A TENEMENT AND GARDEN SEPARATELY.

June 20, 1844.

Mr. Smith, Relieving Officer, South Hetton—Inquired, whether A, who occupied a tenement for upwards of four years at 8*l.* per annum, and paid rates and taxes in respect thereof, and also a garden, by a separate holding, for which he paid 6*l.* per annum, both holdings being in the same township, had gained settlement in that township.

Ans.—The Commissioners see no reason to suppose that the house rented at 8*l.* and the garden rented at 6*l.* per annum cannot be added together for the purpose of conferring a settlement upon the tenant. The 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, and 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, and the 1 Wm. 4, c. 18, all hold the same language upon this point. They all require the tenement to consist "of a dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both." In R. v. North Collingham (a case very similar to the present), a man rented a house and garden in North Collingham at 6*l.* 6s. a year, and also a piece of garden ground in the same parish at 3*l.* 15s. a year; and in reference to the terms of the 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, this was deemed sufficient to confer a settlement (1 B. & C. 678).

VALUATION.

NO LICENSE OR STAMP REQUIRED UNDER THE PAROCHIAL ASSESSMENTS ACT.

June 15, 1844.

Mr. J. Edwards, Overseer, Lampeter Union—Inquired, whether by the Parochial Assessments Act a license is required by the valuation of property to the poor-rate, in case of an appeal, and whether the valuation should be stamped.

Ans.—Guided by the decision in the case of Atkinson v. Fell (5 M. & S. 240), the Commissioners consider that a person appointed under the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 96, to make a valuation of the rateable property of a parish, need not take out an appraiser's license; and that a valuation made by a person so appointed does not require a stamp. In Atkinson v. Fell, it was held that a valuation of the parish lands, made by two parishioners appointed by the parish officers, with a view of assisting them to equalize the poor-rate, did not require a stamp. It was intimated by the Court that, had such valuation required a stamp, then the persons making it ought to have had a license, which, it appears, they had not. It would seem from that decision that a person need only take out a license where the valuation to be made by him is intended to be binding between parties, or where a certain benefit, or right of action, is to result from it, and not where the valuation is not obligatory upon parties, but merely designed for their private information. A valuation made in pursuance of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 96, is intended for the guidance of the overseers, and is not binding upon them (see Reg. v. Lord Yarborough, 12 A. & E. 416).

THE SHERIFF'S FUND FOR MIDDLESEX AND LONDON.—A charitable fund for the purpose of temporary relief to destitute prisoners on their discharge after acquittal, or completion of the period of incarceration, was founded so long ago as the year 1808; but it was not until a more recent period that public aid was solicited in furtherance of its objects. General attention having been called to this institution, such assistance was rendered as to induce an extension of its field of operation, by temporary relief of families dependent on prisoners; by provision for those who on discharge have no means of subsistence or habitation; by supply of tools, implements, and materials conducive to habits of industry; and for establishment of an asylum affording for a brief period shelter, instruction, and employment. When it is considered that an average of 3,000 prisoners are annually under confinement in the city prisons, it will be seen that an ample field is open for a discriminating benevolence. The first festival in aid of this fund was held on Tuesday evening at the London Tavern, where a party of about 150 gentlemen sat down to a dinner, which was calculated to raise the high reputation already obtained by the liberal proprietors of that establishment. The chair was taken by his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, who was supported by Aldermen and Sheriffs Hunter and Sydney, Aldermen Johnson and Challis, Mr. B. B. Cabbell, Sir M. Montefiore, &c. After the usual routine toasts, the secretary read a very gratifying report, from which it appeared that the fund rested on an investment amounting to nearly 18,000*l.*, besides the support of yearly contributions and donations. The chairman having warmly eulogized the charity, the meeting responded to his proposal of "Prosperity to the Sheriffs' Fund," and the secretary read a long list of subscriptions, which amounted in the whole to nearly 1,000*l.* The proceedings were agreeably enlivened by the vocal performances of Messrs. Young, Turner, Ransford, Shoubridge, and Bruton, and the evening passed off to the entire satisfaction of all assembled.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE continuous stream of Reports, the judges having resolved to do double duty, in order to bring up the heavy arrears of business, has compelled another double number, and we fear that more will yet be needful, as many of the heaviest judgments are to come. All other intelligence, not of immediate moment, must be deferred to the leisure of the long vacation. At present every thing that will bear curtailment is unavoidably reduced to the narrowest limits, and much omitted to which we would gladly have given place.

LEADING CASES.—No. III.

DAWSON v. CHAMNEY.

(5 Q. B. 161.)

Liability of innkeepers—Who are innkeepers?—Their obligation to receive guests—Their responsibility for the property of the guests—Presumption of law with regard to its damage while in the inn.

This case (which is reported in the last number of the Queen's Bench Reports) opens to our consideration the doctrines which have been laid down with regard to the liability of innkeepers. It is well known that, in return for the profit which innkeepers derive from the necessities of travellers, the common law has imposed peculiar responsibilities upon them, and it is our present purpose to explain what those responsibilities are, under what circumstances they are imposed, or in what cases they are relaxed.

The great source from which all the learning on this subject is derived is the report of Calye's case, as given in the 8th part of Coke, 32 a.; and the great variety of cases subsequent to it (including the one now before us) has done little else than confirm, or, perhaps, in some points, explain its resolutions. There is a preliminary question, however, which it is necessary to consider before we refer to that case, viz. who is an inn-keeper? or, rather, what is an inn?—and this question has thus been answered by Best, J. in the case of Thompson v. Lacy (3 B. & Ald. 287): "An inn is a house, the owner of which holds out that he will receive all travellers and sojourners who are willing to pay a price adequate to the sort of accommodation provided, and who come in a situation in which they are fit to be received. A lodging-house keeper, on the other hand, makes a contract with every man that comes, whereas an innkeeper is bound, without making any special contract, to provide lodging and entertainment for all at a reasonable price." Consequently a London tavern and coffee-house, where beds, &c. are provided, was held to be an inn, though not frequented by stage-coaches, and having no stables attached. (Ibid. and Jones v. Osborn, 2 Chitty R. 484; but see contra, Doe v. Laming, 4 Camp. 77.) A sign is not essential to an inn, but it is an evidence of it. (Parker v. Flint, 12 Mod. 255.) If a man put a sign at his door and harbour guests, that shall be deemed a common inn; and if, after taking down the sign, the owner continues to entertain travellers, it shall still be deemed a common inn as if he had a sign. (2 Roll. Rep. 341.) But one who lived at Epsom and lodged strangers in the season for drinking the waters, and dressed victuals for them, and sold beer to his lodgers and to none else, and found hay for their horses, is not an innkeeper, nor can his house be considered as an inn; and per Holt, C.J. if one come to an inn and make a contract for lodging for a set time, and do not eat or drink there, he is no guest, but a lodger, and as such not under the innkeeper's protection; but if he eat and drink it is otherwise; or if he pay for his diet there, though he do not take it there. (Parker v. Flint, ubi supra. See also Bac. Abr. Inns and Innkeepers, c. 5; Calye's case, ubi supra; Carth, 417; 5 Mod. 497; 1 Salk, 387; 1 Bell's Com. 469.) From the character and position of an innkeeper, thus explained, the first obligation which the law imposes upon him obviously arises. He is recognized by law as the keeper of a common inn or diversorium, open at all times to all travellers; and hence he is bound "to take in all travellers and wayfaring persons" and to provide for them reasonable and proper accommodation. "There is no doubt," says Baron Parke, in the recent case of Hawthorn v. Hammond (1 Car. & Kir. 407), "that the law is, that a person who keeps a public inn is bound to admit all persons who apply peaceably to be admitted as guests;" though in that case the plaintiff claimed admission at night after the inn door had been fastened. The landlord is also bound to provide suitable accommodation for his guests during their residence in the inn. What constitutes suitable accommodation would seem to depend upon the character of the inn and rank of the guest, and is a question upon which a jury would decide according to the particular circumstances of each case. No guest, however, has a right to expect a compliance with his own peculiar caprices" (Fell v. Knight, 8 M. & W. 269), and consequently it was there held, that the landlord was not bound to provide the plaintiff with a particular apartment, nor to furnish him with a bed-room for the purpose of sitting up all night, as he had offered to furnish him with a proper room for that purpose. Lord Abinger said, "I do not think a landlord is bound to provide for his guest the precise room the latter may select. All that the law requires of him is to find for his guest reasonable and proper accommodation; if he does that, he does all that is requisite." (Ibid. 276.) Nor is an innkeeper bound to find shew-rooms for the goods of his guests, but only convenient lodging. (Burgess v. Clements, 4 M. & S. 310.) Some doubt has arisen whether a traveller claiming admission to an inn is bound to tender the amount to which the innkeeper would be reasonably entitled for the entertainment demanded; but the better opinion seems to be that such a tender is still necessary. (Fell v. Knight, 8 M. & W. 276; Rex v. Ivens, 7 Car. & P. 220; per Coleridge, J.) Not only is an innkeeper liable in a civil action for refusing to admit or properly to entertain a traveller, but an indictment will lie against him in a criminal court. In 1 Curw. Hawk. p. 714, it is said, "It seems also to be clear that if one who keeps a common inn refuse either to receive a traveller as a guest into his house, or to find him victuals or lodging upon his tendering him a reasonable sum for the same, he is not only liable to render damages for the injury, in an action on the case, at the suit of the party grieved, but may also be indicted and fined at the suit of the king." And in the case of Rex v. Ivens above cited, such an indictment was preferred. The general principles of the law on this subject are there very clearly laid down by Mr. Justice Coleridge. "Though I do not recollect," says his lordship, "to have ever heard of such an indictment having been tried before, the law applicable to the case is this—that an indictment lies against an innkeeper who refuses to receive a guest, he having at the time room in his house, and either the price of the guest's entertainment being tendered to him, or such circumstances occurring as will dispense with that tender. This law is founded in good sense. The innkeeper is not to select his guests. He has no right to say to one, you shall come into my inn, and to another, you shall not, as every one coming and conducting himself in a proper manner has a right to be received; and for this purpose innkeepers are a sort of public servants, they having in return a kind of privilege of entertaining travellers, and supplying them with what they want; but, "if a person came to an inn drunk, or behaved in an indecent or improper manner, I am of opinion that the innkeeper is not forced to receive him;" and his lordship subsequently ruled that it is no defence for the innkeeper that the guest was travelling on a Sunday, and at an hour of the night after the innkeeper's family had gone to bed, and that the innkeeper before admitting a guest has no right to insist upon knowing his name or abode. Whether the keepers of the fashionable hotels in the west-end of London come within the scope of these principles, or whether their establishments would by the law be regarded as "common inns" may be a question of some nicety, but it is certainly not one of sufficient practical importance to detain us from the consideration of the subject more immediately before us. When the traveller has once been received as a guest, he and his goods are considered as under the protection of the innkeeper. In the writ (upon which the first resolution in Calye's case is founded) the responsibility of the innkeeper is thus laid down: "that, by the custom of this realm, innkeepers are obliged to keep the goods and chattels of their guests, which are within their inns, without subtraction or loss, day and night, so that no damage shall come to them from the negligence of the innkeeper or his servants (ita quod pro defectu hospitatorum seu servientium suorum, &c., hospitibus hujusmodi damnum non eveniat ullo modo. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 94, a). A delivery of the goods into the custody of the innkeeper is not necessary to charge him with them; for although the guest doth not deliver them, or acquaint the innkeeper with them, still the latter is bound to pay for them if they are stolen or carried away. (Calye's case, ubi supra; Story on Bailments, c. vi. p. 313.) Nor is it any excuse that the innkeeper delivered to the guest the key of the chamber in which he is lodged, and that he left the chamber door open. (Ibid.) But "if there be evidence that the guest accepted the key, and took upon himself the care of his goods, it is for the jury to determine whether this evidence of his receiving the key proves that he did it animo custodiendi, and with a purpose of exempting the innkeeper, or whether he took it merely because the landlord forced it on him, or for the sake of securing greater privacy." (Per Lord Ellenborough, C. J., in Burgess v. Clements, 4 M. & S. 310.) In that case it was decided that the responsibility of the innkeeper may be relieved by the conduct of the guest himself; and that though the presumption is always primâ facie against the innkeeper it may be rebutted. "The cases shew that the rule is not so inveterate against the innkeeper, but that the guest may exonerate him by his fault, as if the goods are carried away by the guest's servant or companion whom he brings with him." (Ibid. 311). And it was laid down also, that where circumstances of suspicion arise, the guest must exercise ordinary care. (See Farnworth v. Packwood, 1 Stark. R. 249.) The innkeeper, however, cannot exonerate himself but by positive proof that the loss was not by means of any person for whom he is responsible. (Bennet v. Mellor, 5 T. R. 273; Burgess v. Clements, ubi sup.) Accordingly, if the habit of the servants at an inn is to place the guests' goods in their bed-rooms, and a guest should request his to be carried into the common commercial room to which travellers in general resort, and they are there stolen, the innkeeper will nevertheless be held responsible for the loss, unless the innkeeper has given notice to his guest that he will not be responsible unless the goods are put into the bed-room (Richmond v. Smith, 8 B. & C. 9); though the analogy there drawn by the Court between an innkeeper and a common carrier presses, according to recent decisions, somewhat too severely against the former. That it does so, is evident from the case of Dawson v. Chamney, now before us.

This was an action on the case for injury done to the plaintiff's horse by the defendant, an innkeeper, or his servants. On the trial, it appeared that the defendant kept a public-house in Penrith, and that on Penrith market-day the plaintiff's servant went to the house and gave the horse in charge of the hostler, who placed him in a stall where there was another horse, and the injury was done by the other horse kicking the horse of the plaintiff. The defendant's counsel upon this evidence contended that the plaintiff must be nonsuited for want of proof of negligence. The learned judge (Cresswell, J.), however, thought that there was a case for the jury, and the defendant then called witnesses to shew that proper care had been taken of the horse. The learned judge directed the jury to find for the plaintiff, if they were of opinion that the defendant, by himself or his servants, had been guilty of direct injury or negligence, but otherwise for the defendant, and the jury found for the defendant. In refusing a rule for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, the Court, having considered their judgment, said, "The law of England is clearly laid down in Calye's case, which is a full comment on the writ in Fitzh. N.B. One ingredient is, that the loss or damage arises pro defectu hospitatoris seu servientium suorum. When, therefore, the nature of the injury left the cause wholly doubtful, it was correct to take the opinion of the jury whether the evidence established that it was produced by a defect of such care." And again; "The proof of such attention and skilful management as convinced the jury that the damage could not have been occasioned by the injury imputed, took away the ground of action, according to all the authorities." (5 Q. B. 168-9, per Lord Denman, C. J.)

The length to which these remarks have already run, only enables us to add that innkeepers are only liable for goods brought within the inn (infra hospitium), or in the premises adjoining, for goods commonly kept there. (Jones v. Tyler, 1 A. & E. 523.) If, therefore, an innkeeper, at the request of his guest, sends his horse to pasture and the horse is stolen, the innkeeper is not, as such, liable for the loss; but contrà, if the innkeeper does it of his own accord. (Calye's case, ubi sup.) If the loss of the goods occurs after the departure of the guests, the innkeeper is only liable as bailee. (Story on Bailm. c. vi. p. 313.) The "goods and chattels" for which he is liable include deeds, obligations, choses in action, and money (Cayle's case; Kent v. Shuckard, 2 B. & Ad. 803); but the innkeeper is not responsible for a tort or injury done to the person of his guest without his own co-operation or consent (ibid.); but if his servants rob a guest, he is responsible. (Jones on Bailm. 95; 1 Bla. Com. 430; Chit. Cont. 379.) In return for these heavy liabilities, the law invests him with some peculiar privileges, for he has a lien upon the goods (though not upon the person of his guest, nor the clothes he is wearing) for his compensation. (Thompson v. Lacy, 3 B. & Ald. 287; Jones v. Thurloe, 8 Mod. 172; Newton v. Trigg, 1 Shower, 270; Sunbolf v. Alford, 3 M. & W. 248; Proctor v. Nicholson, 7 Car. & P. 67). But the horse of a guest can be detained only for his own meal, and not for the expenses of its owner. (Bac. Abr. Inns, D.; see also Johnson v. Hill, 3 Stark. 172; Binns v. Pigott, 9 Car. & P. 208).

GENERAL ORDERS AND RULES OF THE HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY.

Traversing note.

LII. After the expiration of the time allowed to a defendant to plead, answer, or demur (not demurring alone) to any original or supplemental bill or bill amended before answer, if such defendant has filed no plea, answer, or demurrer, the plaintiff may file a note at the record and writ clerk's office to the following effect:—"The plaintiff intends to proceed with his cause as if the defendant had filed an answer traversing the case made by the bill."

LIII. After the expiration of the time allowed to plead, answer, or demur, not demurring alone, to a bill amended after answer, the plaintiff (if a defendant has not filed any plea, answer, or demurrer) may file a note at the record and writ clerk's office to the following effect:—"The plaintiff intends to proceed with his cause as if the defendant had filed an answer traversing the allegations introduced into the bill by amendment."

LIV. After the expiration of the time allowed to a defendant to put in his further answer to any bill, the plaintiff (if such defendant shall not have put in any further answer) may file a note at the record and writ clerk's office to the following effect:—"The plaintiff intends to proceed with his cause as if the defendant had filed a further answer traversing the allegations in the bill whereon the exceptions are founded."

LV. Where a demurrer or plea to the whole bill is overruled, the plaintiff, if he does not require an answer, may immediately file his note in manner directed by Orders LII. or LIII. as the case may require, and with the same effect, unless the Court, overruling such demurrer or plea, gives time to defendant to plead, answer, or demur; and in such case, if the defendant files no plea, answer, or demurrer within the time so allowed by the Court, the plaintiff, if he does not then require an answer, may, on the expiration of such time, file such note.

LVI. A traversing note having been filed, a copy thereof is to be served on the defendant against whom the same is filed, in the manner directed by the nineteenth and twenty-first of the orders of the 26th October, 1842, for the service of documents not requiring personal service.

LVII. A traversing note being filed, and a copy thereof duly served, is to have the same effect as if a defendant had filed a full answer or further answer traversing the whole bill, or such parts of the bill as the note relates to, on the day on which the note was filed.

LVIII. After the service of the copy of a traversing note filed as aforesaid, a defendant is not at liberty to plead, answer, or demur to a bill, or to put in any further answer thereto, without the special leave of the Court, and the cause is to stand in the same situation as if such defendant had filed a full answer or further answer to the bill on the day on which the note was filed.

Injunction to stay proceedings at law.

LIX. The plaintiff in a bill praying an injunction to stay proceedings at law is entitled, as of course, on motion or petition, and without an attachment, to the common injunction for want of appearance, if a defendant has not appeared in person or by his own solicitor on or after the expiration of eight days from the service of the subpœna, and for want of answer, if a defendant is in fault for want of answer on or after the expiration of eight days from the day on which an appearance was entered by or for him.

LX. The plaintiff in an injunction cause, having obtained the common injunction to stay proceedings at law, may (either before or after the answer of a defendant is put in, and whether such injunction be or be not continued to the hearing of the cause) obtain one order as of course to amend his bill without prejudice to the injunction; and if such bill be amended pursuant to such order, such defendant may thereupon, and although he may not have put in his answer to such bill or the amendments thereof, move the Court, on notice to dissolve the injunction, on the ground that such bill as amended does not, even if the amendments be true, entitle the plaintiff thereto.

Revivor.

LXI. The plaintiff in a bill of revivor, or of revivor and supplement, is entitled as of course, upon motion or petition, to the common order to revive, if a defendant, having appeared in person or by his own solicitor, does not within eight days after such appearance plead or demur to the whole bill, or to so much thereof as prays the revivor.

LXII. If the plaintiff in a bill of revivor or of revivor and supplement has caused an appearance thereto to be entered for any defendant against whom it is sought to revive the suit, and such defendant does not within eight days after such appearance plead or demur to the whole bill or to so much thereof as prays the revivor, the Court may, if it thinks fit, make the common order to revive, upon motion; such motion being made on notice to be served on such defendant as other notices of motion, if such defendant was a party to the suit at the time of the abatement thereof; but if such defendant was not a party to the suit at such time, then such motion is to be made on notice served on such defendant personally, unless it appears on affidavit that the plaintiff is unable or ought not to be bound to serve such notice personally, by reason of such defendant being out of the jurisdiction or being concealed or for any other cause; and if it appears to the Court that the plaintiff cannot or ought not to be bound to serve such notice personally, then upon notice otherwise served or published as the Court may direct.

LXIII. In cases where a suit abates by the death of a sole plaintiff, the Court, upon motion of any defendant made on notice served on the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff, may order that such legal representative do revive the suit within a limited time, or that the bill be dismissed.

Amendments of bill.

LXIV. An order for leave to amend a bill may be obtained at any time before answer, upon motion or petition, without notice.

LXV. An order for leave to amend a bill only for the purpose of rectifying some clerical error in names, dates, or sums, may be obtained at any time upon motion or petition, without notice.

LXVI. One order of course for leave to amend a bill as the plaintiff may be advised, may be obtained by the plaintiff, at any time before filing (or undertaking to file) a replication, and within four weeks after the answer or the last of several answers is to be deemed sufficient; but no further order of course for leave to amend a bill is to be granted after an answer has been filed, unless in the case provided for by Order LXV.

LXVII. A special order for leave to amend a bill is not to be granted without affidavit to the effect,—1, that the draft of the proposed amendments has been settled, approved, and signed by counsel; and 2, that such amendment is not intended for the purpose of delay or vexation, but because the same is considered to be material for the case of the plaintiff.

LXVIII. After the plaintiff has filed or undertaken to file a replication, or after the expiration of four weeks from the time when the answer or last answer is deemed sufficient, a special order for leave to amend a bill is not to be granted without further affidavit shewing that the matter of the proposed amendment is material and could not with reasonable diligence have been sooner introduced into such bill.

LXIX. Such affidavits as are mentioned in Orders LXVII. and LXVIII. are to be made by the plaintiff and his solicitor, or by the solicitor alone in case the plaintiff from being abroad or otherwise is unable to join therein.

LXX. Where the plaintiff obtains an order for leave to amend his bill, and does not amend the same within the time limited for that purpose, the order to amend becomes void, and the cause as to dismissal stands in the same situation as if such order had not been made.

Amended bill. No answer required.

LXXI. Where the plaintiff amends his bill without requiring an answer to the amendments, no warrant for time to answer such amendments is to be granted after the expiration of eight days from the service of the notice of the amendment of the bill.

Defendant likely to abscond without answering.

LXXII. If there is just reason to believe that any defendant means to abscond before answering the bill, the Court may, on the ex parte application of the plaintiff, at any time after appearance has been entered for such defendant by the plaintiff, order an attachment for want of answer to issue against him; and such attachment is to be made returnable at such time as the Court directs.

Defendant attached for want of answer.

LXXIII. If any defendant, being in custody of the serjeant-at-arms or of a messenger under an attachment for want of his answer, is not brought to the bar of the Court within ten days after he was taken into custody, he is to be discharged out of custody by the serjeant-at-arms or messenger in whose custody he is, without payment by him of the costs of his contempt, which in such case are to be paid by the plaintiff; but if such defendant does not put in his answer within eight days after such discharge, the plaintiff may cause a new attachment to be issued against him for want of his answer.

LXXIV. If any defendant be in prison under or being already in prison be detained under an attachment for not answering, and be not brought to the bar of the court within thirty days from the time of his being actually in custody or detained (being already in custody under such attachment), he is to be discharged from the process for want of answer under which he was arrested or detained by the sheriff, gaoler, or keeper of the gaol in whose custody he is without payment of the costs of his contempt, which in such case are to be paid by the plaintiff; but if such defendant does not put in his answer within eight days after such discharge, the plaintiff may cause a new attachment to be issued against him for want of his answer.

LXXV. A defendant being brought up in custody for want of his answer, and making oath in court that he is unable, by reason of poverty, to employ a solicitor to put in his answer, the Court is thereupon to refer it to the Master to inquire into the truth of that allegation, and to report thereon to the Court forthwith; and the Court may employ a solicitor to conduct such inquiry on the behalf of such defendant; and if the Master reports such defendant to be unable by reason of poverty to employ a solicitor to put in his answer, the Court may assign a solicitor and counsel for such defendant, to enable him to put in his answer.

Pro confesso.—Preliminary proceedings.

LXXVI. Upon the execution of an attachment for want of answer against any defendant, or at any time within three weeks afterwards, the plaintiff may cause such defendant to be served with a notice of motion to be made on some day not less than three weeks after the day of such service, that the bill may be taken pro confesso against such defendant; and thereupon, unless such defendant has in the meantime put in his answer to the bill, or obtained further time to answer the same, the Court, if it so thinks fit, may order the bill to be taken pro confesso against such defendant, either immediately, or at such time, and upon such terms, and subject to such conditions, as under the circumstances of the case the Court thinks proper.

LXXVII. In cases where any defendant, either being or not being within the jurisdiction of the Court, does not put in his answer in due time after appearance entered by or for him, and the plaintiff is unable, with due diligence, to procure a writ of attachment, or any subsequent process, for want of answer, to be executed against such defendant by reason of his being out of the jurisdiction of the Court, or being concealed, or for any other cause, then such defendant is, for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to obtain an order to take the bill pro confesso, to be deemed to have absconded to avoid, or to have refused to obey, the process of the Court.

LXXVIII. In cases where any defendant who, under Order LXXVII. may be deemed to have absconded to avoid, or to have refused to obey, the process of the Court, has appeared in person, or by his own solicitor, the plaintiff may serve upon such defendant or his solicitor a notice, that on a day in such notice named (being not less than fourteen days after the service of such notice) the Court will be moved that the bill may be taken pro confesso against such defendant; and the plaintiff is, upon the hearing of such motion, to satisfy the Court that such defendant ought, under the provisions of Order LXXVII. to be deemed to have absconded to avoid, or to have refused to obey, the process of the Court; and the Court being so satisfied, and the answer not being filed, may, if it so thinks fit, order the bill to be taken pro confesso against such defendant, either immediately, or at such time or upon such further notice as under the circumstances of the case the Court may think proper.

LXXIX. In cases where any defendant who, under Order LXXVII. may be deemed to have absconded to avoid or to have refused to obey the process of the Court, has had an appearance entered for him under Orders XXIX., XXXI., or XXXIII. and has not afterwards appeared in person or by his own solicitor, the plaintiff may cause to be inserted in the London Gazette a notice that on a day in such notice named (being not less than four weeks after the first insertion of such notice in the London Gazette) the Court will be moved that the bill may be taken pro confesso against such defendant; and the plaintiff is, upon the hearing of such motion, to satisfy the Court that such defendant ought, under the provisions of Order LXXVII. to be deemed to have absconded to avoid or to have refused to obey the process of the Court, and that such notice of motion has been inserted in the London Gazette at least once in every week from the time of the first insertion thereof up to the time for which the said notice is given; and the Court being so satisfied, and the answer not having been filed, may, if it so thinks fit, order the bill to be taken pro confesso against such defendant, either immediately or at such time or upon such further notice as, under the circumstances of the case, the Court may think proper.

LXXX. Any defendant being in custody for want of his answer, and submitting to have the bill taken pro confesso against him, may apply to the Court, upon motion with notice to be served on the plaintiff, to be discharged out of custody; and thereupon the Court may order the bill to be taken pro confesso against such defendant, and may order him to be discharged out of custody upon such terms as appear to be just, unless it appears from the nature of the plaintiff's case or otherwise to the satisfaction of the Court that justice cannot be done to the plaintiff without discovery or further discovery from such defendant.

Pro confesso—Hearing—Decree.

LXXXI. No cause in which an order is made that a bill be taken pro confesso against a defendant is to be heard on the same day on which the order is made; but the cause is to be set down to be heard, and the Court, if it so thinks fit, may appoint a special day for the hearing thereof.

LXXXII. A defendant against whom an order to take a bill pro confesso is made is at liberty to appear at the hearing of the cause; and if he waives all objection to the order, but not otherwise, he may be heard to argue the case upon the merits as stated in the bill.

LXXXIII. Upon the hearing of a cause in which a bill has been ordered to be taken pro confesso, such decree is to be made as to the Court seems just; and in the case of any defendant who has appeared at the hearing and waived all objection to such order to take the bill pro confesso, or against whom the order has been made after appearance by himself or his own solicitor, or upon notice served on or after the execution of a writ of attachment against him, the decree is to be absolute.

LXXXIV. In pronouncing the decree, the Court may, either upon the case stated in the bill, or upon that case and a petition presented by the plaintiff for the purpose, as the case may require, order a receiver of the real and personal estate of the defendant against whom the bill has been ordered to be taken pro confesso to be appointed with the usual directions, or direct a sequestration of such real and personal estate to be issued, and may (if it appears to be just) direct payment to be made out of such real or personal estate of such sum or sums of money as at the hearing or any subsequent stage of the cause the plaintiff appears to be entitled to: provided that unless the decree be absolute, such payment is not to be directed without security being given by the plaintiff for restitution, if the Court afterwards thinks fit to order restitution to be made.

LXXXV. A decree founded on a Bill taken pro confesso is to be passed and entered as other decrees.

LXXXVI. After a decree founded on a bill taken pro confesso has been passed and entered, an office copy thereof is (unless the Court dispenses with service thereof) to be served on the defendant against whom the order to take the bill pro confesso was made, or his solicitor; and if the decree be not absolute under Order LXXXIII. such defendant or his solicitor is to be at the same time served with a notice to the effect that if such defendant desires permission to answer the plaintiff's bill and set aside the decree, application for that purpose must be made to the Court within the time specified in the notice, or that such defendant will be absolutely excluded from making any such application.

LXXXVII. If such notice as is mentioned in Order LXXXVI. is to be served within the jurisdiction of the Court, the time therein specified for such application to be made by the defendant is to be three weeks after service of such notice; but if such notice is to be served out of the jurisdiction of the Court, such time is to be specially appointed by the Court on the ex parte application of the plaintiff.

LXXXVIII. No proceeding is to be taken and no receiver appointed under the decree, nor any sequestrator under any sequestration issued in pursuance thereof is to take possession of or in any manner intermeddle with any part of the real or personal estate of a defendant, and no other process is to issue to compel performance of the decree without leave of the Court, which is to be obtained on motion, with notice served on such defendant or his solicitor, unless the Court dispenses with such service.

LXXXIX. Any defendant waiving all objection to the order to take the bill pro confesso, and submitting to pay such costs as the Court may direct, may, before enrolment of the decree, have the cause reheard upon the merits stated in the bill, the petition for rehearing being signed by counsel as other petitions for rehearing.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

MR. PYKE'S CASE.

We have received from Mr. Pyke a report of the proceedings before the judges on his unsuccessful appeal from the decision of the Benchers. We confess we cannot find in what manner it helps his case; but as he seems to think it a sort of audi alteram partem, we give it a place:—

MR. PYKE'S CASE AND THE INNS OF COURT.

Hilary, Easter, and Trinity Terms, 1845.

In the matter of H. H. PYKE, Esq. of the Home Circuit, Barrister-at-Law, appellant;

And

The TREASURER and MASTERS of the BENCH of the Hon. Society of Gray's Inn, respondents.

This important petition of appeal came on to be heard at the end of last Hilary Term, before the fifteen judges of England, when twelve of their lordships presided, including the Right Honourables the three Chiefs, Lord Denman, Sir N. C. Tindal, Knight, and the Lord Chief Baron.

The appellant, Mr. Pyke, conducted his own case, attended by his solicitor, and (inter alia) urged upon their lordships that the principles involved not only deeply affected his own, but the rights of 3,000 of the Bar of England, and, in fact, both branches of the profession, also those gentlemen now or hereafter preparing to enter it; and that there was not the slightest ground to warrant so severe and ruinous a sentence, passed upon him by the Benchers of Gray's-inn—Disbarral, degradation, and expulsion—independent of their utter want of power to do so.

The Benchers were represented by four of their body, headed by Francis Whitmarsh, esq. Q. C. and Mr. Ryland, the City Pleader, in support of their sentence for an alleged breach of etiquette, but denied to be so by the appellant.

The first and main ground relied on by the appellant, Mr. Pyke, was, that the inns of court had no inherent or judicial right by law or custom to disbar, degrade, or expel; and after tracing the origin of the inns of court, and the dealings of the Crown with this once judicial university, shewn to be so by all the early text writers, the appellant finally produced the opinions of Mr. Bethell, Q. C. and Sir John Dodson, with the authorities there cited by those learned counsel in the case of Mr. Ward and the University of Oxford (against the proposed degradation of that reverend gentleman), and finally quoted Horne's Mirror of Justices' Abuses of the Common Laws, chapter 5, page 230, No. 42, in which it is expressly laid down that it is abuse to suspend a pleader if he be not attaint of trespass, for which he is condemnable to corporal punishment; thus shewing that suspension is the only punishment; and Mr. Pyke urged even in that case the inns of court had no power; that it was alone the privilege of their lordships to exercise, in the shape of silencing a barrister if his acts provoked it; and that their lordships were agents of the Crown, who is alone the visitor of the inns of court.

Their lordships repeatedly deliberated, and intimated that the matter of the petition of appeal should then at once go back to be reconsidered by the Benchers, but finally the case went over to Easter Term for judgment.

Easter Term.—Kelly, Q. C. and Baddeley, having this Term obtained a rule nisi for a mandamus to the authorities of the University of Oxford to restore to the Rev. Mr. Ward his degrees of B.A. and M.A. and the principles involved being in many respects similar to the case of the appellant, Mr. Pyke—Judgment deferred.

Trinity Term.—Council Chamber, Monday, May 26. (Before 13 Judges.)—Mr. Pyke further heard against the alleged right and power of the inns of court to disbar and suspend, and, inter alia, in the case of solicitors who may quit their profession for the Bar, and the gross injustice of the sentence upon him.

Council Chamber, Monday, June 9. (Before 11 Judges.)—Their lordships affirmed the judgment of the Benchers.

UNITED LAW CLERKS' SOCIETY. — The thirteenth anniversary of this society was celebrated on the 13th inst. by a public dinner, presided over by Mr. Baron Alderson. There were also present Mr. Baron Platt, H. Twiss, esq. D. Wakefield, esq. T. G. Teed, esq. J. Willcock, esq. D. Mallnes, esq. Sir G. Stephen, Mr. Secondary Potter, J. Walten, esq. and about eighty other gentlemen of both professions. After the cloth was withdrawn, Benedictus was sung by Messrs. Hobbs, Hatton, Hawkins, and Chapman. The usual loyal toasts were first proposed, then the chairman, in a speech eulogising the meritorious objects of the institution, proposed, " Prosperity to the United Law Clerks' Society." The toast was received with the warmest enthusiasm. Several other toasts followed, including the healths of the chairman, of the Lord Chancellor, and of Lord Cottenham. Among the subscriptions, the total of which amounted to 600*l.* the following were announced:— G. Henderson, 3*l.* 3*s.*; Sir G. Stephen, 5*l.* 5*s.*; Messrs. Collett and Co. 5*l.* 5*s.*; J. Freshfield, esq. 10*l.* 10*s.*; Mr. Justice Erle, 10*l.*; Lord Tenterden, 5*l.* 5*s.*; Mr. Baron Alderson, 10*l.* 10*s.*; Mr. Justice Coltman, 5*l.* 5*s.*; Lord Ellenborough, 5*l.* 5*s.*; Mr. Baron Platt, 10*l.* 10*s.*; and H. Twiss, esq. 5*l.* 5*s.*

SERJEANTS'-INN-HALL.—In the matter of Henry Hugh Pyke.—By an order of pension made by the benchers of the Hon. Society of Gray's-inn, on the 11th of December, 1844, Mr. Pyke was disbarred and expelled the society. Mr. Pyke appealed against that order to the judges, as visitors of the inns of court, and was heard at considerable length upon such appeal on two evenings, appointed by the judges for that purpose, at Serjeants'-inn-hall. On Monday, the 9th inst. the judges again met to deliver their judgment upon the appeal. Eleven judges were present, and upon entering the hall they took their seats at the table at the upper end, and immediately upon being seated Lord Denman delivered the decision of the Court:—" We have considered the application of Mr. Pyke against the order made by the Treasurer and Masters of the bench of the Hon. Society of Gray's-inn, and are unanimously of opinion that the order appealed against should be affirmed." The judges, who were all robed, immediately rose and quitted the hall.

LINCOLN'S-INN.—The recent temporary cessation of business in the equity courts will continue up to Monday, the 23rd of June, when they will resume and continue sitting up to about the 22nd of July, when they will rise for the long vacation.

Mr. Frederick Peel, second son of Sir Robert Peel, bart. has just entered the Temple as a student.

MR. AUGUSTUS NEWTON'S CASE.—We are requested by Mr. NEWTON to state that of the three charges preferred against him one only was proved, viz., that he had acted as counsel for parties at petty sessions without the intervention of an attorney. His defence was, that it is the practice for counsel in the superior courts to accept briefs direct from parties, where they appear in person upon the record, and not by attorney, and that the case of parties at petty sessions is analogous. Mr. Newton states also that it is his intention to appeal to the judges against the decision of the benchers.

WILL OF ROBERT LADBROKE, ESQ. THE LATE BANKER.—Probate of the will and two codicils of Robert Ladbroke, late of Hedley, Surrey, and of Florence, in Tuscany, esq. was granted on the 30th ult. to the nephew, Felix Ladbroke, Edmond Saxton Pery Calvert, and William Beresford, esqrs. the executors. Personal estate in England sworn under 160,000*l.* The testator died on the first of February last, at Florence. The will is dated 23rd July, 1842, and the last codicil in July, 1844, and confirms the will. He leaves an annuity of 1,400*l.* a year to his brother Henry Ladbroke, and 500*l.* a year to the wife of his nephew Felix Ladbroke, if she should survive her husband. Devises and bequeaths his freehold and leasehold estates in England to his nephew, Felix Ladbroke, and his issue male; in default to his brother, Henry Ladbroke, and his issue male; in default to his cousin, Edmond Saxton Pery Calvert, and his male issue, and so on; and in default of male issue to his right heirs, to take the name of Ladbroke, and bear the family arms. Bequeaths the residue of his estates in England, Italy, or elsewhere, to his nephew, Felix Ladbroke.—Sunday Times.

IRELAND.

Matthew Baker, esq. Q.C. has been appointed Crown Prosecutor for the Connaught Circuit.

The following days have been fixed for holding the assizes upon the Home Circuit. The days for holding the assizes upon the circuits have not yet been announced. Carlow, Tuesday, July 8th. JUSTICES' CLERKS BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I beg to call the attention of your professional readers (especially of those who have any concern with the duties of magistrates and their clerks) to a specimen of the reckless legislation of the present day in a notice given by Capt. Pechell for the introduction of a clause in the Justices' Clerks and Clerks of the Peace Bill to the following effect:—"That the clerk of every bench of justices in England shall, within twenty-four hours after a conviction (under any statute where an appeal is allowed) cause such conviction to be made out in writing, and to be signed by the convicting justice or justices under a penalty of 50*l*." The bench of justices to whom I act as clerk meet (for the convenience of the district) at a place near the centre of the division, about eight miles from any town, and from three to five miles from the respective residences of each of the justices. The business not unfrequently lasts until five or six o'clock in the afternoon. Now I would ask any man of common sense how it is possible, with any due regard to the care and accuracy requisite in drawing up convictions (especially in cases where an appeal is likely to follow), that the convictions made at any of our petty sessions (and many will be similarly circumstanced) should be made out and taken, or sent round, to the justices for their signatures by the same hour the following day? This is something of a piece with the repeated assertions, or at least inferences, made by Mr. Escott and others, that the costs payable by a defendant on a conviction all go into the pocket of the clerk; whereas, if the parties making such assertions knew any thing of the matter, they would know that three-fourths of the costs are the expenses of the constable and witnesses, who must be paid for leaving their homes and attending the best part of the day at the petty sessions. I am, &c.

G. H. Seymour,
Clerk to the North-Riding Magistrates,
Bulmer Division.

SMALL DEBTS BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I concur with you in approving the principle of Lord Brougham's Bill for the amendment of the law relative to the recovery of debts not exceeding 20*l*.; and presuming that creditors generally will readily accord their approval also, it seems most desirable that the Profession, through the different Law Societies, and by all means within their power, should exert their utmost efforts, not only in pointing out defects in the Bill, but in suggesting improvements, so as to secure, as far as possible, its efficiency for the purpose intended, when it shall have become law.

And premising that I concur generally in your observations in the last number of the Law Times, I shall merely beg leave to offer my mite to the general stock of suggestions and observations you appear to have received from other quarters.

First, then, as to the question of jurisdiction: a very little extension appears only to be required so as to render its operation effective in certain localities; as, for instance, where there are no near commissioners of bankruptcy, or courts of request having a barrister or attorney as judge, it should give jurisdiction to the now existing courts of requests; and where there are no such courts, then to the magistracy in petty and quarter sessions, either, or both—or, at the option of the creditor, to a judge at chambers, out of which the process issued on which the judgment shall have been obtained; that is, until such commissioners or courts as contemplated by the Bill should be established within such localities, if any, when their jurisdiction might be declared to cease; and which I cannot but think might easily be got introduced into the Bill, it not at all appearing to affect any existing interest, or "judicial arrangement of the country," and would render the jurisdiction efficient.

Its other defects, some of them so lamentably serious (and which you have so appropriately pointed out), I shall not attempt to grapple with, but suggest that they at once become the subject of close investigation by the different law societies, and that after they have discussed the subject, and matured their different plans, a deputation from each do meet in London, who shall then, together with the Incorporated Metropolitan Society, and the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association, or otherwise as may be agreed upon, digest and consolidate the amendments, and obtain the aid of some M. P. in order to effect the desired object: and it should be remembered that not a moment's time should be lost, if the Bill is to be carried in an efficient shape during the present session.

Before taking leave of the subject, I would suggest, in reference to Mr. Green's suggestion, to which you refer, that I think with him in the main, but must dissent from the proposition that the order to be made for imprisonment on disobedience, will, in numerous cases, be sufficient for the enforcement of payment; and hence I would suggest that the most efficient remedy would be to enact that service of the order on the party having the wages, &c. to pay (and which should extend to moneys in savings' banks, in the hands of trustees under wills, &c. &c.) should operate as an attachment and authorize the master, &c. to pay the amount ordered to the creditor direct (without being permitted to go in the debtor's hands), whose receipt should be sufficient, and discharge his liability to the debtor to the extent of the sum ordered &c.: but nevertheless the power to imprison should be retained, or the rogue without either property or income would go scot-free.

I would also suggest that the provision for the examination of the creditor only requires modification; he ought not certainly to be driven into proof of his debt, farther than that in fact he has a judgment for such an amount; but to be at liberty to be examined, or give evidence of any fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the debtor at the time of contracting the debt, and of his subsequent conduct in evading payment, as well as of a vexatious defence, &c. for the information of the Court in making its order, but nothing more. I am, Sir, &c.

THE QUEEN v. BUCHANAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—Seeing you have promised a full notice of the above proceeding in the Law Times of Saturday next, will you think it intruding too much to remark at the same time that the defendant is not Mr. Buchanan, one of the solicitors to the "Commercial Association for the Opposition of Fraudulent Insolvents;" a fact which, if not known, might prejudice the early efforts of the society.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

THE QUEEN v. BUCHANAN.

To the Editor of the Times.

Sir,—Several persons having asked me if I am the person indicted for practising as an unqualified attorney at the Canterbury Sessions, I trust, as there are only two attorneys of the above name in London, you will be good enough to insert in your paper that I am not the person. The real defendant, I believe, is, or was, clerk to the board of guardians of the Chatham Union, and the prosecution is, I am informed, to raise a point of law under the Poor Law Act.

As the continued supposition that I am the person indicted would inflict a serious injury on my business, I trust you will insert this denial in your next publication. I am, Sir, &c.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"An Original Subscriber" submits to the Profession the following question of professional etiquette. Our first impression is certainly that it is a legitimate transaction.

In several parts of the country there are solicitors who now buy and sell railway shares for their clients, for which they receive a commission according to the price of the shares, contending that this is a legitimate branch of practice. If such conduct be unprofessional, it calls for the notice of the Law Societies and the law journals; and, if not, it is equally desirable that all should know that they may pursue a similar course without impropriety. The subject is particularly worthy of consideration at the present time, when investments in the shares of joint-stock companies have become the most important and most profitable channels for the capital of the country.

A Solicitor complains of another clause in the Small Debts Bill:—

The Bill, as sent down from the Peers to the House of Commons, has (since the passing through committee) received the addition of a jobbing clause, viz. —"That the taxing Master of the Court of Bankruptcy need not be an attorney or solicitor." This is to qualify by Act of Parliament Mr. Winslow, junior, who has acted as taxing Master since the death of Mr. D. H. Richardson.

Surely the attorneys ought to remonstrate against this system of depriving them of the offices they are fairly entitled to fill.

"A Subscriber" submits the following point of professional etiquette to the experienced of the Profession, whose opinions will oblige.

An estate was mortgaged in fee to a feme sole who afterwards married. On the money being paid off, the husband and wife reconveyed the property; the reconveyance was prepared by the mortgagor's solicitor, and approved, in the usual way, by the mortgagee's solicitor. The deed requiring acknowledgment by the wife, pursuant to the statute 3 & 4 Wm. 4, a question arose with the solicitors, which was entitled to prepare the certificate, affidavit, &c.; file same, and receive the charges attending the acknowledgment. The mortgagee's solicitor rested his claim on the acknowledgment being part of the execution of the deed by his client; whilst the mortgagor's solicitor alleged that it was as much his right to prepare the affidavit, certificate, file same, and receive the charges relating thereto, as to prepare the reconveyance.

Will you, or any of your numerous friends, be so good as answer the above practical question, and in doing so state the reason or authority for it?

"A Devonshire Attorney" thus objects to certain clauses in the Justices' Clerks and Clerks of the Peace Bill:—

In that number of your valuable paper which was published on the 24th ult. you inserted some new clauses which had been introduced as amendments to this Bill. As I have not seen any comment thereon in either of your subsequent numbers, allow me to ask whether, under clause A, the justices will have power to order that the duties of their clerk shall include the prosecution of offenders, &c. although such clerk may not be an attorney? It may not be known to you that in Devonshire the justices' clerks are frequently not attorneys. Should such be the effect of the clause, the injustice is very manifest. Indeed, if such be not its effect, the clause appears to me very prejudicial to practitioners generally.

It is well known that in most prosecutions the prosecutors themselves have to bear some, and sometimes heavy costs, and this must still be so, though the justices' clerks may be employed. Is it fair to take these costs (not paid by the county) from the regular professional adviser of the prosecutor, and put them into the pocket of the justices' clerk?

Almost all the costs which the county pays are for witnesses' and prosecutors' attendance and expenses, and for the indictment. Very little is allowed for professional charges, for brief, and attending trial, &c. It is very questionable whether the proposed alteration would not entail greater expense on some counties, and it is very certain that it would deprive many practitioners of a legitimate source of income.

THE SMALL DEBTS BILL.

THE more we reflect upon the clause so insidiously introduced into this measure, permitting parties to appear by other than counsel or attorney, the more forcibly do we feel the necessity for prompt and energetic exertion on the part of the Profession to procure its erasure before the Bill is permitted to pass the Commons. The practical operation of this provision will be virtually to repeal the protection intended to be afforded by the Attorneys and Solicitors Act; its certain consequence will be, not merely to foster the existing race of sham lawyers, already too numerous and audacious, but to breed a new and countless spawn of these pests of society, who will flourish under the sanction of law, and commit every kind of rascality with impunity. The law, as it is, wisely provides that a suitor may, if he please, appear and conduct his suit in person; but if he desires to appear by an agent, the law requires that the agent shall be an officer of the court duly qualified for the task, and responsible to the Court for his conduct. Wherefore these provisions? For the benefit of the lawyer? Certainly not, but for the security of the client. It is for the suitor's sake,—to save him from the ruinous consequences of incapacity or dishonesty in the person to whom his property or honour is to be confided, that the law of attorneys has been framed, and that suitors are required, when they need an agent, to employ one who has been subjected to certain tests, and is amenable to the Courts in which he practises. Lord BROUGHAM'S Bill flies in the face of this wise principle of our judicature; it establishes a new corps of practitioners, for whose fitness and fairness no security is provided, and who may with impunity commit whatever malpractices they please, so that they keep clear of offences actually indictable.

Such is the effect of this mischievous clause as respects the public these are the general objections to it. The Lawyers have equal or stronger grounds of complaint. The law has imposed upon them an expensive education and heavy taxes for admission into their Profession, and for permission to practise. It subjects them to the jealous supervision of the judicial authorities, and surrounds them with punishments for any breach of faith in the conduct of their business. In return for these burdens and securities, it has guaranteed to them the privilege of conducting the legal affairs of the community, still subject, both as to their charges and for their conduct, to the control of the authorities. The existing members of the Profession have fulfilled their part of the bargain; to permit others who have been subjected to none of the conditions now to come in and reap some of the advantages, is a violation of good faith which would be disgraceful to a legislature, and which needs only to be set properly before the House of Commons to be at once abandoned.

But how, in the absence of any man in the House of Commons to be to the Lawyer what Mr. WAKLEY is to the Medical Profession,—the protector of their interests, the representative of their views,—how, we ask, can the object desired be best pursued? Petitions are worthless: there remains only the less noisy but more effective plan of an application from each Law Society to all the members connected with its locality, pointing out the mischiefs of the clause, and requesting its expurgation; and the two central Associations—the Law Institution and "the Metropolitan and Provincial Society"—should direct their still more efficient powers to the agitation of the fountain head, and to convince the Government that it would be unwise to permit such a bad clause to destroy a good measure.

A QUESTION ANSWERED.

A CORRESPONDENT asks, "What are the uses and advantages of joining the Verulam Society?"

The reply to this question affords an opportunity for briefly reviewing what has been already accomplished, and estimating what each member has actually gained by it.

Just a year has elapsed since the operations of the society actually commenced.

In that short period have been produced no less than five series of practical reports, upwards of seventy different Forms for office use, and a volume that will be indispensable to every member of the Profession: to wit,—Mr. Allnutt's edition of the New Orders in Chancery. The reports are now sufficiently advanced to enable a comparison to be formed between them and others, we mean as to their cost, for of their intrinsic worth it becomes not us to offer an opinion,—the verdict of the Profession has been already pronounced upon that.

The Real Property and Conveyancing Reports, and the Criminal Law Reports, are unique, and consequently cannot be tried by any standard. But a comparison between the others and their contemporaries will shew precisely what the Profession has profited by their lower prices.

The Magistrates' Cases for one whole year are now published. Their total cost to members is 9s.

The cost of the New Sessions Cases for the same period is just 1*l.* 4s. Moreover, the cases reported in the Verulam are much more numerous than those in the latter.

Thus on this single series of reports there is a direct gain to the practitioner of 15s. in the year.

So is it with the Registration Appeals. The cost in the Verulam is 1s.; the others are 5s.

The same proportion is preserved in the other series. The Practice Cases, although far more numerous and complete, and comprising both equity and common law, cost rather less than one-half the cost of Dowling & Lowndes, limited to common law.

The part of the Criminal Law Cases at 4s. contains more reports than a 10s. part of Carrington & Kirwan.

As for the forms; the members obtain these at one-fourth less than the usual cost. There is not an office which does not consume upon an average 5*l.* worth of forms in a year.

We are now in a position to estimate the advantages which in this single first year the members have reaped, and that under all the disadvantages of a beginning.

Thirty-four numbers of reports have appeared; some of these can be procured nowhere beside, and all are very much less costly than others. But passing over this, looking only to the gain which a member has beyond the public, there will appear a clear advantage on the reports of 16s.; and if he use 5*l.* worth of forms, on them of 1*l.* 5s., making a total clear gain of 2*l.* 1s. in a single year, in return for his half-guinea entrance fee.

If such has been the advantage in one year, how much greater will it be as publication proceeds. When the entire series of forms are completed, and the contemplated text-books are brought out, for which only added numbers are wanting, the annual advantage to the members will grow in the same proportion.

It is hoped that these plain figures will prove to our correspondent that the advantages of the Verulam Society are not theoretical, but tangible—not results that may be, but gain that has been great already, with certainty of rapid multiplication.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

No. 2 of Registration Appeals, comprising those of Michaelmas Term last, will be published on Monday; No. 8, completing Part II. of Practice Cases in Law and Equity, is published this day. LAWS OF FRANCE.
No. IX.
COUR ROYALE OF ROUEN.

Solemn Sittings(a) of the 7th and 8th May. Foreigners can bring an action before the French Courts for the piracy of their names, marks, and labels.

Fully to understand this case, our former article (4 Law Times, 82), in which the decision of the Cour de Cassation was given, only a short statement is necessary on the present occasion.

The house of Rowland and Son, London, invented some years ago a cosmetic well known under the name of Macassar oil.

To prevent counterfeit, the house of Rowland not only adopted bottles and labels of a peculiar shape, but also applied the fac-simile of the signature of the house to each label.

The French, and especially the Parisian counterfeiters, not only did not content themselves with manufacturing Macassar oil, but imitated exactly the labels,—even the fac-simile of the signature.

The house of Rowland and Son summoned them for this usurpation, and demanded damages, which were awarded by the Tribunal de Commerce of the Seine, whose decision was confirmed by the Cour Royale of Paris.

The Court of Cassation, appealed to against this decree, annulled it August 14th, 1844. Inasmuch as—

The action was not legally authorized either by general or by special right:

That the laws of the 28th July, 1824, and of the 22nd Germinal, year 11, relating to counterfeits, do not intimate that the benefit of them may be applied to foreigners not admitted to enjoy the civil rights of France.

That, according to Art. 11 and 13 of the Civil Code, foreigners not admitted to the enjoyment of the civil rights by the king's authority only enjoy in France the civil rights which are reciprocally granted to Frenchmen by the treaty with the nation to which the foreigners belong:

That Rowland and Son do not allege having been admitted by the king's authority to the enjoyment of the civil rights of France; that no treaty between France and England reciprocally admits manufacturers of both countries to exercise in each their rights of action on account of the use of their names.

This judgment, the heads of which only we give here, referred the case, on the plea of a wrong application of the law, to the Cour Royale of Rouen where it has been tried again.

The counterfeiters' advocate, in enlarging upon the decree of the Court of Cassation, stated that, in the absence of a treaty, it was unjust that foreigners might counterfeit, as they pleased, all our productions with the greatest impunity, and that, on our side, instigated by a vain generosity, we should endeavour to prevent our manufacturers deriving some little profit from similar piracies, for which, do what we will, we should ever be behind-hand with our English neighbours.

The sacred property of a name, that the house of Rowland pretends to claim, for fear it should fall into discesteem or be dishonoured, this name is, in fact, but a simple mark placed on goods, and which serves to designate them.

And, moreover, by what right shall a foreigner, who cannot avail himself of reciprocal treaties, and who, neither by patent nor by taxes, contributes to the expenses of the state, come and benefit by the civil laws of that state—laws whose name alone declares to be applicable to citizens only?

The house of Rowland pretends to have sustained detriment; they have not the right of complaining. In this case it is not the same as in the affair of the Britannia, in which the Court judged that a Frenchman, wronged abroad by a foreigner, could demand reparation for the damage before the French Courts; to the fact of an injury having been sustained, was added the rights of a denizen in the person of the plaintiff.

(a) Audiences Solennelles,—that is to say all the Courts united.

The advocate of Rowland and Son maintained that, on the contrary, the rights claimed in this case were rights recognised in all countries where the law of nations was acknowledged, and, according to those rights, they could not reject a man's claims, of whatever nation he might be, upon the plea that his claims could not be admitted.

The Procureur-General then summed up the case. He first expressed himself strongly against the dishonesty of the claims of the French counterfeiters, who, not content with having by one theft counterfeited the product invented by the English house, had attempted a robbery still more audacious, in taking even the name. Then, taking into consideration the rights of the case, the Procureur-General confirmed the judgment, and adopted the opinions of the Tribunal de Commerce of Paris.

The Court after a long deliberation rendered a judgment, admitting the doctrine of the Court of Cassation on Art. 11 and 13 of the Civil Code, and on the laws of Germinal, year 11, and 1821, but declaring that the proceedings admitted by Art. 1382 of the Civil Code, against the author of any damage, might be claimed by a foreigner, and that with regard to that the Frenchman was bound by the quasi-contract (quasi-contrat) resulting from his action.

Considering that the property of the name of a house was of the law of nations, and might be claimed by every one before the French courts, who ought to ordain the suppression of every thing which might be injurious to that property,

The Court confirmed the judgment of the Tribunal de Commerce of the Seine.

This doctrine is equitable,(b) and we do not doubt that, should another appeal be lodged before the Court of Cassation, this supreme court will pronounce that the Cour Royale of Rouen has rightly applied the law.

Art. 1382 of the Civil Code compels all persons having occasioned an injury to repair it, and as this law belongs more to the law of nations than to civil rights, the foreigner ought to enjoy it as well as the denizen. N. Treitt.

Paris, May 24, 1845. Avocat à la Cour Royale.

(b) Our readers may recollect that, in the article to which we have already referred them, we differed in opinion from the judgment given by the Court of Cassation, which we considered as a narrow apprehension of the spirit of our laws.—4 Law Times, 83.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

The Laws of Patents in Foreign Countries, translated, with Notes, &c. By R. W. Urling, of Brussels, Patent Agent. London, 1845. Simpkin and Co.

This is an extremely useful volume to inventors, and, indeed, to all engaged in administering the Law of Patents. Ample information is given as to the processes necessary to secure a patent in almost every civilized country. As it is only of limited interest to our readers, we need do no more than notice its appearance, recommending it to those who may have occasion to seek acquaintance with its subject matter.

Equity Reports: containing the Reports in the Courts of the V. C. of England, V. C. Bruce, and V. C. Wigram. Edited and arranged by William Holt, Esq. Barrister-at-law. London, 1845. Addison.

"If this work," says the preface, "is needed by the Profession, it is sure to meet the success it deserves; and if it is not required, it is as well it should be discontinued."

The question thus raised time only can determine; but it is one that must present itself to every reader as it did to the proprietors. Is the work needed?

Already each of the Vice-Chancellor's Courts has its regular reporter, therefore, simply as a record of the decisions of these courts, it supplies no deficiency. Hence it must rest its claims to support on one of two grounds; either that the reports are substantially superior, or that they are brought out with more rapidity.

Are they superior to the regular reports? This the projectors themselves would not assert. The argument then resolves itself into the simple query, are they produced with more rapidity than the regular reports?

They are so: and now comes the doubt we entertain whether their publication in this form a few weeks earlier than in the regular reports will prove a sufficient inducement to the Profession to incur the cost their purchase will entail, in addition to that of the regular reports, for the latter must still be procured when they come out, and will of course ever remain the established authority. No new reports can be substituted for the authorized ones; they can only be used for cases not reported in the latter, or in the interval before their appearance. It is for this reason that two species of reports of any court, and two only, are ever required by the practitioner, namely, the regular report, as the standard authority which, because it is to be the ultimate authority, demands immense care in the getting up, and therefore must inevitably be tardy of publication, and a speedy report giving immediate information of the points decided, to be a guide to the practitioner until he shall receive the cases set out at length in the regular report. No series of reports of any court can flourish which does not fall under one of these two classes, because no other can be of much practical utility to the Profession, and into these all existing reports, and all new projects, must ultimately resolve themselves.

Bearing this in mind, let us see if there be any and what prospect of such a work as this upon our table being needed by the Profession. We must say that, notwithstanding its intrinsic merits, we can discover none. It does not belong to either of the classes of reports we have named. It is not the regular report of the courts, nor can it ever be substituted for it. The practitioner, therefore, cannot take these instead of the recognised authorities. They add some 3*l*. or 4*l*. per annum to his expenses; but, though they supply him with information before the regular reports, and so far are useful, still he has to ask himself if that utility be not too dearly purchased. Can he not, in fact, procure the same information elsewhere, at a very much less cost? The answer must be in the affirmative. It is true that he needs a speedy report of the points decided by the equity courts, to serve him until their appearance in the authorized reports; but this is already supplied to him by the Law Journal, the Jurist, &c.; and these not only furnish him with all the speedy reports he requires of the three courts comprised in the book before us, but of all the other courts of law and equity with them, at a less cost than will be that of these three courts only.

For these reasons we cannot come to the conclusion that the design of which this is the first portion is needed by the Profession, and, if not needed, we fear that even the ability employed upon it will not make it successful. In itself it is a well got up work, and if it could be substituted for the regular report of the three Vice-Chancellors' courts, the Profession would have no cause to regret the exchange. The reports are full, and apparently accurate; they are very artistically written. Useful notes accompany some of the cases, and a copious index gives ready access to the contents of the volume. We are in duty bound to state to our readers the reasons that appear to us to militate against the design of this enterprise, but we must at the same time speak in terms of unqualified praise of its execution.

The Statutes 7 & 8 Vict. cc. 96, 70, and 111, and all the New Rules and Orders relating to Bankruptcy and Insolvency; together with the Recent Decisions, &c. By John Herber Koe, Esq. Q. C. and Samuel Miller, Esq. Barristers-at-Law. London, 1845. Butterworth.

This volume is intended to be a continuation of Montague and Ayrton's Bankrupt Law. Its title describes the nature of its contents. The digest of cases decided since the publication of the above standard work will be of considerable utility. Glancing over them, we are surprised to see that the editors have taken none from the Law Times, although more than one-half of the decisions on the Law of Bankruptcy and Insolvency have been reported nowhere beside.

NECROLOGY.

LORD HARRIS.

We have to record the demise of the above gallant nobleman, who died on Friday last, to the deep grief of his family, at Belmont, his seat near Faversham, Kent, after a short illness. We have been informed that his lordship complained of indisposition on Tuesday, and that his illness continued on the increase until Friday, when he expired, surrounded by his amiable wife and children.

The deceased, William George Harris, was eldest son of General Lord Harris, who rendered such distinguished services at the taking of Seringapatam, and who for that and his other eminent services in the East Indies had a peerage conferred on him by his Sovereign, in 1815, by the title of Baron Harris of Seringapatam, in the East Indies, and of Belmont, in the county of Kent. His lordship was born on the 17th of January, 1782, and was consequently in his 64th year. He was twice married—namely, first, on the 17th of October, 1809, to Miss Eliza Serena Anne Dick, daughter of Mr. William Dick, who died on the 23rd of January, 1817; and secondly, 28th May, 1824, to Miss Isabella Temple, only child of Mr. Robert Handcock Temple, who survives his lordship. The noble lord had families by both alliances.

He succeeded to the title on the death of his father, in May, 1829: and after having enjoyed the title for 16 years, he is succeeded by his eldest son, by his first marriage, the Hon. George Francis Robert Harris, now Lord Harris.

The deceased nobleman, like his father, was brought up to the army, and must have entered the service at an early age, as he joined the 76th Regiment in India in 1797, being at that time lieutenant. He there saw much service, having been present at the battle of Mallavelly, in nearly all the affairs of out-posts, and served in the storming party which carried Seringapatam. He was also at the battle of Blueberg, Cape of Good Hope. He returned to England a lieutenant-colonel, and in 1813 and 1814 served in Holland, in the 73rd Regiment. At the taking of the village of Merxem he commanded a brigade. At Waterloo he displayed marked gallantry, and in that sanguinary battle was severely wounded through the right shoulder.

On his retirement from the lieutenant-colonelcy of the 73rd Regiment he was presented with a superb sword by the officers of that gallant regiment, "in testimony of the high regard they entertained of his character and conduct."

For his services in Holland he was decorated by the King of that country with the Order of William of Holland. He was a Knight Commander of the Royal Hanoverian Guelphic Order, and a Companion of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath.

The deceased lord was appointed colonel of the 73rd Regiment in December, 1835, which of course becomes vacant by his death. His lordship was one of the Gentlemen Ushers to the Queen.

His commission was dated as follows:—Ensign, May 24, 1795; lieutenant, Jan. 3, 1796; captain, Oct. 10, 1800; major, June 15, 1804; lieut.-colonel, Dec. 29, 1806; colonel, June 4, 1814; major-general, July 29, 1821; and lieut.-general, Jan 10, 1837.

The late lord had recently published in a collected form, from authentic materials in the possession of his family, the life of his gallant father, the first Lord Harris.

CONDITIONS REMEDIAL—RESCISSORY.

FROM THE LAW REVIEW.

(2.) There may, notwithstanding, be circumstances under which a treaty or correspondence respecting objections will not affect the vendor's right of rescis-...... This occurred in the case of Page v. Adam (4 Beav. 269), in which the purchaser had filed the bill for a specific performance of the contract. By the 5th condition of sale, it was required that the purchaser should, within twenty-eight days next after the delivery of the abstract, "state in writing and transmit to the vendor's solicitors all objections to the title shewn by such abstract, and all requisitions in respect thereof;" . . . . "and if any such objections are made, and not removed within fourteen days after the expiration of the twenty-eight days herein named, that then, or at any time thereafter, the vendor shall be at full liberty (by notice in writing to be delivered to any purchaser, or his or her solicitor) to annul and put an end to his or her contract for sale." The abstract was delivered and returned in due time with observations and queries. The contract was not thereupon rescinded by the vendor, but answers to the queries were returned. Upon these answers observations were made; and it was with reference to these last observations that the vendor claimed the right of annulling the contract, and gave notice to the purchaser accordingly. The purchaser's chief objection to the title was apparent on the face of the abstract as originally delivered, and consisted of a point of law which, at the hearing of the cause at the Rolls, Lord Langdale, M. R. decided against him. His lordship likewise, under the circumstances of the case, held the right of rescission well exercised; but added, that he should have thought the notice to annul the contract invalid, if, in giving it, the vendor had sought improperly to escape from a duty, which by the nature of the contract he was bound to perform.

As in Page v. Adam, the vendor did not rescind the contract upon the first return of the abstract, but entered into correspondence with the purchaser for the purpose of removing his objection to the title, there seems at first sight to be a variance between the judgment of the Master of the Rolls and that of the Vice-Chancellor of England in Tanner v. Smith. Upon this point the Vice-Chancellor Wigram made the following observations:—"The Vice-Chancellor of England held that a treaty and correspondence between the vendor and purchaser, after the first objection taken, with a view to complete the title, was a waiver of the condition. It was not meant in Page v. Adam to decide that the vendor could take the benefit of the condition after he had waived it; and the case rather points to the conclusion, that Lord Langdale did not consider the treaty and correspondence as necessarily a waiver; and his observations about the good faith of the proceeding on the part of the vendor point the same way." (2 Hare, 110.) In accordance with these remarks of the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, it should be stated that in Page v. Adam the correspondence entered into by the vendor was not with a view to complete the title, or to make any additions to the abstract, but for the purpose of insisting on the sufficiency of the title as deduced by the original abstract; and under these circumstances there is a clear distinction between that case and Tanner v. Smith. "The vendor," says Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in Morley v. Cook, "cannot be bound to do more than bonâ fide deliver such abstract of title as he has at the time of delivering it, if the effect of doing more towards the completion of the title, in answer to the purchaser's requisition, is to have the effect of a waiver of any condition of sale."

(3.) But the vendor's exercise of the right of rescission under such conditions of sale is not conclusive against the purchaser, upon the vendor's simple declaration of his inability to remove the purchaser's objections; and, if needful, the Court will, at the purchaser's instance, direct an inquiry as to the vendor's capability of shewing a good title. In Roberts v. Wyatt (2 Taunt. 268), an abstract had been sent to the purchaser, who, after taking an opinion thereon, had returned it with the objections to the vendor's solicitor. The latter stated that he was unable to clear up the objections of the purchaser's counsel, and refused to deliver up the abstract, though the purchaser offered to take such title as the defendant could make. Upon this the purchaser brought trover for the abstract against the vendor's solicitor: and one of the objections to the action was, that the contract was at an end under a proviso, "that in case the vendor could not deduce a good and marketable title, such as the purchaser or his counsel should approve, or if the purchaser should not pay the purchase-money on the appointed day, the agreement should be utterly void." Sir James Mansfield, C.J. there observed, "The defendant still says, I cannot answer this objection of Mr. Humphreys, and the whole transaction is at an end; but that is not so; if the plaintiff had said the thing is over, the matter might be rescinded. But what says the defendant? 'I cannot answer the objections.' In equity such an answer will not suffice; otherwise a seller, who had altered his mind, might very easily get rid of a contract; but the Courts of Equity say he shall answer on oath, first, in his answer to a bill filed against him, then on examination before a Master, whether a title cannot be made. The Courts often make a way to obviate apparent difficulties, and compel the seller to procure conveyances in order to complete his title; and the defendant's declaration, that he rescinds the contract, will not at all defeat the purchaser's right." And Lawrance, J. concurred, saying, "I am of the same opinion, upon the construction of the proviso; it would be a monstrous construction, if either party could vitiate the agreement by refusing to perform his part of it."

Lord Langdale's remarks at the conclusion of his judgment in Page v. Adam, appear also to coincide with the doctrine of the Court of Common Pleas in Roberts v. Wyatt: and in any other view of the relative rights of the parties, it is obvious that a vendor wishing to escape from his own contract would be clothed with a power which he might exercise in a most unconscientious manner. The vendor's rescissory power under special conditions of sale is, therefore, in nowise an arbitrary or unimpeachable right; and consequently it cannot be safely put in force, except in concurrence with the means of proving the vendor's entire bona fides in the proceeding.

(4.) Neither will a vendor be allowed, by the delivery of a designedly imperfect abstract in the first instance, to secure to himself the opportunity of rescinding the contract.

This point arose in Morley v. Cook, and the Vice-Chancellor Wigram made the following remarks upon it:—"Undoubtedly a Court of Equity would not permit a vendor, who had a good title and the means of shewing such title on his abstract, fraudulently to deliver an imperfect abstract, to which objections would necessarily be taken: and upon these objections being taken, avail himself of his own fraud to avoid his contract under the condition. I agree," continued his Honour, "that a vendor, in a case like the present, is bound to deliver the best abstract that he can; and a Court of Equity would not do a very violent act in holding, that a vendor who, under conditions of this kind, having a perfect abstract, fraudulently delivered one which was imperfect, had, by such fraudulent breach of the conditions on his part, forfeited the benefit of the conditions in his favour." The point did not call for direct decision; but there can be little doubt that his Honour laid down the law with his usual accuracy.

(5.) In order, also, to prevent a vendor from forcing an imperfect title upon a purchaser, it has been ruled that the time limited by the conditions of sale for the statement of the purchaser's objections to the title shall not begin to run until the delivery of a perfect abstract; and consequently that the vendor's right of rescission shall be in like manner deferred.

Thus in Hobson v. Bell (2 Beav. 17), where the subject of contract was a reversionary interest in stock, which was sold by a mortgagee under a power of sale, the 4th condition of sale was as follows:—"The vendor shall deliver an abstract of title to the purchaser or his solicitor within two days of the day of the sale to the stock in question, and all and every objection to the title shall be made and communicated in writing to the vendor's solicitor within twenty-one days after the delivery of the abstract; and if the same be found valid, the vendor shall be at liberty to rescind the contract on returning to the purchaser his deposit money; but all and every objection to the title not so taken and communicated within such period of twenty-one days from the delivery of the abstract aforesaid shall be deemed waived, and in this respect time shall be considered the essence of the contract." The abstract omitted several material parts of the will by which the reversionary interest was created, and was further defective in not giving any evidence of the identity of the stock, or of its liability to the trusts of the will, or of the default by virtue of which the mortgagee's power of sale became exercisable. Lord Langdale, M. R. was clearly of opinion that the abstract was defective, and that it ought to have been originally delivered to the purchaser in a more perfect form: and his lordship proceeded thus:—"To say that the time for making objections should run from the time of delivering that imperfect abstract, from which it could not be ascertained what objections there might be, appears to me extremely unreasonable. The objections could only be taken when a proper opportunity had been given for taking them, or when a perfect abstract had been furnished to the purchaser, and such an abstract has not yet been delivered. By the conditions all objections to the title are to be made within twenty-one days from the delivery of the abstract, that is, within twenty-one days from a time which has not yet arrived. The conditions also provide that all objections not so taken within such period of twenty-one days from the delivery of the abstract shall be deemed waived, and that time shall be considered the essence of the contract, as to the waiver of objections not taken within that time. It appears to me, that upon the construction of these conditions, and having regard to the abstract delivered, time cannot be considered as having been made of the essence of the contract.

The same principle was recognised in Blacklow v. Laws (2 Hare, 40), in which case it appeared that by the 8th condition of sale the purchaser was required within twenty-one days next after the delivery of the abstract to deliver to the vendor's solicitors a statement in writing of such objections to the title disclosed by the abstract as he should be advised to take; and that every objection not so taken and communicated within such period should be deemed waived. The sale took place under a decree of the Court of Chancery, and the abstract delivered to the purchaser did not contain any statement of the pleadings in the cause. Such objections as the abstract disclosed were delivered within the twenty-one days, together with a requisition by the purchaser's counsel for a brief of the pleadings. The brief was not supplied until long after the expiration of the twenty-one days, and then the purchaser's counsel took an objection that the plea was irregular. The vendors insisted that the objection came too late, as it arose from the inspection of a document which had been called for within the twenty-one days. But Vice-Chancellor Wigram held the contrary, and decided that the twenty-one days allowed for objecting to the title were not to be computed from the time of the delivery of an imperfect abstract, and that the purchaser was not precluded from taking an objection which arose out of evidence called for before the expiration of the time fixed.

It becomes, therefore, a point of importance to determine what constitutes a perfect abstract within the purview of the cases of Hobson v. Bell and Blacklow v. Laws.

In Morley v. Cook (2 Hare, 106), it was contended in argument by the purchaser, that a perfect abstract had not been delivered, and, therefore, that the time for delivering objections had not expired. In reference to this argument, the Vice-Chancellor Wigram said, "If by the expression 'perfect abstract' is meant the most perfect abstract in the vendor's possession, actual or constructive, at the time of his delivering it, I should probably accede to the plaintiff's argument. . . . . In any other sense of the words 'perfect abstract,' I should have difficulty in following the argument. A perfect abstract, in the strict sense of the term, would shew a good title; but the conditions clearly mean to provide for the case of an abstract not shewing a good title." In Hobson v. Bell, Lord Langdale must have considered that the vendor's omission to exhibit in the abstract those special particulars and circumstances which constituted his own title as originally derived from the mortgagor, and his existing right as a mortgagee to exercise a power of sale, was a clear breach or neglect of duty on the vendor's part; as such facts must have been known to the vendor, and were palpably such as a purchaser would insist upon knowing.

It may therefore, we think, be inferred, that a perfect abstract is the best that the vendor has it in his own power, by proper skill and diligence, to present to the purchaser at the appointed time: and the Vice-Chancellor Wigram's observations in Morley v. Cook seem to shew that if the vendor's honesty or diligence regarding the contents of the abstract be impeached, the Court will take upon itself to inquire whether the vendor could not in the first instance have furnished a better, or rather a less imperfect abstract of his title; not whether he had the means of procuring a better title than that under which he actually holds the property at the time of the delivery of the abstract, but whether the abstract originally delivered has accurately set forth his actual present title, and all such particulars regarding it as he is in legal intendment presumed to know, and from the exhibition of which he has not protected himself by means of the restrictive conditions (if any) accompanying the sale.

It appears to be undecided in what manner the Court would deal with the vendor's rescissory power, where a vendor acting bonâ fide should deliver a second abstract (properly so called) after objections taken to a first abstract. (2 Hare, 114.) But such a point may easily be provided for by the conditions of sale, so as to obviate the necessity of applying to a Court of Law or Equity for its decision.

(6.) The rescissory power of a vendor being designed for his own protection against possible difficulties and expenses, it cannot, we apprehend, be exercised or enforced against a purchaser who may be willing to take the title, notwithstanding its defects and his own objections to it. But as doubts may arise whether such a clause absolutely vacates the contract, or leaves the purchaser at liberty to accept the title, the point ought to be rendered certain by express words in the conditions of sale. (Williams v. Edwards, 2 Sim. 78; see Rede v. Farr, 6 M. & S. 121.) It is clear, however, that a vendor cannot by wilful neglect to satisfy a requisition release himself from the contract. (Taylor v. Brown, 2 Beav. 181; Page v. Adam, 4 Beav. 269.)

Sale of Railway and other Shares by Auction.—On Tuesday the first sale of railway shares by auction in Liverpool took place at the Commercial Sale-room, Temple-court. At the close of the transactions Mr. Gardner announced that there would be another sale of shares by auction that day fortnight, and we understand that it is his intention to have a sale every fortnight, or oftener if necessary.

Denham-place Estates and Manor-farm, Greenford.—This valuable property was put up to auction on the 19th June by Messrs. Brooks and Green, at their auction-rooms, 28, Old Bond-st. but as there was no first bidding beyond half its value, Messrs. Brooks and Green declined proceeding with the sale. Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

MORSE v. PEPPER.

May 1 and 28.

Transfer of causes—Original and supplemental bill set down in different courts—Practice.

Stinton applied that the original cause in this suit, which stood for hearing before the Lord Chancellor, might be set down to be heard by Vice-Chancellor Wigram, with a supplemental bill which was in his Honour's paper. The cause had been heard as an original one before Lord Cottenham, previous to the general order directing that original causes should not be set down before the Lord Chancellor, and had stood over for the purpose of adding parties by a supplemental bill.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—As no opinion was given upon the merits when the cause was before the late Lord Chancellor, it may be done.

THE QUEEN on the prosecution of WILSON v. NEWTON.

Cancelling patent after judgment in scire facias against the patent—Mode of compelling the patentee to bring in the patent to be cancelled—Writ of attachment—Practice—The common law jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery.

In this case a writ of scire facias to repeal the letters patent issued out of this court, and judgment had been given in the Court of Queen's Bench. Several issues had been taken, and a verdict given for the Crown upon each. Judgment was signed in the Queen's Bench in Easter Term, when it became a matter of right that the patent should be cancelled by tearing off the seal. The object of the present motion, which had been made on notice, was to compel the defendant to bring in the letters patent to be cancelled.

Hindmarch and Webster (of the common law bar) supported the motion.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—By what authority was the judgment entered up? By whom was it entered up, and was it on any application made to the Court of Queen's Bench? I have inquired of the officer of the Petty Bag Office, and there is no instance for 100 years of the transcript of the record of a scire facias having come back to this court. Has the Court of Queen's Bench after the issues have been tried any further jurisdiction, or does it remain in this Court? [Hindmarch.—The matter is remitted here.] Then the officer of the Queen's Bench cannot as of course enter up judgment. Is there any instance where the Court has cancelled letters patent? Must they not be revoked before cancellation? Can you point out any instances in which it has been done and the form? [Hindmarch referred to Reg. v. Nickels (Webster's Rep. ; 1 Phillips, 36). In Coke's Inst. 89, p. 784, it is said that a scire facias was remanded back into Chancery and then [illegible] is to be given. Rolle's Abridg. "Court," G, 1 [illegible]

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It is not the record which goes to the Queen's Bench, only a mere transcript.

[Hi]ndmarch.—It is treated by the Queen's Bench as an ordinary judgment. The form of action in scire facias asks [illegible] the patent should not be restored into the Court of [illegible] there to be cancelled. Therefore execution [illegible] had here. There are but two [illegible]es on the subject which shew how that is to be done. (1 Coke's Reports, 174, A & B; Rex v. Carey, 1 Equity Cases abridged.) They had been informed by Mr. Botch, that about twenty years ago a patent was brought into court and cancelled by the Chancellor.

Wakefield, for the defendant, asked for time to examine the cases bearing upon this obsolete practice.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I recollect cases of scire facias to repeal letters patent; there must be precedents.

Hindmarch.—The oldest officers do not remember any.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I think the form of the writ speaks for itself; there has been a verdict against it, and it must be cancelled; the only question is as to the form. The motion may stand over until next Term; but unless some authority is shewn to the contrary, the motion will be granted, and the defendant must be required to bring in the patent to be cancelled.

May 28.—On this occasion, the LORD CHANCELLOR was assisted by Lord LANGDALE, Master of the Rolls.

Hindmarch and Webster again moved that the patent might be vacated, and the letters patent and the enrolment cancelled. They cited and referred to Brook, tit. "Record," pl. 79; Fitzherbert's Abridgment, tit. "Petition," pl. 19; 46 Edw. 3; Rolle's Abridg. tit. "Court"—Court of King's Bench, G; 6 Viner's Abridg. 548; Year Book, Michaelmas, 24 Edw. 3, 73, pl. 91; Bishop of Bristol v. Proctor (1 Rolle's Rep. 287); Year Book, 10 Edw. 3; 4 Inst. pl. 47; Rex v. Carey (1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 189, 10 Coke Rep. 113, b); 3 Blackstone's Commentaries, 53; Rex v. Butler (6 Manning & Grainger).

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I have no doubt that the letters patent must be cancelled; but the question is as to the form of process to compel the defendant to bring them in for that purpose.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Two things are necessary, that the patent should be cancelled and the enrolment vacated, therefore the question is, how is the patent to be brought in to be cancelled?

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There must be a process of execution upon the judgment. Now what is that process? Do not the officers of the Petty Bag know?

Hindmarch.—No form of process applicable to this case is known. The proper remedy is a writ of attachment against the person. The defendant had appeared and prayed for time, and therefore, whatever might have been the old practice, he was amenable to the jurisdiction, and bound to obey any order of the Court to bring in the patent to be cancelled.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—An order should be made that the defendant bring in the letters patent by a particular day. That would be a regular order, which if the defendant disobey, there must be an attachment. If there be no precedent for such a proceeding, the Court will make one.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This proceeding is on the common law side of this court, and the proceeding taken should be in analogy to similar proceedings in the common law courts. Those courts do not enforce their orders by attachment; but in case of contempt of those courts by disobedience of their orders, they issue a writ of attachment.

Webster.—Until the late Act, which allows patents to be amended, it was useless to cancel the patent; now it may be used for purposes of fraud, if not cancelled. He referred to Richardson's Practice in the Common Pleas, 391, 398; 2 Saunders, 720.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It is a common law judgment, therefore the prosecutor has a right to have the patent cancelled. I have no discretion upon the subject.

Wakefield, for the defendant, contended that nothing more could be done upon the judgment, as was proved by the fact that no such further proceeding had been taken for many hundred years. He read an affidavit of the defendant's, stating that the invention claimed by the patent was that of a foreigner resident in France, who had directed the defendant, who is a patent agent, to obtain a patent; that he did so in his own name for reasons of convenience, which he stated; and that he had transmitted the letters patent to his employer in France, from whom, notwithstanding the present proceedings, he had not been able to obtain them.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Is there any answer to that affidavit on the part of the prosecutor?

Hindmarch.—This is the first time we have heard of the difficulty. But the defendant may surrender the privilege which the patent grants. He may execute such a surrender, and have it entered on the rolls of this court. It may still be used to terrify the prosecutor's customers.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If the enrolment is cancelled, and the defendant undertakes not to bring a writ of error, that will be quite as good as a surrender.

Wakefield.—The defendant is quite ready to do so. The order made was, that the enrolment of the patent should be cancelled, and a vacatur entered upon the roll, the defendant undertaking to bring no writ of error, and not to assign the patent.

Ex parte INCH.

Lease—Rig[illegible]

This was a cause petition by way [illegible] the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England. The petitioner, Inch, had been discharged under the Insolvent Debtors Act, and assignees of his estate had been appointed. The leasehold house of the insolvent remained in his possession, there being no beneficial interest, and the insolvent, having re-established himself in business, had laid out a considerable sum of money in improvements, &c. He had remained in unquestioned possession for several years, but lately the Commissioners of Woods and Forests requiring the house under the Westminster Improvement Act, had agreed to give 150*l.* for the lease and good will. The assignees claimed that sum, and the Vice-Chancellor decided that they were entitled to receive it. Against that decision the petitioner appealed.

Wakefield, for the appellant.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This money belongs to the insolvent's estate under his insolvency, if his subsequent creditors do not interfere.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Friday, May 30.

SAUMAREZ v. SAUMAREZ.

Practice—Costs—Parties—Date of decree.

This appeal had stood over for the purpose of bringing some necessary parties before the Court, the Lord Chancellor having expressed his opinion on the points at issue, which have been reported in the Law Times. That had now been done, and Kay, for the appellants, suggested that the costs of all parties should come out of the estate.

Montagu, for Richard Saumarez, who was entitled to one-third of the testator's estate, and who had not appealed, proposed that the costs ought to come out of the shares of the two sisters who had appealed. No question had been raised or decided upon the appeal with respect to the third share of Richard Saumarez, and it would be unfair to involve him in costs to determine the construction of the will with reference to the other two-thirds.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It was a fair question of construction, and the costs must come out of the residuary estate. The decree must be dated to-day, the record being now complete.

Re TILLOTT, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Part maintenance—Ability of the father of the lunatic.

Walker supported a petition, which prayed, amongst other things, that a sum of 450*l.* which the lunatic's father had necessarily paid on his behalf, might be repaid; and that an allowance for past maintenance during his minority might be also allowed to the father. The sum actually expended by the father in maintenance had been 1,126*l.* or about 300*l.* a year. The father by his affidavit stated that he was not of sufficient ability to maintain the lunatic, for after deducting an allowance made to his (the father's) eldest son, who had a large family, his yearly income was only 1,400*l.* or thereabouts, and was almost wholly derived from property in which he had only a life-interest. The lunatic's income amounted to 432*l.*

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I wish the statements of the petition and the affidavit had been more precise. You may take an order for repayment of the 450*l.*, with reference as to the extraordinary expenses incurred on behalf of the lunatic.

Re BRYAN, a Lunatic.

Practice—Purposes for which lunatic's estate may be sold—Lunatic tenant in tail—Costs—1 Wm. 4, c. 65.

This was a petition for the sale, under the 28th section of 1 Wm. 4, c. 65, of real estate, of which the lunatic is tenant in tail, which enacted that the Lord Chancellor might order the land of or to which any lunatic should be seised, or possessed, or entitled, to be sold or charged by way of mortgage, or otherwise disposed of as should be deemed most expedient, "for the purpose of raising money for payment of the debts or engagements of such lunatic, the discharge of any incumbrances on his estates, the costs of applying for and obtaining the commission of lunacy and in opposition thereto, and all proceedings under the said commission, and the costs of such sales, mortgages, charges, and incumbrances, and other dispositions, or for any of such purposes as aforesaid," as the Lord Chancellor should direct; that the money arising from such sale should be so applied under the direction of the Lord Chancellor, and who is to direct the committee of the estate of the lunatic to execute in his place conveyances of the estates so to be sold, &c. and to do all such acts as should be necessary to effectuate the same.

Glasse supported the petition.—The commission issued in January 1840, and he was found to have been a lunatic from 1835. His wife had been appointed committee. The lunatic was at that time a prisoner in Whitecross-street prison, and his children were in great distress. Mr. Smith, who was copetitioner with the wife, had incurred costs amounting to 1,054*l.* The only property of the lunatic consisted of real estate, to a moiety of which he was entitled in fee, but that had been mortgaged to its value; and he was tenant in tail of the other [illegible], from which there was a clear surplus income. There was no provision for the costs which [illegible] incurred, unless his lordship would direct a [illegible] to be made under the Act upon the moiety of the estate of which the lunatic was tenant in tail. At all events a reference should be directed whether it would be for the benefit of the lunatic. In the case of Re Brand (1 Mylne & Keene, 150), Lord Brougham, C. directed the estate of a lunatic, who had no issue and was tenant in tail in possession with the immediate reversion to himself in fee, to be sold for the payment of his debts under this Act. Here the lunatic was tenant in tail with remainder to his children.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Then this does not fall within the case decided by Lord Brougham, where he said, "If there had been any intermediate remainders, the estate would not have been such as comes within the description of 'land of or to which any person being a lunatic shall be seised, possessed, or entitled;' and I should have held, without any doubt, that the Act only gives the power of selling or charging the lunatic's own interest, and not of doing any thing which would defeat the estates of others, although the lunatic, if of sound mind, might have defeated those estates. It is plain enough, upon the reason of the thing, that we must impose this restriction on the very great generality of the expressions employed in the twenty-eighth section and interpreted by the second. But the twenty-ninth section, respecting the application of the surplus, leaves it still more clear; for none of the terms used to describe the persons whose interests in the surplus are saved by that section are at all applicable to remaindermen." At the expense of the petitioner it may be referred to the commissioner to inquire what estates of the lunatic may be properly charged.

Re CHURCHILL.

Compromise of lunatic's claims—Reference.

This was a petition by the committee of the lunatic for a reference to the commissioner to inquire whether it would be for the benefit of the estate to accept 300*l.* in full for a share of and in a sum of 5,000*l.* to which the lunatic and others had been declared to be entitled. It was divisible into four parts. One of the shares had been forfeited by the insolvency of the person who would otherwise have been entitled. The actual amount of the lunatic's claim was 379*l.* besides a dividend. — Reference ordered.

Re WALKER, a Lunatic.

Confirmation of an agreement to abandon a former agreement for the purchase of an estate.

A reference in this case was made to inquire whether it would be for the benefit of the lunatic's estate that an agreement should be confirmed by which a former agreement for purchase had been made by the lunatic. The vendor had instituted a suit for specific performance. — Ordered.

Re MOFFATT.

Practice—Costs, charges, and expenses.

[illegible] supported a petition praying that the [illegible] might be allowed costs, charges, and expenses instead of costs only. On suing out the commission, it was necessary to make a special application, and the personal representative appeared and consented.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Such an order is not authorized. Order refused.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Monday, June 9.

WARBURTON v. SANDYS.

Appointment of a new trustee—Powers vested in former trustees—Effect of a duplicate instrument in reference to a power of appointment "by any deed or writing."

A testator devised all his real estates to four trustees, with a power of sale, and directed that, on any vacancy in the trust, the surviving trustees or trustee should appoint a new trustee within two months after such vacancy, to act in the execution of the trusts. One of the trustees dying on the 10th of March, 1843, a deed was prepared in duplicate, appointing a new trustee, a copy of which was executed by two of the trustees in London, and the other by the third trustee in Dublin on the 9th of May following, but the legal estate was not conveyed to the newly-appointed trustee. The four trustees then joined in a [illegible] of the real estate to a purchaser (the defendant). Held, in a suit by the trustees for specific performance, that a new trustee had not been appointed, [illegible] the legal estate was in the three surviving [illegible] who could execute a power of sale and make a good conveyance to the purchaser. Held also, that the power to [appoint] "by any deed or writing" was well exercised by the duplicate.

This was a question upon demurrer, which arose under the will of the late John Abernethy, esq. which was dated [illegible] of January, 18[illegible], who devised and bequeathed all and singular his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates, messuages, tenements, farms, houses, lands, and hereditaments wheresoever situate, and also all his money, securities for money, and all other his estate and effects (except what he had thereinbefore given to his wife) which he should die possessed of, or over which he should have a disposing power at the time of his decease, unto J. Warburton, S. Arbouin, J. Bourdillon, and C. Lawrence, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, according to the nature and quality thereof respectively, upon certain trusts during the life of his wife, and after her decease upon certain other trusts therein mentioned, for the benefit of his children. The testator then declared his will and mind to be, that it should be lawful for his said trustees, or the survivors of them, or the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of such survivor, to make sale of the lands in manner therein mentioned, and gave also certain other powers to be exercised by them. And the testator declared his mind and will to be, that in case either of them, the said J. Warburton, S. Arbouin, J. Bourdillon, and C. Lawrence, should happen to depart this life, or refuse, neglect, decline, or become incapable of acting in the trusts thereby in them reposed, then and in every such case it should and might be lawful, and he did thereby will and direct that the survivors or survivor of them, or others or other of them (as the case might be), should immediately, or within two months after any such trustee or trustees dying, or refusing, or neglecting, declining, or becoming incapable of acting in the trusts thereby in him or them reposed, by any deed or writing under his or their hand and seal or hands and seals, to be attested by two or more credible witnesses, nominate some other fit person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in the place and stead of the person or persons so dying, neglecting, declining, or becoming incapable to act in the execution of the trusts thereby in him or them reposed; which new trustee or trustees to be so nominated and appointed should have the same power and authority in the said trust premises, and in the execution of the trusts therein comprised, as they, the said J. Warburton, S. Arbouin, J. Bourdillon, and C. Lawrence, or either of them, would have had or been entitled to in case they had been living, or had continued to act or been capable of acting in the execution of the trust thereby in them reposed.

S. Arbouin, one of the above-named trustees, died on the 10th March, 1843; and by duplicate indentures which were executed on the 9th May, 1843, by J. Warburton and C. Lawrence in London, and by J. Bourdillon in Dublin, the said J. Warburton, C. Lawrence, and J. Bourdillon nominated and appointed C. Burrows to be a trustee in the place and stead of the said S. Arbouin, deceased.

On the 16th August, 1844, all the four trustees put up part of the testator's real estate for sale by public auction, and the defendant, S. Sandys, became the purchaser of part of the property. The defendant, however, refused to complete his purchase, on the ground that C. Burrows, the new trustee, had not been appointed within two lunar months, and that the duplicate indenture was not a due execution of the power; and that, consequently, there were but three trustees, who were unable alone to make a good title to the premises. J. Warburton, with his co-trustees, including Burrows, filed their bill against Sandys, the defendant, for a specific performance of his contract, to which he put in a general demurrer.

Bird and Greening, for the demurrer, contended that the clauses restricting the appointment to two months would be absolutely useless unless the direction be not taken to imply a condition that if they, the trustees, should not so appoint, their powers are gone, since they might appoint at any time. That the three surviving trustees could only execute the power of sale during the two months in which there might be a vacancy; but that, having neglected so to do, it would be necessary to apply to the Court for the purpose of appointing a fourth, after which it would be competent for them all either to sell or to execute their other powers. But that a distinction exists whether the powers are public or private. In the former there are several cases of this nature; in the latter there are none. (Attorney-General v. Scott, 1 Ves. 413.) [The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Suppose the three surviving trustees do not duly execute their power of appointing a new trustee, do not their powers in every other respect remain?] Greening.—No; for in the case put by your Honour the powers are suspended, but not destroyed. The testator must be taken to have assumed that what he directed to be done would be done, and unless it be done the trust is suspended until the new trustee is appointed by the Court. (Bayley v. Mansell, 4 Madd. 226; White v. White, 5 Beav. 221.)

Batten, in support of the bill, stated that the suit was only instituted for the purpose of taking the opinion of the Court as to whether the words in reference to the appointment of a new trustee within the two months were imperative and conditional, or directory only, which would give the surviving trustees power to appoint at any time. He therefore [illegible] that the [illegible] Wood v. Cogwin, 1 Dow. [illegible]

Some discussion arose [illegible] the meaning of the word [illegible] were intended to signify [illegible] the determination of which [illegible] Alvarez (3 Atk. 342) [illegible] & Coll. 401) were cited, but [illegible] mined by the Court.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—There is one point which I cannot help observing, namely, the testator has not said the appointment [illegible] by any deed or writing, under his or their hand and seal, or hands and seals, so that it might be valid if made by twenty deeds. I do not think it affects that it is any objection to the title of the vendor. My opinion at present is that no new trustee has been appointed, and for this reason; when the testator says that the surviving trustee shall nominate a fit and proper person to be the new trustee, he could not intend that the barren operation of naming a trustee was all that should be done. It is plain to my mind that unless there were a conveyance executed, so as to give to the person newly made a joint interest with the surviving trustees, there was no trustee nominated within the meaning of the power as it must necessarily be taken. There can be no doubt the testator meant that the person so to be nominated should be to all intents and purposes a trustee, as the others were. Suppose such trustee had been nominated, and there had been no conveyance, and either of the trustees had died; or put a case of commorientes when all had perished at once, how was Dr. B[illegible] himself appointed, to execute any trust? What [illegible] He could not do it; for it is plain he would not have any estate at all. When, therefore, the testator's "nominate," he must mean not so as to become effectually a trustee. My opinion is, therefore, that the effect of the deed is merely to name a person who shall be the new trustee; and I cannot but think that, though the surviving trustees have not named a new trustee as the testator wished, still that they remain trustees with the power and duty of performing the trusts of the will, so far as they remain in them. It seemed to me that when the four, for the sake of conformity, ordered the estate to be put up for sale, and the defendant became the purchaser, it was competent for the four to file a bill, one for the sake of conformity, and the others in point of substance. My opinion therefore is, that the three surviving trustees have the legal estate of the testator in them, and that their receipt will be a good discharge to the purchaser.

Demurrer overruled.

ROLLS COURT.

Feb. 26 and May 23.

BEAVAN v. GIBBERT.

Practice—Report, confirmation of—Order nisi and motion on petition absolute—Irregularity—Motion to discharge.

If an order of reference to the Master be made upon petition, and objections are taken to the draft report and overruled, the report may be confirmed upon motion nisi, and the confirmation need not be upon petition absolute in the first instance.

The motion nisi is seven or eight times less expensive than the petition.

In this cause, after the answer of the defendants had been put in, an order, on the petition of two of the defendants, was made by consent on the 13th Jan. 1845, directing that all proceedings should be stayed for six months, and it was referred to the Master to ascertain what was due to the plaintiff, as mortgagee, for principal, interest, and costs, and also to ascertain the priorities as between the plaintiff and the defendant Mr. Gilbert; and liberty was given to Mr. Gilbert to apply, without prejudice to any of the plaintiff's rights if it should become necessary to review the proceedings. The plaintiff's demand consisting of several claims, the Master made a separate report, and to this objections were carried in by the plaintiff in the usual way, and were overruled, and on the 29th of Jan. 1845, the report was signed by the Master. The defendant then applied to the Court for an order nisi to confirm the report; and a motion was now made to discharge the order so obtained, for irregularity, on the ground that the application ought to have been made to confirm absolutely in the first instance.

Kindersley (with him Malins), for the motion.—We have taken objections to the Master's report, which have been overruled, and the only way we can bring them here is by petition; but we could not proceed by petition in opposition to the order nisi. We contend we therefore now move to discharge that order, on the ground that the confirmation ought to be on petition absolutely, and not upon an order nisi. (Gilley v. Pinsent, 1 Hare, 330; 2 Daniell's Pract. 936; 2 Smith's Pract. 381; 3rd edit.)

Turner, contra.—The question is one of importance, for the costs of the application to confirm by petition are much greater than by order nisi. The question before Vice-Chancellor Wigram in Gilley v. Pinsent was, whether parties could apply to the Court by [illegible] petition without previously carrying in objections before the Master to the draft report; and that case is therefore inapplicable for the present.—He cited Hodges v. Rempsey (6 Jur. 791; 7 Jur. 292).

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I have to inquire whether the order nisi is proper in this case, and regularly obtained. I would feel very great respect for Vice-Chancellor Wigram's opinion, if his decision had been on this question; but the point was not before him. As the authorities produced afford so little assistance, the parties may make further inquiries as to the practice, and the motion may stand over for that purpose.

Friday, May 23.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—On the 20th February, 1845, the plaintiff moved to discharge the order nisi, which the defendant had obtained, for irregularity, on the ground that the application ought to have been made to confirm absolutely in the first instance; and the case of Ottley v. Pensam was adduced in support of that position. In that case, however, Vice-Chancellor Wigram, for whose opinion I have the greatest respect, was not called upon to decide this question, and I cannot consider it to be any authority on the present point. But, the question being whether the report may be confirmed by order nisi as well as by petition absolutely, I have caused inquiries to be made in the Masters' offices, and I do not find any general rule of practice applicable to this case, or that an order nisi is irregular. This, however, is a report to which either party may except, if the exceptions are filed without delay. Another consideration in the present case also, is, that a further order will be required, this being a separate report; and the order nisi is seven or eight times less expensive than the petition absolute. Being unable to find that the course here pursued is irregular, and finding it to be convenient, and that the order nisi is less expensive, I therefore dismiss the motion without costs. I will allow a week to except.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

[The following judgment was delivered in Hilary Term, but accidentally mislaid.]

JONES v. ROBERTS.

Pleading—Custom.

Custom may be pleaded in a question of supposed right between individuals; therefore, where two farms adjoined, and, for want of fences, the sheep of one had been accustomed to wander over and feed upon the other, a plea to an action of trespass that sheep had from time immemorial been accustomed so to wander, held to be a good plea.

Lord DENMAN, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This case arose on a demurrer to the rejoinder. On the argument the rejoinder was abandoned, and the question is as to the validity of the replication. It alleges that the farms of the plaintiff and the defendant had immemorially joined each other, not separated by any fence sufficient to turn the sheep. The replication states the sheep from time to time, and during all the time, were daily put in on the said farm to feed on the grass land there and then growing, and from time to time immemorially had gone, escaped, and rambled, and had been used and accustomed to go therefrom into the said field called F—— Green, on which the said sheep were so taken and distrained, the said several closes being part and parcel thereof, and the sheep were allowed to intermix there, and to feed from time to time on the grass growing in and upon the said closes mentioned; and in like manner stating mutuality as to the other parts. Enjoyment is the ordinary form in which common of vicinage is pleaded, if you substitute the word waste for farm; and, whether common of vicinage is a mere right or excuse for a trespass, the form of pleading is the same. The question seems to be, whether the law on the subject, applicable to adjoining wastes lying undivided, is to be applicable also to adjoining land held in severalty and lying undivided. It is said in either case a common may be put an end to by enclosure, and that this may as well exist between private owners as between them and the lord of the manor. No doubt it may be put an end to by enclosure, as appears by a statement in Reg. v. Wilson, and other cases, in all of which it is treated rather as an excuse for a trespass than as a right. The cases cited in Cobbet's case are nothing like what is pleaded here, for there there were arable lands lying interspersed; here the farms are merely adjoining, not interspersed. If the right or excuse here pleaded can be supported, it must be by analogy to what is established. Now it must be observed it is not pleaded as a prescription, but as a custom. No doubt it was competent to the owners of the respective farms to create such a usage by grant, and if that were done, then possibly it might be supported. There is a case in Brooke's Abridgment, which was referred to, where it is said that a man shall be prescribed if his beasts escape on the lands of B; B cannot distrain, but may have an action; but at all events he may be [illegible] prescribed. We believe this was the first time that any supposed right between any two individuals has been pleaded as a matter of custom; for it mentions the case of manors lying open together in use in respect of ownership of soil and waste, but copyhold in respect of their customary rights, and freehold in respect of their prescriptive rights, and having the same common interest; and it may well be; a common custom and usage for the convenience of all parties may have existed from time immemorial, as the straying of cattle, or the custom and usage may have had its origin in an actual contract, it not being at all impossible that two persons would have entered into an actual contract of that sort for the acquirement of that which was for their mutual benefit. No such reason applies in a case where the farms are held in severalty, and in the absence of any precedent we are of opinion that it is not valid, and that therefore the defendant is entitled to the judgment of the Court.

POWELL v. PRITCHARD.

Where cattle lawfully on one ground are used to stray on another, user for forty years under the statute is a good plea.

This case is so similar to the preceding one that it will not be necessary to occupy our columns with more than the

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court. Here the question was, whether common of vicinage from time immemorial could be claimed by a person stating himself to be a commoner, not by prescription, but for three years under the statute. Now common of vicinage is not a right, it is but matter of excuse for a trespass. Cobbet's case, and other authorities, sufficiently establish this position. It may be claimed by prescription, but it is rather a matter of immemorial custom, as we have stated in the case of Jones v. Roberts. In substance the question is, whether, where cattle lawfully on one common have been used to stray on the other, all that is necessary in pleading is to shew that the cattle were lawfully on their own common before they strayed: that is done by shewing forty years' user under the statute. Before the statute it must have been doubtless shewn that they were then using either their prescriptive right of common, or by leave of the lord; but since the statute it is otherwise. It is said great inconvenience may follow,—that the lord of the manor may make many grants, and purposely stock his own common in order to eat up the grass on the adjoining one. If that were clearly done it might be held fraudulent, or, at all events, there is a remedy by enclosure. As to the verdict being against the evidence, or that it was improperly left to the jury, we think there was no such doubt as could warrant our disturbing the verdict; as to the misdirection, we see none. There is no complaint that the learned judge put any thing wrong to the jury, only that he did not enter into all the details of the case, and exercise a sound discretion. We think it was unnecessary for him to detail it more. With respect to the evidence of occupation we are clearly of the opinion given in Sparks v. ——— (1 M. & S.), and there is no objection on that ground. Our judgment must be that the rule be discharged.

LITTLECHILD v. BANKS.

In debt for goods sold and delivered, on an issue never indebted, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to negative a payment contemporaneous with the delivery, though it may be open to the defendant upon that issue to prove such a payment, as, if proved, it would shew that no debt had ever arisen.

Debt, for goods sold and delivered.

Plea—Never indebted. Issue thereon.

At the trial the delivery of the goods was proved; and Petersdorff, for the defendant, in his address to the jury, urged that the plaintiff ought to have satisfied them that there was a sale upon credit; that mere delivery was not sufficient because consistent with a payment at the time of delivery; and that, if there were such a payment, no debt ever arose between the plaintiff and defendant. The jury found a verdict for the defendant, and a rule nisi had been obtained to set aside that verdict and for a new trial.

Petersdorff now shewed cause.—Where goods are sold for ready money, and there is a payment contemporaneous with the delivery of the goods, no debt arises. (Bussey v. Barnett, 9 Mee. & W. 312.) The plaintiff, therefore, in order to prove a debt, ought to negative such a payment. The declaration in debt avers a sale on credit; and that is put in issue by nunquam indebitatus. It is, therefore, for the jury to say whether there was such a sale, and here they have said that there was not.

By the COURT.—This verdict cannot stand. Primâ facie, the delivery of the goods proves a debt; and it is for the defendant afterwards to rebut that case if he can; but no attempt to do so was made in this case. Bussey v. Barnett only decides that where the contract is for ready money, and the payment is according to that contract, no debt ever arising, the defendant may give evidence of it under the general issue.

[illegible] Fitzherbert, in support of the rule, was not called upon.

Rule absolute.

HARRISON v. VARTY.

Ownership within the Malicious Trespass Act, means the person having the possession and care of the property.

Cross-rules had been obtained in this case, turning upon the right of the defendant to notice of action, but both were disposed of upon the single point here reported. It was an action for false imprisonment, brought by the plaintiff, who had been given into the custody of the police while employed in cutting some branches of some trees by the direction of one Duncan, who claimed to be part owner of the property. The defendant had acted under a local Act, 29 Geo. 2, c. 90, from which it appeared that the inhabitants of the houses upon the estate (the York Gate Estate) were to be the managing owners thereof, and that for acts done in the administration of the Act, the owners were entitled to notice of action.

Hance contended that the local Act was no evidence of the title against third parties, and that if it was, the property could not be vested in the successive inhabitants for the time being; citing Rex v. Sutton (4 M. & S. 532); Doe dem. Grundy v. Clarke (14 East, 488); Phillips v. Pearce (5 B. & C. 433). He further contended that, if owners, they were not entitled to notice, as the jury had found that the plaintiff was not committing any malicious trespass, and that the parties, to bring themselves within the protection, ought to have reasonable ground for believing that they were acting under the statute; citing Cook v. Leonard (6 B. & C. 351); Cann v. Clipperton (10 A. & E. 582).

Jervis, Q.C. contrà.—To entitle a person to take proceedings under the Malicious Trespass Act, 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 28, he need not have a legal title to enable him to maintain ejectment. "The owner of the property injured," must mean the person in whose possession and care the property is; and this was the position of the defendants. We had a bonâ fide belief that we were acting in execution of the Act, and that is all that is necessary, according to Beechey v. Sides (9 B. & C. 806), which was a case upon this very section.

By the COURT.—You have established that the defendants were entitled to notice, because you shew the rightful possession to be in them. They were trustees managing the property, and bound to do what was necessary for its protection. The jury found that the plaintiff was not acting maliciously, but there was good reason for the defendant to think so, and take immediate measures to prevent the property from being injured. It is not necessary to shew a regular title to support ejectment.

Judgment for defendant.

GRAHAM and OTHERS, Assignees of THOMAS SEDDON and GEORGE SEDDON, v. WITHERBY and ANOTHER.

(Argued in Hilary Term.)

Where an execution upon a warrant of attorney is set aside under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 108, the assignees are not entitled to the goods against an execution creditor in an adverse action, at whose suit a writ has been duly delivered to the sheriff before the fiat, notwithstanding that the first execution would have absorbed all the proceeds, had a sale taken place before the fiat.

Goldschmidt v. Hamlet is good law.

This was a special case stated for the opinion of the Court by an order of Patteson, J. It was in substance as follows:—The bankrupts, Messrs. T. and G. Seddon, executed in favour of Thomas Bennett a warrant of attorney for 50,000*l.* dated October 21, 1840. This was duly attested and filed within twenty-one days of its execution. Judgment for 50,000*l.* and 1s. damages was entered up in pursuance thereof Jan. 18, 1842, and writ of fi. fa. was issued the same day, indorsed to levy 20,000*l.* and the same day delivered to Alexander Rogers and William Magnay, the Sheriff of Middlesex. The sheriff on the same day, and before the return thereof, and before the delivery to them of the fi. fa. at the suit of the present defendants, and before the issuing of the fiat hereinafter mentioned, seized under the writ, at the suit of Bennett, certain goods of the said T. and G. Seddon, but not sufficient to satisfy the writ, and the proceeds of which would have been less than the sum indorsed. The sheriff remained in possession of the said goods until after the issuing of the fiat against T. and G. Seddon. On the 7th of January 1842, final judgment for 138*l.* 11s. was signed in an action commenced adversely, and not by collusion, or for the purpose of fraudulent preference, by the present defendants against T. and G. Seddon; and on the 27th of January, 1842, a writ of testatum fi. fa. was issued by the plaintiffs in that action to the Sheriff of Middlesex to levy of the goods of the said T. and G. Seddon 138*l.* 11s. duly indorsed, &c.

On the 27th of January, 1842, and whilst the sheriff was in possession of the goods under the first-mentioned writ, the last-mentioned writ was delivered to the sheriff for execution, and on the same day a warrant was granted to the officer already in possession under Bennett's writ. The sheriff remained in possession until he withdrew as hereinafter mentioned. The said writ was issued by the defendants, and delivered and executed as aforesaid, bonâ fide, and the defendants had not at the time of its issuing or delivery to the sheriff, or of the delivery of the warrant thereon, any notice of any prior act of bankruptcy committed by T. and G. Seddon. A fiat in bankruptcy issued against T. and G. Seddon, Feb. 3, 1842, and on Feb. 4 they were duly declared bankrupts; and on the 11th the plaintiffs were appointed assignees. On the 19th of February, and while the sheriff remained in possession, Coleridge, J. upon the application of the sheriff, made an order in the said causes of Bennett v. Seddon, Witherby v. Seddon, and in three other causes of Lynes v. Seddon, and Corney v. Seddon (two causes), that the sheriff should withdraw; that the assignees should sell the goods and pay the proceeds into court, and that an issue should be tried at the then next Kingston assizes, in which the assignees should be plaintiffs and Bennett defendant, and that the questions in the last four actions should stand over until the decision of the issue. The sheriff accordingly withdrew and the goods were sold by the assignees for 7,413*l.* 7s. 3d. and that sum paid into court. This sum was much less than sufficient to satisfy this execution of Bennett. The issue directed by the order between the plaintiffs and Bennett was proceeded with, and on June 27, 1843, determined in favour of the plaintiffs, on the ground that the writ of fi. fa. at the suit of Bennett being founded on a judgment by warrant of attorney, and being a writ under which the sheriff had seized only, but not sold at the date of the fiat, Bennett was a creditor having a security for his debt, within the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 108, and therefore only entitled to be paid rateably with other fair creditors. In all other respects Bennett's execution was valid. On July 11, 1843, Patteson, J. made an order in the said five causes that 6,150*l.* parcel of 7,413*l.* 7s. 3d. should be paid out of court to G. J. Graham, the official assignee, and that cases should be stated for the opinion of this Court in the actions of Lynes v. Seddon and Witherby v. Seddon, with liberty to turn them into a special verdict, if the Court should think fit. The sum of 6,150*l.* has been paid accordingly to the official assignee; the balance of the said sum of 7,413*l.* 7s. 3d. still remaining in court, and being sufficient to satisfy the full amounts claimed in both the said actions of Lynes v. Seddon and Witherby v. Seddon, the latter being the action in which the now defendants were plaintiffs.

The question for the opinion of the Court was, whether, under the circumstances above stated, the plaintiffs, as assignees, were entitled as against the now defendants, to receive the aforesaid balance of the said sum of 7,413*l.* 7s. 3d. so remaining in court, before or until the said execution of the defendants should have been paid and satisfied out of such balance.

The points stated for argument for the plaintiffs were that the 108th section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, operates upon execution by warrant of attorney for the benefit of the assignees, and not for the benefit of subsequent execution creditors, and that property rescued by that section from an execution by warrant of attorney belongs to the assignees, and not to subsequent execution creditors.

Willes, for the assignees.—The question turns mainly upon the construction of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 108. The facts are briefly that an execution upon a warrant of attorney is put into the sheriff's hand, and he seizes the goods of the execution debtor. While in possession, another execution, but not upon a warrant of attorney, is received, and a warrant to levy is given to the same officer. Before the sale, a fiat issues against the execution debtor, by which the first execution is set aside; and the question is, whether the assignees or the second judgment creditor is entitled to reap the benefit of the execution being set aside. First, there was no seizure under 6 Geo. 4; secondly, if there was such a seizure, then the effect of the bankruptcy prior to the sale was to give the creditors what, but for the bankruptcy, the first judgment creditor would have been entitled to. 1. There was no seizure. While the first was the only writ in the sheriff's hands, the proceeds of the sale must have been given to Bennett. Then the second execution is delivered to the sheriff, and a warrant to levy given to the same officer, which is said to be equivalent to a seizure "upon the property of the bankrupt." I concede the general rule that a subsequent execution creditor is entitled to the surplus, or to all, if the prior execution is void, because there can be no actual seizure under a subsequent writ when the sheriff is already in possession of all the goods under the first. But I submit that the seizure contemplated by the 108th section is a real substantial seizure for the purposes of sale, which this was not, as the case distinctly finds that the goods were insufficient to satisfy the first writ. Johnson v. Evans (1 Dowl. & Lowndes, 935) supports this view. There the property of a partnership had been seized under an execution against one of the partners; and whilst in the possession of the officer, an execution against the partnership was lodged with the sheriff, who made out a warrant to a different officer, but no actual entry or seizure was made. After a fiat against the partners, the sheriff sold the property and satisfied both writs; and it was held that there was no sufficient seizure under under the second writ within the 108th section, because there never had been a seizure of the partnership property for the purposes of sale under the second writ, and the partnership property was not applicable to the first writ. Where the goods seized are not applicable to the satisfaction of the writ, nulla bona is a good return. (Drewe v. Lainson, 11 A. & E. 529.) So here, had no fiat issued, a return of nulla bona to the second writ would have been good; and how, then, can it be said that what was originally no seizure at all became so by the issuing of the fiat. An available seizure is essential, which this was not. 2. But if the Court should think that there was a sufficient seizure, then it is submitted that the construction put upon the 108th section by the Court of Common Pleas in Goldschmidt v. Hamlet (1 Dowl. & L. 501) is not correct, and the creditors are entitled to the benefit of this prior execution being set aside. The general object of all the bankruptcy statutes is a rateable division among all the creditors; and, since the first execution was here superseded by the operation of the 108th section, it is superseded for all purposes. Here, but for the bankruptcy, all the proceeds would have been paid to Bennett; how, then, can it be said that the bankruptcy is to benefit the second execution creditor? The "fair creditor," for whose protection that proviso was enacted, must mean the same as in 21 Jac. 1, that is, persons who will prove under the fiat. [PATTESON, J.—Was the second creditor here an unfair creditor?] No; but he would have no title but for the 108th section, and that confers the benefit upon the creditors generally. The execution is prevented, and the proceeds transferred to the creditors rateably. He cited also Wintle v. Chetwynd (7 D. P. C. 554); Heenan v. Evans (1 D. N. S. 204); Imray v. Magnay (11 M. & W. 267); Morris v. Mellin (6 B. & C. 446).

Atherton, contrà.—This case must be decided according to Goldschmidt v. Hamlet. It is found, in the special case, that the writ was delivered for execution to the sheriff, and it is afterwards said, "this writ so delivered and executed as aforesaid;" so that nothing was left undone to effect the execution that could be done either by the sheriff and the officer or the creditor. The warrant was made out and delivered to the officer, and he consequently remained in possession under both writs. Johnson v. Evans (1 D. & L. 985), which is relied upon by the plaintiffs, proves that this was so; for here the proceeds of the sale would have been applicable to the second writ, if from any cause the first was got rid of. The question is, was there not a seizure in contemplation of law? Then Goldschmidt v. Hamlet on all fours with the present case. There, also, the goods seized were insufficient to satisfy the writs upon the judgments that were set aside. (See 6 Sc. N. R. 962.) The operation of the 108th section inverted, and it is argued as if it was an enabling statute, instead of a disabling statute. The plaintiffs, as assignees, only take what is given them expressly by statute; that is, the property of the bankrupt at the time of the fiat, except in the cases expressly within the 108th section. The proviso does not affect this execution, where the defendants were creditors having security by means of the seizure, and are therefore excepted from the disabling operation of the introductory part of the 108th section. Where the assignees are intended to have the benefit, the words are express, as by 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, warrants of attorney not duly filed are void as against the assignees, and they may recover back for the use of the creditors what has been obtained by virtue of such warrants.

Willes, in reply.—It was found here that the goods were insufficient to satisfy the first writ, therefore there could be no seizure under the second of any thing applicable to it. It would appear from the report in 6 Scott, of Goldschmidt v. Hamlet, that all the writs were set in motion at once.

In the sittings after Trinity Term the judgment of the Court was delivered by Lord Denman, C. J.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—The material facts of this case are as follow: On the 18th of January, 1842, the sheriff of Middlesex seized the goods in question under a writ of fi. fa. at the suit of Thomas Bennett, and against Thomas Seddon and G. Seddon; the judgment was on a warrant of attorney. While the sheriff was in possession on the 27th of January, a writ of fi. fa. in debt against the Seddons, at the suit of the now defendants, was delivered to him, and a warrant granted and delivered to the same officer who was in possession. The judgment was in an adverse bonâ fide action, and the now defendants had no notice of any prior act of bankruptcy committed by T. and G. Seddon. While the goods still remained in the possession of the sheriff, on the 3rd of February a fiat in bankruptcy issued against T. and G. Seddon, which was regularly prosecuted, and in which the plaintiffs are the assignees. The date of the act of bankruptcy is not stated. The goods have since been sold for an amount less than the sum indorsed to be levied under Bennett's writ, but much more than is indorsed to be levied under the writ of the now defendants. The question is, whether the now defendants are entitled to the sum raised as against the assignees. The case of Goldschmidt v. Hamlet, decided by the Court of Common Pleas (6 M. & G. and 6 Scott N. R.; 1 Dowl. & Lowndes, 501, and 12 Law J.) is a case directly in point, and in favour of the now defendants. There are some discrepancies in the reports of that case, which are not very material, and it is plain we cannot give judgment for the present plaintiff without treating that case as having been wrongly decided. In order to arrive at a right conclusion, it seems necessary to ascertain, in the first place, what were the rights and relative position of Bennett and the now complainants, after the writs had been delivered to the sheriff and before the bankruptcy. Now, as no fraud or irregularity is alleged in this case, it is plain that Bennett's writ, on which alone the sheriff seized in the first instance, was entitled to preference over that of the now defendants, and as the goods were not sufficient in value to satisfy Bennett's writ, the now defendants, but for the bankruptcy, could not have taken any thing. Now it is well established that when a sheriff seizes, he seizes under all the writs then in his hands, and as writs which come into his hands subsequently to the seizure attach on the goods already seized, a creditor under such subsequent writ would be entitled to the proceeds, if the first writ be either satisfied or put aside or withdrawn; still the now defendants, without the aid of the bankruptcy, could have taken nothing, because, independently of the bankruptcy, Bennett's writ was not satisfied, or set aside, or withdrawn, and the now creditors have not been deprived of any right they were entitled to at common law. At common law Bennett was entitled to preference of them, and they cannot complain that they take nothing unless they can shew that the Bankrupt Act operated to give them a preference which they would not have had at common law. Is that then the effect of the bankruptcy under the circumstances, and particularly the 108th sec. of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16? It is clear that by the operation of that section Bennett was deprived of the fruits of the execution, and is compelled to come in pari passu with the other creditors. That section manifestly treats judgment creditors upon warrants of attorney as if they are to be compared to fair creditors, for it treats them as being creditors for a valuable consideration, and provides that they should be paid "rateably" (that is the expression) "with such," that is, "other fair creditors." The object of the section manifestly was to put upon the same footing as the bonâ fide and fair creditors, those who had seized under an execution, by virtue of warrants of attorney, and compel them to relinquish the seizure and bring the proceeds into hotch-potch for the benefit of all the creditors, and not to set aside that particular execution. Accordingly, this Court, in Taylor v. Taylor (5 B. & C. 392), refused to set aside such a writ as being void; and again, in Notley v. Buck (8 B. & C. 160), this Court refused to decide whether the sheriff was a wrongdoer in selling under such a writ, although it held that the money raised belonged to the assignees. But the view the Court took in those cases in the present case is clearly out of the question, because Bennett's execution, which was good at common law against the sheriff and against the now defendants, would still remain good against all persons, although the proceeds would be transferred from Bennett to the credit of the assignees. But the Court of Exchequer, in the recent case of Cheston v. Gibbs (12 M. & W. 111), having differed from the view taken in Taylor v. Taylor (5 B. & C.), and having decided that the 108th section affects the writ itself, the position of the assignees is materially altered. That case was twice argued and well considered, and according to the law there laid down, it would seem that Bennett's writ becomes void by the issuing of the fiat, and that the assignees might have maintained trover against the sheriff if he had sold under it. The sheriff was bound then to treat the writ as void under the fiat. But at the moment he so treated it, the right of the now defendants would have attached to the goods. It will therefore avail against the assignees, and all the world, and becomes absolute, so to speak, because, in effect, the first writ of the now defendants was to be satisfied out of the proceeds of the goods. Upon the authority of Cheston v. Gibbs, therefore, and that of Goldschmidt v. Hamlet, we think the now defendants are entitled to the judgment of the Court.

Judgment for the defendants.

Saturday, June 21.

JAQUES v. NORTON.

A declaration in assumpsit stated that in consideration that the plaintiff, at the request, &c. had promised the defendant to buy of him and pay for goods, &c. to be by the defendant packed and preserved for a voyage; defendant promised to furnish such goods packed, &c.; and that although plaintiff did afterwards buy of defendant and pay for goods "as and for the goods so agreed to be bought," and which defendant delivered packed, &c. "as and for the goods so agreed for," yet the defendant broke his promise in this:—1, that at the time of the delivery of the said goods the same were not the goods "agreed to be bought," but inferior goods; 2, that defendant did not furnish the goods "so agreed for" properly packed, but had negligently packed them; and, 3, that the goods so delivered were deficient in quantity. On general demurrer to this declaration,

Held, that the 1st and 2nd breaches were bad, because they applied to the goods agreed to be bought; whereas the promise applied to the goods actually bought and paid for "as and for" the goods contracted for; but that the third breach disclosed a good cause of action, as it applied to the goods actually delivered. Judgment was therefore given distributively, for the defendant on the 1st and 2nd breach, for the plaintiff on the last.

Assumpsit.—The declaration stated that a vessel was about to set sail on a certain voyage, and thereupon, &c. in consideration that the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, had then promised the defendant to buy of him and pay for divers goods and merchandize, to wit, &c. to be by the defendant packed and preserved for the said voyage, for certain prices then agreed upon by and between the plaintiff and defendant, to wit, &c. he, the defendant, then promised the plaintiff to furnish and deliver such goods and merchandize for the purposes aforesaid, preserved and packed up for the said voyage; and that although the plaintiff, confiding in the said promise of the defendant, did afterwards, &c. buy of the defendant, and did also then, in pursuance of the said agreement, pay for a large quantity of goods and merchandize, as and for the goods and merchandize so agreed to be bought, and which the defendant afterwards, &c. delivered packed in chests or cases, as and for the goods and merchandize so agreed for as aforesaid; yet that the defendant broke his promise in this, that at the time of the delivery of the said goods and merchandize the same were not the goods and merchandize so agreed to be bought as aforesaid, but were goods of an inferior sort, quality, and description, and were bad goods; and also in this, that he did not furnish and deliver the goods and merchandize so agreed for, as aforesaid, properly packed and preserved for the said voyage, but on the contrary thereof so negligently, carelessly, and improperly conducted and behaved himself in and about the packing, &c. that divers quantities of the said goods, &c. were, by and through the negligent and improper conduct of the defendant in that behalf, broken and damaged, and became of no use to the plaintiff; and also in this, that the said goods and merchandize so delivered by him, as aforesaid, were deficient in quantity, and that the deficiency in the quantity so delivered amounted to, &c. whereby the plaintiff had been deprived of great gains and profits which would have accrued to him from the sale of the said goods, &c. alleging special damage.

General demurrer to this declaration, on the following grounds:—

1. That plaintiff does not say either that he bought, or was ready and willing to buy the goods agreed for; but merely that he bought goods as and for those goods.

2. That the first breach is bad, because, although defendant may by mistake have delivered the wrong goods, he may have been ready and willing to deliver the goods agreed for.

3. That the plaintiff is not entitled to complain of the matter alleged in the second breach, because his buying the goods agreed for is a condition precedent to the defendant's obligation to deliver those goods packed and preserved, and there is no allegation that the plaintiff bought or was ready to buy the goods agreed for.

4. That the second breach is also bad, because it consists of want of care, and the declaration does not allege a promise to take care.

5. That the last breach is bad, because, if it refers to a deficiency in the goods agreed for, then it is open to the objections first and thirdly above stated; and because, if it refer to the goods not agreed for, then there is no promise that the goods not agreed for should be of any particular quantity.

6. That the last breach is unmeaning, and does not shew that the quantity agreed for was not delivered, and merely amounts at the utmost to this, that certain goods delivered were not of the quantity agreed for, but does not allege that other goods to make up that quantity were not delivered.

7. That there is a misjoinder of incompatible breaches, if the declaration is meant both to assert that goods agreed for were not delivered, and that they were delivered, but not properly packed, each of which breaches negatives the other.

Joinder in demurrer.

J. Gray, in support of the demurrer.—The declaration is clearly bad; there is no averment that the plaintiff bought, or was ready and willing to buy the goods contracted for; and that defect applies to all the breaches, for it is a condition precedent to the defendant's liability even to send the goods on board the vessel at all. There is no identification of the goods contracted for and the goods bought, and if the goods actually bought were sent, it is no breach that they were different from the goods contracted for.

E. Lawes contrà.—These objections cannot be maintained on general demurrer. The declaration in substance states a contract to buy, and a buying of certain goods to be carefully packed, and a breach of that contract in the delivery of goods inferior in quality, deficient in quantity, and carelessly packed. The defects, if any, are matter of form only; and to be taken advantage of only on special demurrer. At all events the 3rd breach is good, because it alleges a deficiency in the quantity of the goods actually delivered, which was certainly a violation of the defendant's contract; and if that be so, then the demurrer, which applies to all the breaches is too large, and there must be judgment for the plaintiff.

Gray in reply.—That is not [illegible] the doctrine of large demurrers is no longer maintainable. [Lord DENMAN, C.J.—No demurrer is too large if it hits any objection well.] The cases are collected in a note by Mr. Serjt. Manning to Hinde v. Gray (1 Man. & G. 201); and Briscoe v. Hill (10 M. & W. 735) is an authority in favour of the view there taken.

Lord DENMAN, C.J. (after stating the pleadings).—The complaint therefore intended to be made in the first breach clearly is, the non-delivery of the goods contracted for; but that breach is not well laid to the promises stated in the declaration; the promise being to deliver such goods as the plaintiff should buy, and the averment being that the plaintiff did buy, not the goods contracted for, but certain goods as and for those goods. The 2nd breach also applies to the goods which the plaintiff thought proper to buy and pay for as and for the goods contracted for; but the promise to pack for the voyage relates only to the goods contracted for, and that breach therefore is also incorrectly stated; but as to the 3rd breach, which states that the goods actually delivered were deficient in quantity, that does appear to me to constitute a good cause of action. There was a contract to deliver some goods, and there was a delivery of goods, the plaintiff buying and paying for them; then the 3rd breach states that those goods were deficient in quantity, and for that I think the action may be maintained. Then, looking to the doctrine of general demurrers, what is the Court bound to do? I think the Court is bound to look at each count or breach as a single cause of complaint; and where on general demurrer objections are made to several counts, and as to some there are objections good on a general demurrer, the Court must give judgment for the defendant who demurs upon those counts or breaches, rejecting all that of the demurrer which is too large; and, as to the count or breach which is good, giving judgment for the plaintiff upon that. Accordingly in this case our judgment will be for the defendant upon the 1st and 2nd breaches, and for the plaintiff upon the 3rd. Judgment accordingly.

SKILBECK v. GARBETT.

Proof of the delivery of a letter inclosing a bill of costs to a bellman, or that the letter was put into a box in the attorney's office, and that the bellman called every afternoon and took all letters found in that box, is sufficient proof of a "posting" of such letter within the Attorney and Solicitors Act.

Assumpsit for work and labour, money paid, and on an account stated.

Plea—That the plaintiffs before and at the time when the causes of action accrued were and still are attorneys, &c. and that the money mentioned in the 1st count was and is money claimed by the plaintiffs for work done as such attorneys in transacting the business of the defendant, and that the money mentioned in the 2nd count was and is money claimed for fees and disbursements paid by them in the transacting of such business as aforesaid, and that the account in the last count mentioned was stated of and concerning moneys due from defendant to the plaintiffs in respect of the costs, &c. of the plaintiffs as attorneys for the defendant in transacting such business as aforesaid; that this suit was commenced after the making of a certain Act of Parliament passed in the 6th and 7th years of the reign of the Queen, intituled "An Act, &c.;" and that the plaintiffs did not, nor would, nor did nor would either of them, one month or at any other time before the commencement of this suit deliver unto the defendant being the party to be charged therewith, or send by the post to or leave for him at his counting-house, office of business, dwelling-house, or last known place of abode, a bill of the said fees, charges, and disbursements, or of any of them, or of any part thereof, subscribed with the proper hands of the plaintiffs or with the proper hand of either of them, or by either of the plaintiffs, either with his own name or with any name or style whatsoever, or inclosed in or accompanied by any letter subscribed with the proper hands of the plaintiffs, or, &c. referring to the said bill according to the form of the statutes, &c. but wholly refused, &c.—Verification.

Replication—That the plaintiffs did, one month before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on, &c. send by post to the defendant at his office of business a bill of the said fees, &c. inclosed in a letter subscribed with the proper hand of one of the plaintiffs, to wit, &c. with a certain name and style, being the name and style of the partnership of the plaintiffs, to wit, &c. referring to the said bill according to the form of the said statute, concluding to the country. Issue thereon.

At the trial, it appeared that the defendant is an attorney at Wellington, in Salop, and that the action was brought for business done by the plaintiffs as his London agents; that previously to the passing of the Attorney and Solicitors' Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), four bills of costs were at different times made out in the plaintiff's office, and inclosed in letters written to the defendant by some one of the plaintiffs; that in the usual course of business those letters were put into a box in the plaintiff's office, and that the postman or bellman called every afternoon, took all letters out of that box, and put them into his bag. The residue of the plaintiff's demand was 7*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.* and it was proved that two bills for that amount had been posted by a clerk in a regular receiving-office in Chancery-lane. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiffs for 26*l.* 7*s.* 5*d.* the whole amount claimed; and on the 25th of April last Chambers obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, or for a reduction of the damages to the sum of 7*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.* on three grounds; 1st, that the issue being whether a bill was delivered pursuant to the statute, the only proof given as to part of the demand was of bills delivered before the statute; 2nd, that at all events the delivery to the bellman was not a sufficient posting of the letters; and, 3rd, that to support the replication it should have been proved that a bill to the whole amount mentioned in the declaration was delivered sec. stat.

Hugh Hill now shewed cause.—First, as to the point of pleading, that upon this replication there must be proof of the delivery of a bill as to the whole, there is no ground for the objection. It stands upon the same footing as a plea of the Statute of Limitations, which is divisible, and is a defence as to the items to which it applies, and to no others. (1 Wms. Saunders, 208, k; 2 Wms. Saunders, last ed. 122 a.; Lord v. Houstoun, 11 East, 62.) Secondly, it is quite sufficient that the letters were taken by the postman in the regular course of business.

C. Clark, contrà.—The first point noticed on the other side was taken upon the authority of Todd v. Emly (14 L. J. N. S. Q. B. 150); but that case is perhaps distinguishable. However, on the second point, it is submitted that clearly the delivery to the bellman was not sufficient; citing Hetherington v. Kemp (4 Camp. 193); Hawkes v. Salter (4 Bing. 715); Hawkins v. Rutt (Peake's N. P. C. 248); Packe v. Alexander (3 M. & Scott, 789).

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—If a public officer takes possession of the letter in the performance of a public duty, it is the same thing as if the letter were put into the post-office.

COLERIDGE, J.—In Hetherington v. Kemp, Lord Ellenborough said, "Some evidence must be given that the letter was taken from the table in the counting-house, and put into the post-office. Had you called the porter, and he had said that, although he had no recollection of the letter in question, he invariably carried to the post-office all the letters found upon the table, this might have done;" and I think this case falls within that rule; because it cannot be necessary to call the porter to state that which another person affirmatively says of him; and here it is proved to be the bellman's practice to take all letters out of the box. The delivery, therefore, is sufficient, and no question arises upon the construction of the statute. Rule discharged.

GRAHAM v. LYNES.

This differed from Graham v. Witherby only in the circumstance that under Lyne's writ goods had been seized belonging to T. Seddon, upon which no actual seizure had been made under the prior writ issued upon Bennett's judgment.

It was argued by Willes for the assignees, and Bramwell for the defendant Lynes. In addition to the cases cited in the argument upon the former case, were cited, Rybant v. Peckham (1 T. R. 731); Saunders v. Bridges (3 B. & Ald. 95); Whitmore v. Green (2 D. & L.) Cur. adv. vult.

CROWN CASES RESERVED.

Saturday, April 26.

Reg. v. Camplin.

If a man makes a woman quite drunk, and then violates her person, he is guilty of rape, though the jury find that he administered the liquor for the purpose of exciting her only, and not with the intention of rendering her insensible and then having sexual connection with her.

The prisoner was tried at the Old Bailey on an indictment for rape, committed on the person of a girl thirteen years old. The evidence was that the prisoner made her quite drunk, and whilst she was insensible, violated her. The jury found that the prisoner gave her the liquor for the purpose of exciting her, and not intending to render her insensible and then have connection with her. The prisoner's counsel objected that the crime of rape was not proved, and that point was reserved for the opinion of the judges.

Ballantine, for the prisoner, now contended that in order to constitute the offence of rape, there must be an actual resistance on the part of the person ravished; and that the form of indictment containing the words "violently and against her will," proved that necessity; but, further, that in the present case, according to the finding of the jury, there was neither force nor fraud. It was an improper thing to give the girl liquor, but the jury had negatived any intention to commit a rape. All the evidence went to shew that if the man had any intention at all, it was to induce the woman to consent; and the learned judge distinctly put to the jury the two questions whether the prisoner gave her the liquor intending to have connection with her by force, or only for the purpose of exciting her.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Tuesday, June 10.

The Attorney-General v. The Marquis of Hertford.

Legacy duty.

Where the donee of a power had an option to charge certain real estate with annuities, the amounts of which were not specifically defined by the power: Held, that such annuities were within the proviso of the 4th sec. of 45 Geo. 3, c. 28, which exempts from the duties imposed by the Act "any specific sum or sums of money" appointed by any will, &c. under any power, &c.

This case was heard some months since, and as the judgment contains all the material points, it will be unnecessary to refer more particularly to the arguments.

JUDGMENT.

Parke, B. now delivered judgment.—The question raised in this case is, whether the appointment by the codicil to Lord Hertford's will of the annuity of 700*l.* a year to Lady Strahen, pursuant to the powers contained in the deed of the 2nd of October, was to be liable to legacy duty or not, under the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184. That statute imposes a duty on every legacy given by will, either out of the personal estate of the testator, or out of or chargeable upon his real estate, or out of moneys to arise by the sale, or mortgage, or other disposition of his real estate.

What is a legacy out of or charged upon the real estate of the testator, depends upon the construction of the 45 Geo. 3, c. 28, which first imposes a duty on such legacies, and is incorporated with the 55 Geo. 3, by the general provision contained in sec. 8 of that Act. The material section of the 45 Geo. 3 is the 4th. It defines what a legacy of personalty is, as had been previously done by statute 36 Geo. 3, and adds a description of what is a legacy payable out of the real estate. It provides "that every gift by any will or testamentary instrument of any person dying after the passing of this Act, who by virtue of any such will or testamentary instrument shall have effects, shall be satisfied out of the personal estate of such person so dying, or out of any personal estate which such person shall have power to dispose of as he or she shall think fit, or which shall have been charged upon or made payable out of any real estate, or be directed to be satisfied out of any moneys to arise by the sale of any real estate of the person so dying, or which such person may have the power to dispose of, whether the same shall be given by way of annuity, or in any other form, shall be deemed and taken to be a legacy within the true intent and meaning of this Act. Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to extend to the charging with the duties by this Act granted any specific sum or sums of money, or any share or proportion thereof, charged by any marriage settlement, or deed or deeds, upon any real estate in any case in which any such specific sum or sums, or share or proportion thereof, shall be appointed or apportioned by any will or testamentary instrument under any power given for that purpose by any such marriage settlement, or deed or deeds." If we had to construe the first part of the clause only, without taking the proviso and such subsequent section into consideration, we might probably have held that the appointment of the annuity of Lady Strahen was liable to duty. The case Re Chumley (1 Crom. & Mee. 149) had already decided that there the person had an absolute power under the settlement to dispose of a sum of money by will; a gift by will of the whole of the sum in different portions to different legatees was liable to the legacy duty; and if, instead of a sum of money, the power had been to appoint an annuity charged upon personal estate, there could have been no doubt but that the gift of an annuity by will would never have been liable to legacy duty, though the whole annuity had been given to one person. It cannot make any difference in this respect whether a part of the fund, which the testator has an absolute power to dispose of, or the whole fund, be given; the legacy is equally satisfied out of personal estate, which the testator has power to dispose of as he shall think fit.

If such be the construction of the fourth section in the part relating to personalty, it will be reasonable to put the same construction on the parts relating to real estate; and therefore we should probably have held that this annuity itself being real estate, which Lord Hertford had absolute power to dispose of, so the gift of a sum charged upon or the part of the annuity would have been liable, as a gift of the whole would be. Still, however, there would have been a difficulty in fixing the defendant in this information with the duty under section 5, because, if the annuity itself was the real estate which the late marquis had the power to dispose of, the defendant, the present marquis, was not the person entitled to that real estate. He was entitled to the estate for life on the real estate charged with his annuity; consequently, the late marquis had no power of disposition over that real estate.

The proviso which follows, however, creates a further difficulty which we cannot get over; and reading the whole clause together, we think that the intention of the legislature to render such a gift as this liable to duty is at all events not so clearly expressed that we ought to decide against the defendant. It is a settled principle that the subject ought not to be charged with a duty except by words clearly imposing it. It is extremely probable that the former part of the clause intended to protect provisions for families only out of pecuniary charges on real estate by ante nuptial or post nuptial marriage settlements, especially when we bear in mind that the 45 Geo. 3, c. 28, first imposed a duty on legacies to children or their descendants, and it is likely that the large words were introduced with a view of completely securing the object. But we cannot act upon such a conjecture; the words include every charge by deed of a specific sum or sums; and if the proviso protects an appointment by will where the charge is 700*l.* in one sum, it is difficult to conceive why it should not equally apply to any number of sums of 700*l.* payable annually. Mr. Crompton never contended that the words "specific sums" only applied to charges of sums certain, the precise amount of which was ascertained by the deed or settlement. But we have a difficulty in understanding why the legislature should mean to give an exception where the charge was of 100*l.* certain, and to take it away where it was a charge of 700*l.* or less, at the option of the donee of the power. Indeed, Lord Denman has already intimated his opinion in delivering the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber in error in Pickard v. The Attorney-General (6 Mee. & Wel. 348), that charges of this nature (for the charge there was of an annuity not exceeding a certain amount) would be exempt if originally made by deed under this proviso. For these reasons, we are of opinion that our judgment must be for the defendant.

Chapple v. Purday.

Thursday, June 12.

Copyright.

A foreign author residing abroad, and composing a work there, or the assignee of such foreign author, though a British subject, has not by the common law of England, nor by the statute law, any copyright in this country.

But if a foreign author, not having published abroad, first publishes in England, he has a copyright in such publication.

The facts, arguments, and cases cited on both sides are so elaborately stated and reviewed in the judgment, that it will be but wasting the reader's time to repeat them here.

Jervis, Q.C. Godson, Q.C. and Crompton, for the defendants, pursuant to leave reserved, obtained a rule nisi in Michaelmas Term last, for plaintiff to shew cause why a verdict should not be entered for the defendant. (See 4 Law T. 114.) Cause was was shewn in Hilary Term, when

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Pollock, C.B. now delivered judgment.—This was an action for the infringement of the copyright of the music of the opera of Fra Diavolo, claimed by the plaintiff. The pleas denied the copyright claimed, and denied the plaintiff was proprietor. The material facts, as they appeared in evidence at the trial, were, that in 1829, Auber, a Frenchman, composed at Paris the overture to Fra Diavolo, which is the subject of the present action. Soon after, Auber assigned it to Fronpenas, and Fronpenas, on the 12th of January, 1830, sold it to Latour, a denizen of England, by an instrument in writing. On the 28th of January, 1830, there was a representation of the piece, and the overture was played at the Opera Comique, in Paris. About the 9th of February, 1830, there was an entry at Stationers' Hall, in the name of D'Almaine and Company, who were in connection with Fronpenas. On the 13th of February, 1830, Latour in Paris sold to the plaintiff by memorandum in writing, not under seal (but which was proved at the trial to be good and valid by the French law), the copyright in England. On the 5th of March, the overture was printed and published at Paris. On the 2nd of June, 1836, Latour, Auber, and Fronpenas, by indenture, assigned to the plaintiff the copyright in England, and on the 14th of May, 1840, the plaintiff published the music in England, subsequent to which the defendant published copies in England, for which this action was brought. Two questions of importance were raised in the course of the argument: the first is, whether at common law a foreigner residing abroad, and composing a work, has a copyright in England? The second, whether such foreign author, or his assignee, has such a right, by virtue of the English statutes? Upon the first question we do not feel any difficulty, and we are of opinion that a foreign author residing abroad, and composing a work there, has not by the common law of England any copyright here. The copyright is the exclusive right of multiplying copies of an original work or composition, and consequently preventing others from so doing. The general question, whether there was such a right at common law, was elaborately discussed in the great case of Millar v. Taylor (4 Burr. 2,333; and Beckett v. Donaldson, reported in 4 Burr. 2,408 and 2 Bro. P. C. 129). In Millar v. Taylor it was decided by Lord Mansfield, Justice Ashton, and Justice Mills, that at common law such a copyright existed, and the judgment was given for the plaintiff; and in Becket v. Donaldson, which was an injunction founded upon the judgment in Millar v. Taylor, the majority of the judges held that such a common law right existed, but the majority also held that it was taken away by the statute of Anne. We, however, are all of opinion that no such right exists in a foreigner at the common law, but that such a right is the creature of the municipal law of each country; and that in England it is altogether governed by the statutes which have been passed, regulating it, as in France, it is governed by the law of that country; but such a law has no extra-territorial power, and cannot be enforced beyond the limits of the state. Admitting, therefore, that by the law of France no one can, without the consent of the author, make or print any copy of his work, at any time or in any place, no right can be claimed in this country as founded upon such a law, nor can any right be claimed here, except what can be supported by the law of this country. The subjects of this country are not bound to obey such a law of France, nor the courts of this country to enforce it. It follows that a British sub-

but, they at common law fairly print and publish in Great Britain any number of copies of a French work, without being exposed to an action at the suit of the French author, whose exclusive privilege, founded upon the French law, is limited by the French territory; and indeed, if this were not so, the attempt to establish international copyright by treaty would have been altogether unnecessary. A foreign author having, therefore, by the common law no exclusive right in this country, the only remaining question is, whether he has such a right by the statute law, and this depends upon the construction of the statutes relating to literary copyright which were in force at the time of the transaction in question, namely, the 8 Anne, c. 19, and 54 Geo. 3, c. 156. If a judicial construction had been put on these statutes by a direct and deliberate decision of any Court, we should feel bound by it; but supposing that for the present there is no such decision, and the question comes now to be considered for the first time, we should feel no difficulty as to the proper construction to be put upon these statutes. They were passed for the encouragement of learning and the arts, by insuring to the authors, artists, and inventors, the reward of their labour. In their language these acts are general, but primâ facie it is to be concluded that the British legislature means only to protect British subjects, and foster and encourage British industry and talent; and therefore, where statutes of the United Kingdom speak of authors and inventors, they refer to subjects of, and residents in, the United Kingdom, or at least British subjects by birth or residence, and do not apply to foreigners resident abroad; and therefore, adverting principally to the statutes 8 Anne and 54 George 3, their provisions clearly refer to such works as are published in Great Britain or the United Kingdom, from which first publication the time begins to run from which an entry is, under the 2nd section of the one and under the 5th section of the other, to be made at Stationers' Hall, in order for the recovery of penalties, and within twelve months after which publication, copies are to be delivered by the publisher to the British Museum and other libraries. We should therefore conclude, upon the construction of the statutes alone, that a foreign author, or the assignee of a foreign author, whether a British subject or not, had no copyright in England, and no right of action on the grounds of any piracy of his work committed in the British territories. It remains to be considered what have been the decisions of our Courts on the construction of this and similar other Acts of Parliament. Under the statute of the 21 James 1, c. 3, against monopolies, the sixth section leaves, as they stood at common law, all the letters patent for fourteen years of new manufactures granted to the first inventors. It has been decided that an importer is within the clause, and if the manufacture be new in the realm, he is an inventor, and may have a patent, though he is not the assignee of a foreign inventor, and though he may be a foreigner himself, if the Crown choses to grant him a patent. The authority for that is to be found in Edgeberry v. Stephens, 2nd Salkeld. The principle of this decision is, that the common law authorizes the grant of a monopoly in this case, it being for the public benefit to introduce new inventions from abroad under the Copyright Acts. There is, we believe, no decision precisely in point, but the result of the dicta and the authorities is, that a foreign author, or his assignees, may have the benefits of the statute if his publication be in England, but not otherwise, and the mere importer, without title, is not the author within the meaning of these Acts.

The first case on the subject is Clementi v. Walker (2nd Barnewell & Creswell, 861), which occurred in 1824, in which the inclination of the opinion of the Court was strongly expressed in favour of what I have stated to be primâ facie the natural construction of the Acts. The points actually decided in that case were, first, that the plaintiff, who was not the author, nor then the assignee of the author, gains no rights by a mere first publication in England; and, secondly, that the assignee had no right here if the author had first published in this country. Whether if the foreigner had first published in this country he would have had the right under the statutes, or would have been deprived of it if he had first published abroad, are points undecided by that case; but there is a strong opinion expressed that if the foreign author does not publish here promptly he loses any right he might otherwise have.

The next case on the subject was in 1828, of De Londre v. Shaw (2 Simons, 237), before the Vice-Chancellor of England. It certainly does not decide the question now before us; but it is a dictum that the Court does not protect the copyright of a foreigner, which is quite true if there be nothing more than a foreign work not published here in the name of the author or his assignees. In 1831 there was the case of Guichard v. Mori (9 Law J. N.S. Chancery, p. 226), in which Lord Chancellor Brougham decided that if a book was written by a foreigner, and published in a foreign country, the person who purchased the right to publish it here could not support any claim to the copyright in this country, neither at law nor in equity. This case was followed by one on a similar subject, the copyright of an engraving, Page v. Townshend (5 Simons, 395), in which the Vice-Chancellor of England expressed an opinion that the object of the legislature in the statutes as to engravings was to protect those works which were to be designed, engraved, etched, or worked in Great Britain, and not those which were designed, engraved, etched, or worked abroad, and only published in Great Britain. In 1839 another case came before the Vice-Chancellor of England, Bentley v. Forster (10 Simons, 329), in which that learned judge decided that the statutes 8 Anne and 54 Geo. 3 did not extend to a foreign author and his assignees if he or they first published in England. There is an ambiguity in the judgment as reported, for it may mean if he is the first who published in England, or if the first publication anywhere be in England, and the context does not enable us to determine with certainty in which sense the words were used, though more probably the latter. An action was directed to be brought, but the defendants submitted, and no further investigation took place. In the meantime, in 1835 the case of D'Almaine v. Boosey was decided by Lord Abinger, reported in 1 Young & Collyer, 288. Lord Abinger granted an injunction to restrain the piracy of music composed by Auber at Paris, but not published there, and first published in England, not by the composer, but by his assignee, a native British subject. The decision puts the English assignee on the footing of the author or composer, and holds him entitled to the copyright by virtue of such first publication, whether at common law or under the statutes.

These are the cases on the subject; and the result seems to be, that if a foreign author, not having published abroad, first publishes in England, he may have the benefits of the statute; but that no case has decided that, if the author first publishes abroad, he can afterwards have the benefit of it by first publishing here. The 7th section of the 4 Geo. 3, c. 107, favours this construction; for it protects against piracy, by importation from abroad, those works only which are first composed, written, printed, or published, in "this kingdom;" probably it would include the whole of the United Kingdom; and this protection would seem to be co-extensive with the rights to be thereby secured. A further argument may be derived, though perhaps not a very cogent one, from the International Copyright Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 89, which empowers her Majesty, by order in Council, to give to the authors of works published abroad the sole power and liberty of printing in the British dominions, for a term not exceeding that which authors, being British subjects, were then by the law entitled to in respect of books first published within the United Kingdom. This shews the opinion of the legislature, which may assist us in interpreting the law, and it shews that by the former statutes a foreigner, who first published abroad, was not entitled to the protection of the Act, and probably was not entitled under any circumstances. Upon the whole, then, we think, it doubtful, whether a foreigner, not resident here, can have an English copyright at all, and we think he certainly cannot if he has first published his work abroad, before any publication in England. It remains to be considered whether the plaintiff is in the situation of a foreigner who has first published abroad. At the time of the assignment to him no publication took place, but before he published in England, a publication had taken place by the assignor in France; therefore the work had been published abroad before the plaintiff published it in England, and such publication was not by a wrong-doer, but by a person who was lawfully entitled to publish. It seems to us, therefore, that for this purpose the plaintiff and Auber and Frapenas must be considered the same person; and we think, as the publication in Paris by the composer, or his assignor there, prior to any publication in England, prevents a copyright from being acquired under the statutes, and there being no right at common law or under the statutes, the rule for a nonsuit must be made absolute.

CHOLMONDELEY and OTHERS v. DORLEY.

Semble, where the indorsement on the back of a promissory note shewed the time at which the interest to be paid on it was to be calculated: Held, that it ought to have an agreement stamp.

Quære, where a note bears an indorsement on it made at the same time the note is written, which explains the purpose for which it was given, but does not vary the instrument as between the parties to it, whether it is a negotiable instrument within 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9?

This was an action brought by the plaintiffs, as the payees of a promissory note, against the defendant, as one of the makers thereof. Verdict for the plaintiffs, damages 125*l.* with leave reserved to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit, or for a new trial.

The note declared on was in the following form:—

"Market Rasen, July 1, 1836.

"Borrowed and received of the Lincoln and Linsay Banking Company, the sum of one hundred pounds, which we jointly and severally promise to pay to Sir Montague Jno. Chomely, Bart. and William Wrigtlesworth, trustees of the said ban. co. or their order upon demand, with lawful interest.

(Signed) "THOS. SMITH, sen.
"THOS. SMITH, jun.
"THOS. DORLEY.

"Witnesses to the signing of Thos. Smith, sen. and Thos. Dorley WILLIAM ROWSON.

"Witness to the signing of Thos. Smith, jun.
MICHAEL MORE."

Upon the note there was the following indorsement:—

"The within note is given for securing floating advances from the Lincoln and Linsay Banking Company to the within-named Thomas Smith, sen. with lawful interest for the same from the respective times when such advances have been or may be made, together with commission, stamps, postages, and all usual charges and disbursements, not exceeding in the whole, at any one time, the sum of 100*l.* within mentioned."

(Signed and witnessed as before.)

Whitehurst, Q. C. some time since obtained a rule nisi, pursuant to the leave reserved, on two grounds: first, that the note was not a negotiable instrument within the statute of 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9, but was a mere guarantee; and secondly, if the Court held it to be a promissory note, then there had been no payment made on account of it to take it out of the Statute of Limitations.

Byles, Serjt. and Gunning now shewed cause, and contended that the indorsement on the note did not vary it at all as between these parties, but was a mere amplification of the ordinary words used in a note of "value received," and that a fluctuating account at a banker's was a good consideration for the giving of a promissory note. Here it was clear that these parties intended to treat this as an ordinary promissory note, for they refer to it in the indorsement as a note. Then as to the point on the Statute of Limitations, it was proved at the trial that interest had been charged on all the various advances made by the bank to Smith, many of which were within six years, and this it was contended took the case out of the statute.

Cases cited. Leeds v. Lancashire (2 Camp. 204); Heniker v. Wegg (4 Q. B. 792); Dowling v. Ford (11 M. & W. 321); Brill v. Crick (1 M. & W. 232).

Whitehurst, Q. C. and O'Malley, contrà.—This is a mere guarantee to pay for money advances to another instead of for goods, and it may be that, if properly stamped, an action on the special contract might be maintained; but this is an action on a promissory note. Now it is contended, first, that this is not a negotiable instrument. This is shewn by the indorsement, and the moment it was admitted at the trial that the indorsement was written at the same time as the note, there was an end of the case, as it shewed that the promise was a conditional one, and therefore the instrument was not a negotiable one within the statute of 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9. Then, even if the Court were to hold that this was a note, there are no payments of interest made on account thereof to take it out of the statute. (Stopped by the Court.)

PARKE, B.—I think it is clear, that this rule must be made absolute for a nonsuit, for the only way to take this note, if it be one, out of the Statute of Limitations, would be to shew payment of interest. Now that can only be done under the agreement contained in the indorsement, and then the note should have an agreement stamp. This point, too, was taken by Mr. O'Malley, at the trial.

Whitehurst.—I think we are entitled to a verdict, as there is no sufficient evidence of any payment.

PARKE, B.—If we go on the point that this instrument ought to be stamped with an agreement stamp, it must be a nonsuit; if you choose to waive that and go on, you may take your chance of a verdict.

Whitehurst declining to do this,

Rule absolute to enter nonsuit.

PHILLIPS v. WARREN.

In an action by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, a general receipt on the back of the bill is not of itself evidence of its having been paid by the acceptor, unless it is shewn to have been in his possession after it was paid.

This was an action by the indorsee of a bill of exchange against the acceptor. Verdict for the plaintiff. At the trial it appeared that on the afternoon of the day on which the bill became due, in 1843, and while it was lying at Barclay's, the banker's, it had been paid by some one who was not known to the banker's clerk, but who, on the bill being paid, wrote the letter "R" on the back of the bill.

A rule nisi was moved for and obtained by M. Chambers last Term (ante, 56), to enter a verdict for the defendant, or for a new trial, on the ground that the letter "R" on the back of the bill was a receipt, which imported, primâ facie, that the bill had been paid by the acceptor, and ought to have been so left to the jury.

Hugh Hill now shewed cause, and contended that a general receipt on the back of a bill was not sufficient to shew that it had been paid by the acceptor, unless perhaps it was shewn to be in the possession of the acceptor after such payment, and to come out of his custody. Then, as to the case of Scoley v. Walsley (Peak, 34), which had been relied on by the other side on moving for the rule, that case, it is submitted, is a nisi prius case, and is bad here.

M. Chambers, in support of the rule, relied on Scoley v. Walsley, and contended that the ruling of Lord Kenyon in that case was reasonable. In that case, on a bill being produced with a receipt on the back, Lord Kenyon says, "that, primâ facie, the receipt on the back of the bill imports that it was paid by the acceptor. For aught I know to the contrary, the plaintiff and the defendant may have settled their accounts, and this bill may have been delivered up on such settlement. It must, therefore, be explained before I admit it in evidence of the bill having been paid by the drawer."

PARKE, B.—I confess I do not at all understand the case cited from Peak; but giving full weight to all that Lord Kenyon is reported to have said in that case, I am not disposed to carry it further. The letter "R" means nothing until it is shewn what is to be understood by it. Now here a person is called who does not clearly explain that; and from what he proved, it is reasonable to suppose that this bill was not paid by the acceptor; for if it had been, it would have been in his possession, and he could have proved that in some way or other; indeed, he does not even now make an affidavit to that effect.

The rest of the Court concurring,

Rule discharged.

THOMPSON v. DOMINEY.

An indorsee of a bill of lading cannot bring an action in his own name for an injury to the goods transferred, the right of property, and not the right of action, in respect of such goods being all that passed by the indorsement.

This was an action brought by the indorsee of a bill of lading against the shipper for an injury to the goods shipped. At the trial the plaintiff had a verdict. A rule nisi to enter a nonsuit having been obtained by Kinglake, Serjt. on the ground that no action would lie by the indorsee of a bill of lading in his own name,

Greenwood now shewed cause, and contended that such an action would lie by the custom of merchants; that the contract of the shipper was in fact a contract with the consignee and his assigns, and arose in the same way as that of the acceptor with the indorsee of a bill of exchange. [PARKE, B.—I never heard of such a thing as that an action could be maintained by the indorsee of a bill of lading in his own name.] We say it is by the custom of merchants. [ALDERSON, B.—If so, it must be to be found somewhere; can you shew us any authority for this form of action?] Not precisely in point, perhaps; but in Lickbarrow v. Mason (2 Term, 63), it was proved by the jury that a bill of lading was a negotiable instrument, and passed the property in goods by the delivery and indorsement thereof. [PARKE, B.—I have never heard that if a bill of lading is found in the streets, with an indorsement on it in blank, the party finding it could transfer any right by handing it over to another party, and receiving value.] I admit that you cannot assimilate a bill of lading with a bill of exchange in all respects. [PARKE, B.—This is a chose in action, and by law is not transferable by indorsement to convey a right of action; but you say this right of action is transferable by the custom of merchants, and you can shew no authority for that position; you cite no case, and the point is not even mentioned in Lord Tenterden's book on Shipping. The utmost length that the custom of merchants has gone has been to do away with the right of stoppage in transitu.]

Greenwood then referred to Haille v. Smith (1 B. & P. 564); Howard v. Tucker (1 B. & A. 712); Sargent v. Morris (3 B. & Al. 277).

Kinglake, Serjt. was not called on.

PARKE.—Here is not a shadow of pretence for saying that the indorsement does any more than transfer the right of property, and not the right of action. A right to bring trover for the goods themselves may be transferred, but not more.

The rest of the Court concurring,

Rule absolute to enter a nonsuit.

THE MAYOR OF BRIDGEWATER v. ALLEN.

A modus which has existed for sixty years, that all in-dwellers of a parish occupying land therein shall pay sixpence per acre, in lieu of tithes, and all out-dwellers one shilling, is a reasonable modus.

This was a question as to the legality of a modus payable by the occupiers of land in a certain parish. The modus claimed being for the out-dwellers occupying land in the parish to pay one shilling in lieu of all tithes, except of pigs, and for the in-dwellers to pay sixpence.

At the trial at the last assizes for Somersetshire the jury found in favour of the modus set up. Crowder, Q. C. having obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground that the modus was unreasonable, and therefore bad, Kinglake, Serjt. and Greenwood now shewed cause, and contended that the modus was a perfectly good one in all respects, for it was certain in amount, in the time when it was to be paid, and also to and by whom it was to be paid; and it must be taken to have been paid from time immemorial, as a payment has been proved for sixty years, which was equivalent, under Lord Tenterden's Act, to a proof of payment from time immemorial. Then it was submitted that there was nothing unreasonable in the owner of the tithes making such a modus, as it was clear that the in-dwellers were liable to more burdens than the out-dwellers, as they had to pay Easter dues and surplice fees to the parson, and also to pay agistment tithes, which would not be payable by an out-dweller, who, for instance, with respect of the tithe of milk, would pay it to the parson of the parish where the cows were milked. It was therefore quite reasonable that the out-dweller should pay more than the in-dweller. [PARKE, B.—The only question is, can you assign a reason for the difference? If you can, good; if not, then the modus would be bad.] Then it is submitted there is a very good reason shewn here why the parson should make such a bargain.

Cases cited: Chapman v. The Bishop of Lincoln (2 E. & Y. 11); Loxton v. Langston (1 E. & Y. 567); Sansome v. Shaw (2 E. & Y. 120); Hatcher v. Ridly (1 E. & Y. 506).

Crowder, Q. C. and Elliott, contrà.—No case can be found where a modus that the same land in different hands shall pay a different sum has been held good; it might be as well said that a modus that all red-haired men should pay a larger sum than others would be good. Then as to the point put, that in-dwellers are more valuable tenants to the parson than out-dwellers, that may be put both ways, for the parson has more to do for the in-dwellers than the out. [ALDERSON, B.—Is there any case which shews that where a bargain of this kind has been made and acceded to from the time of Richard the 2nd, and which was not illegal then, has been set aside?] It may be that the parson can bind himself, but not his successors. [ALDERSON, B.—That might be a good argument if you were arguing before the late Act.]

Cases cited: Manby v. Taylor (2 E. & Y. 696); Knight v. Waterford (4 Y. & C. 283).

By the COURT.—This rule must be discharged. First, we must take it that there has been a payment from the time of Richard the 2nd, and therefore immemorial; then are we in a condition to say this modus is clearly unreasonable, for it seems to us that we are bound to support it if we can, and that we can do so on the grounds submitted by brother Kinglake. There is manifestly a good reason for imposing a higher sum on an out-dweller, as he pays no personal tithes or Easter dues, &c.; then, as it has existed so long, we will not disturb it. Rule discharged.

CUTCLIFFE v. BROMRIDGE.—This case was argued at some length, when it appearing that a point of waiver or no waiver had been left to the jury, the Court said there must be a new trial to take their opinion on that point. New trial accordingly.

CORNISH v. DAKIN.—In this case it appeared that the misdirection complained of did not appear on the judge's notes. The Court said they must adhere to their rule, and take the judge's note to be correct; and as that put the defendant out of court, the rule must be discharged. Rule discharged.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

Saturday, June 14.

[The arguments in the following case were reported last week (see 5 Law T. 244). The Court this day gave judgment.]

SCOTT v. WEDLAKE.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J.—This is an action of assumpsit brought against the defendant as administratrix, with the will annexed, of Thomas Wedlake upon promises made by the testator in his life time. The defendant pleaded that she was not, and never had been administratrix in manner and form as the plaintiff had alleged; and to this plea there is a verification. To this plea the plaintiff demurred, and assigned two causes of demurrer, and on the argument on the demurrer the Court of Queen's Bench gave judgment that the writ be quashed. The first cause of demurrer assigns that the plea, if it is to be taken as merely denying that the defendant ever was administratrix or liable as such, improperly concludes with a verification, and ought to have concluded to the country; the other causes of demurrer were not raised in argument, and it is unnecessary to notice them further than to state that it appears clear to us that the plea is to be taken as merely denying that the defendant ever was administratrix, and liable as such, and consequently the causes of demurrer, which proceed on the proposition that the plea is not such a denial, cannot be sustained. It remains, therefore, to be considered whether the plea, in the sense ascribed to it in the first cause of demurrer, which we think its manifest and true sense, is bad, from not concluding to the country. As to the argument that no person could sue or be sued as administrator, the statute 31 Edw. 3, c. 11, requires the ordinary, in every case where a man dieth intestate, to depute his next and most lawful friend to administer his goods, and enables such administrator to demand and recover, as executor, debts due to the estate, and makes him liable to answer in the King's Court and give an account as completely as the dead person would have given, and in the same manner as executors shall answer. This statute in its terms applies only to administrators where a man dies intestate, but it has been extended further, and comprehends equally both plaintiffs and defendants where administration has been granted, although there was no intestacy; as in the case of Walker v. Woollaston (2 P. W. 576), and other cases, and see Comyn's Digest, tit. Pleader. The statute Edw. 3 does not prescribe the form of proceeding by or against administrators, but it enables them to sue as executors, and makes them liable to be sued in the same manner as executors. Its intention and spirit seem to be, that no unnecessary difference should be made between executors and administrators. In the cases of defendants charged as executors, the decisions have established that a conclusion with a verification is proper; and its propriety cannot now be questioned, even though the reason of the rule cannot now be understood; and it was admitted in the argument that there is no doubt, if the rule be applicable to the case of administrators, the present plea was properly concluded. That reason, however, is applicable in the opinion of the Court. It was contended in the argument that the case of a defendant charged as administratrix differed from that of one charged as executor; because the plea of ne unques executor, by denying that the defendant was executor of the last will, or administered as executor, denies more than the declaration alleges, which only charges the defendant as executor of the last will; whereas the plea in the present case of an administrator does no more than deny the allegation in the declaration. But this distinction does not appear to be well founded. The declaration, in case of an executor, does indeed describe him as executor of the last will and testament, but this is because there is no other form; and it has been held, that the denying the defendant is executor of the last will, or even administered as executor, does no more than deny that he is executor either by right or by circumstances, and does no more than deny what the allegation in the declaration that the defendant is executor of the last will is to be understood to import. It appears to us, that the defendant in the present case was not bound to conclude to the country; and that the Court of Queen's Bench was right in holding the plea to be good. The Court also said that the judgment had been erroneously entered up, viz. that the writ be quashed, and therefore reversed it as entered; giving judgment, however, for the plaintiff.

ON ERROR FROM THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

(Argued June 18 and 19; determined June 19.)

(Before TINDAL, C. J., COLERIDGE, WILLIAMS, COLTMAN, MAULE, and CRESSWELL, J.J.)

ORMROD v. HUTH and Others.

1. Where upon the sale of goods the purchaser does not require a warranty, he cannot recover in an action on the case for deceit upon a mere representation of the quality by the seller, unless he can shew that the representation was bottomed in fraud.

2. If the representation was false to the knowledge of the party making it, this would in general be conclusive evidence of fraud; but if the representation was honestly made and believed at the time to be true by the party making it, although not true in point of fact, this does not amount to fraud in law, and the rule caveat emptor applies.

This writ of error arose on a bill of exceptions. The action was one on the case, and the declaration alleged that the plaintiff, on the 9th of April, 1840, at the request of the defendants, bargained with the defendants to buy of them 142 bales of cotton at the price of 1,646*l.* 15*s.* and the defendants then, during such bargaining, falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully exhibited to the plaintiff 142 bales of cotton, and represented to the plaintiff, and induced the plaintiff to believe, that the same parcels were samples of the said cotton so bargained for, and were fair samples thereof, and that the said cotton was equal to and was of the same description with and of like quality with the parcels so exhibited, and thereupon the plaintiff confiding, &c. in the parcels so exhibited, and the said representations of the defendants, was induced to buy and did buy the said cotton for 1,646*l.* 15*s.* and afterwards paid such sum for the same, whereas in truth and in fact the said parcels were not fair samples, nor were they samples of the said cotton so bargained for, nor was the said cotton equal to &c. the said parcels, but of inferior description and quality, and much less value; and the plaintiff says that the defendants falsely and fraudulently deceived the plaintiff on the sale of the said cotton, by means whereof, &c.

The defendants pleaded, 1, Not guilty; 2, that the plaintiff was not induced to buy nor did he buy the said cotton as alleged. The replication joined issue.

The record alleged that the trial was had at the Liverpool Spring Assizes for 1843, and set out the evidence, which we do not think it necessary to detail. And the record proceeded to state that the counsel for the defendants did insist that there was no case to leave to the jury, as neither the defendants nor their brokers appeared to have had knowledge of the said alleged misrepresentation being false, or to have acted in any respect against good faith or with any fraudulent purpose; but to this the counsel for the plaintiff did then and there insist that such proof was not necessary; that the delivery of samples not corresponding with the bulk was a false representation of the quality of the cotton, which must be considered in law as fraudulent, as being the statement of a fact which the party making it did not know to be true, and which in fact was not true, and which induced the buyer to make the purchase. And the learned judge did then and there declare and deliver his opinion to the jury, that unless the jury could see grounds for inferring that the defendants or their brokers were acquainted with the fraud that had been practised, or had acted against good faith or with some fraudulent purpose, the defendants were entitled to the verdict on the first issue. Whereupon the counsel for the plaintiff did then and there except to the said direction, and insist that proof of the defendants or their brokers being acquainted with the fraud that had been practised, or of their having acted against good faith, was not necessary to be given by him on that issue. The record then alleged that the jury gave a verdict for the defendants on the said first issue. The ground assigned for error was, that when a vendor, during the course of negotiating a sale, makes a representation to the purchaser which is likely to act as an inducement to the latter, who subsequently completes the bargain, the vendor not having made any communication as to the extent or means of his knowledge or ignorance, nor given any caution or explanation, and the representation turns out to be false, and an action on the case is brought upon it, the jury is not precluded from finding in favour of the plaintiff by reason of knowledge of the falsehood, or of acting against good faith, or with fraudulent intent, not being brought home to the defendant.

Cowling (Wortley, Q.C. with him) now appeared in support of the writ of error; and Crompton (Dundas, Q.C. with him), contrà.

Cowling.—The plaintiff ought to have had the verdict, although the jury may not have found fraud. It appears from the evidence that the bales were piled in the warehouse, so that a purchaser could only see one side. My proposition is, that when a vendor makes a representation, whether ignorant or not that it is false, which representation may be an inducement to a purchaser, and he does purchase, and the representation turns out false, the plaintiff may recover without fraud. The jury may, although they need not, find fraud. Unless this proposition be maintained, there will be a difficulty, or rather impossibility, of obtaining redress. There can be no remedy, if not this. In all cases of contract, the utmost fair dealing is required. If one party does induce another, and the inducement is not grounded on fact, an action on the case may be maintained. (Com. Dig. Action, Case A.) To justify the action, doubtless there must be damage and wrong; but it is wrong and a legal fraud indiscreetly and wantonly to make assertions without foundation. Lawrence, J. said (6 T. R. 657), "Where a man swears to a particular fact, without knowing at the time whether the fact be true or false, it is as much perjury as if he knew the fact to be false, and equally indictable." If a defendant makes a representation which is false, though he knew nothing about it, the jury is warranted in finding him guilty of a fraud. In policies of insurance, the principle now contended for, as applicable to all contracts, prevails; and though such contracts are no doubt watched with peculiar jealousy, the principle on which they are set aside when entered into on false representations equally rescinds all contracts. In the note to Goram v. Sweeting (2 Wms. Saund. 200 b, n 1), all the cases are collected on policies of insurance, and thus summed up:—"It is essential that in all contracts of insurance the greatest good faith should be observed by the assurer and assured towards each other; for fraud, or a concealment or misrepresentation of any material circumstance, makes the whole contract void." And Mr. Serjeant Williams adds a quotation from Yates, J. (Hodgson v. Richardson, 1 Blac. 465), extending the principle to all contracts: "Indeed, the concealment of material circumstances is held to vitiate all contracts upon the principles of natural law. A man who is kept ignorant of any material ingredient may safely say that it is not his contract—non hæc in fœdera veni." And the judgment of Lord Mansfield throughout, in Carter v. Boehm (3 Burr. 1,905), supports the same view. The law does not look at motives, but results, of acts. In the publication of a libel, for instance, it looks only at the tendency of the act. (Chalmers v. Payne, 2 C. M. & R. 156; Fisher v. Clement, 10 B. & C. 472.) It is alleged on the other side that we do not shew an improper motive in the defendant. It is impossible the vendor can discover the real motive. If the Court see there might be a motive, they will not inquire whether the party really acted on it. The contract must be avoided by the misrepresentation. Lord Mansfield said, in Pawson v. Watson (3 Burr. 788), "It is equally false to undertake to say that which he knows nothing at all of, as to say that is true which he knows is not true." In Crosse v. Gardener (Carth. 90), there was no fraud and no knowledge of the falsity. It has always been considered the law, and is confirmed by Schneider v. Heath (3 Camp. 506), where Sir James Mansfield, C. J. says, "It signifies nothing whether a man represents a thing to be different from what he knows it to be, or whether he makes a representation which he does not know at the time to be true or false, if in point of fact it turns out to be false." In Smout v. Ilbery (10 M.&W. 1, 9), Alderson, B. in giving the judgment of the Court says, "It is a wrong to state as true what the individual making such statement does not know to be true, even though he does not know it to be false, but believes, without sufficient grounds, that the statement will ultimately turn out correct. And if that wrong produces injury to a third person, who is wholly ignorant of the grounds on which such belief is founded, and who has relied on the correctness of his assertion, it is equally just that he who makes such assertion should be personally liable for its consequences." In Adamson v. Jarvis (4 Bing. 66), Best, C. J. says, "These cases rest on this principle, that if a man having the possession of property which gives him the character of owner, affirms that he is owner, and thereby induces a man to buy, when in point of fact the affirmant is not the owner, he is liable to an action. It has been said, that is because there is a breach of contract to rest the action on, and that there is no contract in this case. That is not the true principle; it is this—he who affirms either what he does not know to be true, or knows to be false, to another's prejudice and his own gain, is, both in morality and law, guilty of falsehood, and must answer in damages." [TINDAL, C. J.—That was a case of title.] In Burrowes v. Lock (10 Vesey, 476), the Master of the Rolls said, "The plaintiff cannot dive into the secret recesses of the heart, so as to know whether the party did or did not recollect the fact, and it is no excuse to say he did not recollect it; at least it was gross negligence to take upon him to aver distinctly and positively, without giving himself the trouble to recollect whether the fact was so or not." The recent case of Fuller v. Wilson (3 Q. B. 58) is strongly in favour of the plaintiff. There, the defendant being owner of a house, employed an agent to sell it. The agent described it as free from rates and taxes, and did not know it to be otherwise; but it was, in fact, liable to certain rates and taxes, as the defendant knew. On the faith of the agent's description plaintiff bought the house. Held, the plaintiff might maintain case for deceit; though it did not appear that defendant had instructed the agent to make any representation as to taxes. The judgment was, no doubt, afterwards reversed, but not on this point. (3 Q. B. 76.) In Railton v. Mathews (10 Cl. & F. 934, 943), Lord Campbell thus laid down the rule as to fraud: "What is the meaning of undue concealment on the part of the defenders? I apprehend the meaning of those words is, whether Railton was induced to subscribe the bond by the defenders having omitted to divulge facts within their knowledge, which they were bound in point of law to divulge; and whether they concealed those facts from one motive or another, I apprehend, is wholly immaterial. It certainly is wholly immaterial to the interest of the surety, because, to say that his obligations shall depend on that which is passing in the mind of the party requiring the bond, appears to me preposterous; for that would make the obligation of the surety depend on whether the other party had a good memory, or whether he was a person of good sense, or whether he had the motive in his mind, or whether he was aware that these facts ought to be disclosed. The liability of a surety must depend on the situation in which he is placed, or the knowledge communicated to him of the facts of the case, and not upon what was passing in the mind of the other party, or the motive of the other party. If the facts are such as ought to have been communicated, if it was material to the surety that they should be communicated, the motive for withholding them, I apprehend, is wholly immaterial." In Moens v. Heyworth (10 M. & W. 147), which will, no doubt, be relied upon on the other side, Lord Abinger expressly says: "The fraud which vitiates a contract, and gives the party a right to recover, does not, in all cases, necessarily imply moral turpitude. There may be a misrepresentation as to the fact stated in the contract, all the circumstances in which the party may believe to be true." And Parke, B. referring to Polhill v. Walter, and Foster v. Charles, said, "In both those cases there was not any deliberate intention to deceive, yet it was called a fraud, though it was not of so grave a character."

Crompton, contrà.—In all cases of sales of goods, caveat emptor applies, as far as the condition and quality of the goods are in question, unless there is a warranty or fraud. Legal fraud, as distinguished from moral fraud, has no existence. The scienter is only a branch of fraud. In Smith's Leading Cases, in his note to Chandelor v. Lopus (vol. 1, p. 78) he thus lays down the rule: "When Chandelor v. Lopus was decided, the distinction was not then clearly recognized, which is now, however, perfectly established, between an action on a warranty express or implied, and the action upon the case for false representation, in order to maintain which the defendant must be shewn to have been actually and fraudulently cognizant of the falsehood of his representation." In Budd v. Fairmanner (8 Bing. 52), Best, C. J. says, "If an article be sold by description merely, and the buyer afterwards discover a latent defect, he must go further, allege the scienter, and shew that the description was false within the knowledge of the seller." So in Meyer v. Everth (4 Camp. 22), it was expressly held by Lord Ellenborough, that where upon a sale of goods the seller produces a sample, and represents that the bulk is of equal quality, if there be a sale-note which does not refer to the sample, this is not a sale by sample; if the goods turn out to be of inferior quality, the purchaser's remedy is by an action on the case for a deceitful representation. In Freeman v. Baker (5 B. & Ad. 797), it was held, that an action of deceit does not lie against a person making an untrue representation to another, on the faith of which the hearer acts, and thereby incurs damage, if the party making such representation did not know it to be untrue. So in Dobell v. Stevens (3 B. & C. 623), and the previous case of Lysney v. Selby (2 Ld. Raym. 1118), (a) which were actions, the first, for falsely and fraudulently misrepresenting the amount of business done on the sale of a public house, and the second, for misrepresenting the yearly rent of houses sold, the whole question turned on the scienter. In Allen v. Hopkins (13 Law Journ. 318, Exch.) Pollock, C. B. in giving the judgment of the Court, said that the rule of caveat emptor did not apply to the title of the plaintiff, but to the condition of the goods; a distinction which disposes of Crosse v. Gardener, and that class of cases. In Early v. Garrett (9 B. & C. 932), Bayley, J. says, "If a seller fraudulently conceal what he ought to communicate, it will render the contract null and void. But the authorities establish that the concealment must be fraudulent." And Littledale, J.—"The scienter or fraud is the gist of the action where there is no warranty"—referring to Springwell v. Allen (2 East, 448, n); and Parke, J. said, "The decisions shew that the purchaser cannot recover unless he prove fraud on the part of the seller. I think the learned judge properly stated to the jury that mere non-communication was not sufficient to avoid the contract, but that it must be fraudulent." In 3 Bla. Com. 166, the action of deceit is said to be maintainable for want of title to goods (which is clearly erroneous), and in the case, which is a peculiar and excepted one, of provisions not wholesome. The same class of cases may be seen Vin. Ab. Action, Case, Deceit, pp. 1, 2. They depend on manifestly peculiar circumstances. The law differs from the civil law in this, that the civil law gave a remedy for want of title even in the innocent vendor of goods, whereas we do not admit any right of action in such case, and only give the right for a defect of quality when it is fraudulently concealed or misrepresented. Haycraft v. Creasy and a large class of cases no doubt refer to representations not between the parties, but to third persons, yet if any distinction existed between legal and moral fraud it would equally have applied to those cases. In

Cornfoot v. Fowke (6 M. & W. 358), Lord Abinger, C. B. first suggested the distinction between legal and moral fraud; his lordship there observes that it is not correct to suppose that the legal definition of fraud and covin necessarily includes any degree of moral turpitude, and he refers to the law of insurance, in which he observes that "nothing is more certain than that the concealment or misrepresentation, whether by principal or agent, by design or by mistake of a material fact, however innocently made, avoids the contract on the ground of a legal fraud." It is submitted, however, that this remark of his lordship, although applicable to cases of insurance, is not so to other contracts, for the contract of insurance is uberrimæ fidei, and the rule respecting it which requires the full and unreserved disclosure of material facts is not so stringently applied in other cases, especially on the sale of goods. Moreover, Parke, B. in the decision last referred to, expressly repudiates the distinction insisted on by the Lord Chief Baron, and observes, "It is not enough to support the plea that the representation is untrue, it must proved to have been fraudulently made." It is very true that in Fuller v. Wilson (3 Q. B. 58), Lord Denman adverts with approbation to the position maintained by Lord Abinger in Cornfoot v. Fowke; but the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench in that case proceeded on another ground, and Tindal, C. J. in reversing that judgment on error brought, expressly declined to enter into the question discussed in Cornfoot v. Fowke (3 Q. B. 1012); and certainly Freeman v. Baker (5 B. & Ad. 797), which is expressly in point, has not been overruled in any subsequent case. In Collins v. Evans, in error (13 Law Journ. N.S. Q.B. 180; reversing the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, 12 Id. 339; and 3 Q. B. 78, note (b)), the action was brought for a false representation, whereby the sheriffs of London were induced to detain the wrong person under process, the defendants pleaded that when they made the representation they had good and probable reason to believe, and did with good faith believe, that the representation was true, and the question which ultimately came before the Court of Exchequer Chamber was, whether the defendants having reason to believe, and actually believing a fact to be true, and representing it as such to the plaintiffs, were liable to an action, if in the event they proved to have been mistaken. Tindal, C. J. in delivering the judgment of the Court, stated the result of the authorities to be, that a mere representation untrue in fact, but honestly made, is not actionable, and that to render it so it is essential to prove fraud. His lordship referred to Humphreys v. Pratt (5 Bligh, N.S. 154), and distinguished that case on the ground that the sheriff was there made the mandatory or agent of the judgment creditor, for the purpose of taking the goods; that he was consequently in the eye of the law a trespasser, although acting innocently, and might recover over against his master or principal the damages which he was obliged to pay, in consequence of obeying his directions. Taylor v. Ashton (11 M. & W. 401), does not militate against the general principle now contended for: there an action was held maintainable for a false representation made for a fraudulent purpose, with intent to induce the plaintiff to do an act which he subsequently did, and from which damage resulted to him; and in the course of the argument in that case Parke, B. observes, that "there may undoubtedly be a fraudulent representation, if made dishonestly, of that which the party does not know to be untrue, if he does not know it to be true," a proposition in the correctness of which the defendant in error is perfectly willing to acquiesce. His lordship further remarked, in delivering the judgment, that independently of any contract between the parties, no one can be made responsible for a representation like that under the consideration of the Court, unless it be fraudulently made. It is submitted, therefore, that the rule of caveat emptor is applicable in all cases relating to the sale of goods, unless there be a warranty, or unless there be proof of a fraudulent motive or intention in the party making the representation which turns out to be untrue. Is there or is there not such a doctrine as that relative to the scienter? The argument for the plaintiff in error, if valid at all, must go to the extent of saying that there is not. The case of Smout v. Ilbery (10 M. & W. 1), on which the counsel for the plaintiff relies, turned on the question whether a party holding himself out as agent was subsequently estopped from denying that he acted as such, and the judgment of the Court delivered by Alderson, B. contains many observations applicable to the law of principal and agent, but which are not intended to [illegible] to contracts like the present for the sale of [illegible] nor to affect the law relative thereto. In conclusion, it is conceived that the Court has only one alternative, either to support the ruling of the learned judge, which seems strictly in accordance with the great current of authorities, or to deny the necessity of averring the scienter in a declaration grounded on a false representation, and thereby to alter the practice which has uniformly obtained in pleading during six or seven hundred [illegible] has been during that period uni[illegible] as correct.

In adopting the former course, the Court will establish a principle consistent with justice and common sense, viz. that good faith is sufficient to protect the party making inadvertently an untrue representation, a principle, moreover, which can entail no real hardship on the person who sustains loss, inasmuch as he might have protected himself from such loss by requiring a warranty as to the quality of the goods purchased. In the absence of such warranty the Court will not afford its aid, unless fraud can be shewn on the part of the vendor.

Cowling, in reply.—The principle for which the plaintiff in error contends is expressly laid down by Dr. Story in the 2nd edition of his Treatise on Equity Jurisprudence, vol. 1, p. 166. After considering the subject of misrepresentation generally, he observes as follows:—"Whether the party thus misrepresenting a fact knew it to be false, or made the assertion without knowing whether it were true or false, is wholly immaterial, for the affirmation of what one does not know or believe to be true is equally, in morals and law, as unjustifiable as the affirmation of what is known to be positively false; and even if the party innocently misrepresents a fact by mistake, it is equally conclusive, for it operates as a surprise and imposition upon the other party." The rule here stated is laid down in similar terms in Roscoe on Evidence, by Smirke (366), and obtained in the civil law. The question resolves itself into this—What is fraud? is it not a legal fraud to mislead another, however innocently this may be done? It is submitted that the maxim of caveat emptor is not applicable when the purchaser of chattels has been thus misled and thrown off his guard, and has thereby incurred damage. It is conceded on the other side, that an action will lie if a person sciens, though with the best motives, says what is not true; why should it not also lie without proving or averring the scienter? In trespass, the party doing that which constitutes a legal trespass is liable, however innocent his intention; the intention, as in the case of an assault committed by mistake on the wrong party, goes only in aggravation of damages. It is by no means necessary to contend, in behalf of the plaintiff's right to recover, that every representation is equivalent to a warranty; it will only be so when made respecting a material fact, and when it must have an evident tendency to mislead the other party. Is not such a misrepresentation in legal language fraudulent? Many of the cases which have been cited on the other side are clearly distinguishable from the present. They proceed on the principle that the scienter must be averred when there is no dealing between the immediate parties to the contract, or those directly interested in the subject matter of the representation. To this class of cases belong Pasley v. Freeman (3 T. R. 51), Haycraft v. Creasy (2 East, 92), and others in which the facts were similar. In Selwyn, N. P. 10th edit. tit. Deceit, p. 637, several cases are cited, in which an action has been held maintainable in the nature of deceit, but where there was neither an express warranty of the goods sold, nor any false representation respecting them; in these cases, it is admitted that the scienter must be averred and proved, because the gist of the action is the implied warranty. But if the test of the party's knowledge were to be applied wherever there was an express affirmation at the time of sale, it would lead to much uncertainty. A forgetfulness of facts must be held equivalent to the absence of knowledge ab initio (Kelly v. Solari, 11 Law Journ. N. S. Exchequer, 10), and great difficulty would be experienced in applying such a principle to the facts which might present themselves. On looking at the facts of the case before the Court, it will be seen that an untrue representation was made, that a dealing was going on between the immediate parties, that there was a motive to mislead, and that the contract of sale was actually completed by the plaintiff whilst under a misconception caused by the defendants' statement. Do not these facts constitute a primâ facie case of legal fraud? The term moral fraud is too wide and too indefinite to admit of a correct application: it may be conceded that in the present case there was no moral fraud, but it is contended that there was a legal fraud; there was injuria coupled with damnum, and for this the plaintiff has a right of action. As to the argument that the contract of insurance, which is avoided by misrepresentation, differs from other contracts, the answer is, that it does so only in the degree of fides requisite to be observed. The numerous authorities which have been relied upon for the defendant will be found on examination inconclusive. Chandelor v. Lopus (Cro. Jac. 4), if it proves any thing, proves too much; besides, in that case the warranty was not made at the time of sale. [TINDAL, C. J.—How would you declare in such a case? Was not the affirmation very near a warranty?] In a similar case it is conceived that a jury would at the present day find it to be a warranty; the authority of the case just mentioned is not to be relied on. Budd v. Fairmaner (8 Bing. 48) only decides that a warranty must be complied with in every particular, whereas a representation must be true only as to material facts which would influence the purchaser in completing his bargain. (2 Wms. Saund. 6th ed. 200 c, note (c).) In Meyer v. Everth (4 Camp. 22), there was a contract in writing, and Lord Ellenborough does not say that the action for false representation would not lie without knowledge being proved. Freeman v. Baker (5 B. & Ad. 797) differs from the present case. There the inventory was in writing, and there was no ground for presuming fraud; on the contrary, the sale of the ship and stores was expressly stated to be "with all faults," so that the purchaser was on his guard; but here there was no such agreement nor proviso. Dobell v. Stevens (3 B. & C. 623), is quite consistent with the argument now submitted: that case, indeed, proves nothing either way; it only shews that if there be fraud the action will lie. In Springwell v. Allen (2 East, 448, note), there was neither a warranty nor a representation, and consequently the plaintiff was nonsuited at the trial. In Williamson v. Allison (2 East, 446), there was an express warranty, and therefore it was held that the scienter need not be charged nor proved. Neither are these cases in point where there is an implied contract, as in the sale of provisions. Medina v. Stoughton (Salk. 210), and Dale's case (Cro. Eliz. 44), differ from that now under consideration, because here the defendant knew, or had the means of knowing, the falsehood of the statement. In Parkinson v. Lee (2 East, 314), there was a warranty that the bulk of the hops sold answered the sample, and there was a latent defect both in the bulk and sample, and it was held, that the law would not raise an implied warranty that the commodity sold should be merchantable. In the present case there was no express warranty, and the bulk of the cotton did not correspond with the sample. In Dunlop v. Waugh (1 Peake, N. P. C.), the defendant spoke as to his belief only, and stated his means of information: that was not a case of false representation. The opinion of Lord Abinger, C. B. in Cornfoot v. Fowke, is expressly in the plaintiff's favour, and was adopted by the Court of Queen's Bench in Fuller v. Wilson; or at all events was referred to with approbation. The observations of Heath, J. and Gibbs, J. in Pickering v. Dowson (4 Taunt. 779), must be taken with reference to the facts then before the Court, and are not applicable in the present case. The recent decision of the House of Lords, in Railton v. Mathews (10 Clark & Fin. 934), is strongly in support of the plaintiff; it was there held that mere non-communication of circumstances affecting the situation of the parties, and material for the surety to be acquainted with, and within the knowledge of the person obtaining a surety bond, is undue concealment, though not wilful nor intentional, nor with a view to any private advantage. As to the difficulty which it has been suggested might arise in drawing the declaration grounded on a false representation, without alleging fraud, the answer is, that fraud would be alleged; and the real question is, as to the meaning of the word "fraud." So in very many cases the scienter would likewise be a material averment. The remaining recent decisions which have been insisted on for the defendant may be easily disposed of. Fuller v. Wilson, when brought before the Court of Error, went off on a different point from that which will have now to be decided. Evans v. Collins is within that class of cases of which Pasley v. Freeman is the leading authority; there was no dealing between the parties, and, consequently, no incentive to fraud and deceit in making the representation. So in Taylor v. Ashton the parties were entirely separate and unconnected with each other, and therefore fraud or some dishonest motive ought to have been shewn. On the whole, it is submitted that all, or nearly all, the cases which have been hitherto decided will be found distinguishable from the present; and that, whether considered as a question of law or morals, it is highly important for the interests of society and consistent with strict justice that the purchaser of goods should be protected, and should have a remedy when prejudiced by the false representations of the vendor. Such remedy can only be obtained in the present case by ordering a venire de novo.

The COURT at once gave judgment, without taking time to consider,

TINDAL, C.J. observing, We think the direction of the learned judge was perfectly correct. The action is brought for a false and fraudulent representation alleged to have been made by the defendant in the sale of certain cotton to the plaintiffs, that the cotton was of the same description, and of equal and like quality with the sample by them exhibited, whereas, in fact, it was not; the action not being brought upon an express warranty, nor any express allegation being made in the declaration that the defendant knew, at the time, that the bulk did not equal in description or quality the sample which had been so exhibited.

Upon the trial the learned judge directed the jury that unless they could infer that the defendants or their brokers were acquainted with the fraud that had been practised in the packing, or had been acting in the transaction against good faith or with some fraudulent purpose, the defendant was entitled to the verdict, and we consider this the proper direction. The rule which is to be derived from all the cases appears to us to be that where, upon the sale of goods, the purchaser is satisfied without requiring a warranty which is a matter for his own consideration, he cannot recover upon a mere representation of the quality by the seller unless he can shew that the representation was bottomed in fraud. If, indeed, the representation was false to the knowledge of the party making it, this would, in general, be conclusive evidence of fraud; but if the representation was honestly made and believed at the time to be true by the party making it, although not true in point of fact, we think this does not amount to fraud in law; but that the rule of caveat emptor applies, and the representation itself does not furnish a ground of action; and, although the cases may in appearance raise some difficulty as to the effect of a false assertion or representation of title in the seller, yet it will be found, on examination, that in each of those cases there was either an assertion of title embodied in the contract, or a representation of title, which was false, to the knowledge of the seller. The rule we have drawn from the cases appears to us to be supported so clearly by the early as well as the most recent decisions, that we think it unnecessary to bring them forward in recital, satisfying ourselves by saying that the exception must be disallowed, and the judgment of the Court of Exchequer affirmed.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Saturday, June 13.

Re WENHAM.

(Before Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.)

Where a party is described in his petition as a prisoner in the Queen's Prison, it is a sufficient description of his quality to satisfy the terms of the Act of Parliament.

Quære, if an insolvent is detained in custody under an attachment for costs, the Court has power, before the final order for protection is granted, to make an order for the insolvent to be discharged from custody.

Dowse, on behalf of the detaining creditor, objected that this was not such a description of the quality of the insolvent as is required by schedule A, No. 1, of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96. It is there directed that the name, address, and quality of the insolvent shall be inserted in the petition. If the insolvent was not in any business, he should have been described as a gentleman.

Sturgeon, for the insolvent.—The insolvent cannot properly be described as of any quality. The term gentleman would not be a proper description, as the insolvent was, when taken in execution, a stock-broker, but he could not properly be described as a stock-broker, because he did not carry on such business at the time of filing his petition.

His HONOUR thought the description sufficient, and granted the interim order.

A question now arose as to the power of the Court to discharge the insolvent from custody. An attachment for costs having been lodged against him at the prison previous to his being brought up to the Court this day for his interim order.

Dowse contended that the 23rd section, which gave the Court power where a prisoner is in custody at the time of filing his petition to discharge such insolvent from custody, only applied to cases where the prisoner was in custody under an execution. The 26th section provides that the final order, when granted, shall extend to all process issuing out of any court for any contempt for non-payment of money or of costs, and the 29th section provides that when a petitioner is detained under any process in respect of which he is protected by the final order, the Court may order him to be discharged. The legislature, therefore, clearly intended to make this distinction, that upon filing a petition a prisoner should be discharged out of custody as to all executions, but not as to any other process until his final order for protection was granted.

His HONOUR said, such had been the construction put upon the Act, which was not very clear in that respect; he should, therefore, make an order for the insolvent's discharge vale at quantum.

Re COLLIS.

Where an insolvent had inadvertently omitted to insert in his petition the amount he had paid to his attorney, as required by the form given in the Act, the Court will not on that ground dismiss his petition.

This insolvent was opposed on the ground that there was no statement in his petition of any sum having been paid by him to his attorney for the costs of the petition, as required by the form given in the Act of Parliament. The balance-sheet shewed that a sum had been paid, and it ought to have been so stated in the petition.

His HONOUR.—As the money paid to the attorney is set out in the schedule, it is evident that concealment was not intended. I shall not dismiss this petition. If I thought the insolvent had intended concealment I should have dismissed his petition.

Re HANNELL.

Where a party in insolvent circumstances assigns over his property for the benefit of his creditors, and some of them refuse to come in, he ought to come at once to this Court.

Where some of the creditors had signed a deed of composition, and received a dividend, and others refused to sign, this Court will not grant a final order until all the creditors are placed in a similar situation as to the dividend.

Where an insolvent defended an action brought against him, and at the trial one issue was found for the plaintiff, and a nolle prosequi entered as to the other issues, Held, not a vexatious defence.

Insolvent some time previous to presenting his petition, assigned over all his property to trustees for the benefit of creditors. A dividend had been paid to such of the creditors as had signed the deed.

Dowse, on behalf of a creditor who had refused to sign the deed, and had brought an action for his debt, opposed the final order on the ground of a vexatious defence to the action, and also of undue preference. Insolvent had defended the action. At the trial a verdict was given for the plaintiff on the first issue, and a nolle prosequi entered as to the remaining issues.

Lucas, for the insolvent.—This was not a vexatious defence. Plaintiff, by the course he took, admitted that he had brought his action for more than he could support. Insolvent was right in defending it. As to the undue preference, the insolvent is ready to pay the plaintiff the balance of the costs (after allowing the amount of the costs on the nolle prosequi) in full, and a dividend on the plaintiff's debt equal to that which the other creditors have received.

Dowse abandoned the vexatious defence, and agreed to the proposal for payment.

His HONOUR.—As all the creditors did not agree to come in under the composition deed, the insolvent ought to have come at once to this Court, where his estate would have been properly administered, instead of some of his creditors receiving a dividend and others nothing. I shall not grant the insolvent his final order until all the creditors are put in a similar position as to the dividend.

The money was then paid according to the proposition, and the final order granted.

Re LANE.

The mere fact of a party being insolvent is not sufficient evidence of his having contracted debts without reasonable assurance of being able to pay.

The insolvent was supported by Cooke. His debts were considerable. He had some trifling property, which had been given up, and his wife had a good income to which he would be entitled in the event of his surviving her. A fair proposal was made on behalf of the insolvent to his creditors, with the concurrence of his wife, for the liquidation of his debts.

Sturgeon, on behalf of several of the creditors, agreed to the terms of the proposal, and to withdraw their opposition. One creditor, who opposed by a separate attorney, refused to accede to the proposal, and the opposition on behalf of this creditor was gone into. It appeared that a small part of the debt was for goods, and the remainder on a renewed bill of exchange. The original bill had been accepted by the insolvent and discounted by the creditor so long as three years ago, and from time to time renewed. The amount due for goods had been tendered to the creditor. It was contended that the insolvent had contracted this debt without a reasonable assurance of being able to pay.

His HONOUR.—This is only the renewal, not the contracting of a fresh debt. The question is, does this come within the penal condition of the Act. There is nothing to shew that when this debt was contracted, three years ago, the insolvent had not reasonable assurance of being able to pay. It has been decided that the mere fact of a party being insolvent is not sufficient to bring him within the condition. If it were so, no insolvent could be discharged; and I do not see what would be the use of the Act, unless in the case of a sudden crash. This clause ought to be construed strictly. I do not think any case is made out against the insolvent. The final order must be adjourned from time to time, until the arrangement is carried out; the insolvent to have his protection in the mean time.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

SMALL DEBTS BILL.

MONDAY, JUNE 23.—Lord BROUGHAM moved the second reading of the Small Debts Bill.—The question was immediately put, and the Bill read a second time.—The noble and learned lord then moved that the 155th of the standing orders of the House be suspended in order that the Bill might be committed forthwith. The Bill (he said) had been sent down to the Commons, and returned from that house in consequence of an informality, which made it necessary, after a slight verbal alteration, to re-introduce the measure, and pass it through its several stages.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS BILL.

The LORD CHANCELLOR moved the committal of the Charitable Trusts Bill.—Lord CAMPBELL said there were certain parties affected by this Bill who were desirous of being heard by counsel at the bar.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said he intended merely to lay the amended Bill on the table, in order that it might be printed.—The Bill went through the committee, and was ordered to be printed as amended.—The LORD CHANCELLOR laid upon the table a Bill to amend the law of real property, which was read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THE LAW OF SETTLEMENT.

MONDAY, June 23.—In answer to a question from Mr. S. CRAWFORD, Sir J. GRAHAM said, that not only in that house, but in the country, there existed so great a contrariety of opinion respecting the law of settlement, that it was not his intention to press his proposed alterations in the present session. But, as he believed there was no great objection to the remaining and larger part of the Bill, which related to the law of removal and the mode of trying appeals, he hoped the House would agree to the second reading of the Bill, in order that a legislative remedy might be immediately applied to the existing state of the law upon these two points.

RAILWAY BILLS.

The following is the report from the Select Committee appointed to inquire into the state and progress of the several railway bills now before Parliament, and to consider and report their opinion as to what measures should be adopted by the House, in order to facilitate the re-introduction, and to prevent expense and delay in the progress through Parliament in the next session, of such railway bills as it may be found impossible to pass into laws from want of time for their proper investigation during the present session:—

Resolved,—That in order to prevent expense and delay in the progress through Parliament in the next session of such railway bills as it may be found impossible to pass into laws, from want of time for their proper investigation during the present session, it is desirable that a bill should be passed to prevent the proceedings on such bills being discontinued by a prorogation of Parliament.

Resolved,—That this privilege shall be extended to such bills only as shall have been reported to the House and ordered to be engrossed.

June 20, 1845.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE next week will call the magistracy of the country to the duties of the Quarter Sessions. We take the opportunity of again reminding them that they on whom devolves the discharge of the legal business of these sessions require, as a matter of justice, that notice of the places and times of holding them should be given in some central medium, where all who seek might find it, instead of limiting the announcement as now to the local newspapers. The example has been set by many counties and boroughs, as the columns of the LAW TIMES will prove, and why should it not be followed by the rest? In the cities and boroughs especially, where the times of holding the sessions vary, such a notice ought to be given universally, and if the proposition were properly submitted by our readers resident in such localities, it would, we doubt not, be readily adopted.

In Reg. v. Greenaway and Reg. v. Cary, judgment was delivered yesterday, and the Court decided that, under a subpœna duces tecum, issued from the Crown Office, parish officers are bound to appear with the rate-books before the removing magistrates, but they expressly declined to say whether they would be bound to give them in evidence when so produced.

REVIEW OF MAGISTRATES' CASES IN EASTER AND TRINITY TERMS, 1845.

UNLAWFUL POSSESSION OF WOOLLEN GOODS, STATUTE, CONVICTION. — Reg. v. Wilcock (5 Law. T. 170).—The 17th Geo. 3, c. 56, was enacted to give summary conviction of persons who had woollen materials unlawfully in their possession. This case decides that the conviction need not set out that the goods were found concealed in the house of the offender, or that they were found upon search made for them, no such limitation being imposed by the Act. The offence consists in the possession of goods suspected to be purloined, without being able to give a satisfactory account of them. A mistake has been made in the title of the 13 Geo. 3, which the 58 Geo. 3, c. 57, intends to repeal, under a reference to 17 Geo. 3; therefore, the penalties need not be specifically apportioned, as would have been the case if the 17 Geo. 3, c. 56, had been repealed. The other point decided by this case is, that where the justices who convict are different from those who receive the information, the conviction must be drawn up conformably to the facts under the 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, s. 2. Jones v. Gurdon (2 Q. B. 600) contains the law on this point.

QUO WARRANTO.—Reg. v. Hewdall (5 Law T. 90).—This case decided merely that where the facts relating to the election of a burgess are incorrectly stated in the affidavits, the Court will not entertain the application.

RATEABILITY OF BRIDGES.—Reg. v. Paynter (5 Law T 91).—Where the shareholders of a bridge are tenants in common, they are assessable, although the property may be vested in trustees, and any one may be rated, he being thrown upon his own resources to get contributions from the others. A mandamus went to compel the justices to issue a distress warrant, in the case of the Putney Bridge, upon Mr. Chacemore, one of the shareholders.

CHARGEABILITY, EVIDENCE OF.—Reg. v. Manchester (5 Law T. 172).—In this case, the pauper stated that she was residing in the workhouse in that town, and was now chargeable thereto. Although it was argued that this clearly did not shew relief, the Court held it did, and Coleridge, J. added, that the statement need not shew conclusive evidence. This decision effectually relaxes the rule as laid down in Reg. v. High Bickington (1 Bit. & Sym. M. C. 1).

In the case of Reg. v. Willatts (5 Law T. 172), it was held, that the statement that the pauper "had lately intruded and come into the said parish, and had become chargeable," was not sufficient.

CHARGEABILITY, EVIDENCE OF. — Reg. v. Great Bolton (5 Law T. 191).—This case very distinctly decides that it is not necessary to do more than state the fact that relief is given to the pauper to prove the fact of chargeability. The pauper here stated that she was "receiving relief from, and is actually chargeable to, the parish of ———." The case of Reg. v. High Bickington went no further, and the remark there made by Patteson, J. indicated what is now expressly ruled—that to say relief was given suffices.

SECOND ORDER OF REMOVAL.—Same case.—An order having been obtained and quashed, and a case granted, the removing parish may obtain a second order before the expiration of the six months within which the case granted on the first order might have been removed. In this case the Court was of opinion that it was competent to the party to whom a case had been granted to forego that benefit, and that as there had not been any attempt to pursue both remedies, the respondents must be taken to have abandoned the case on the first order altogether, which entitled them to proceed with the second. The Court, however, determined this case chiefly on the ground that the defect for which the order was quashed was one of form, and that it would not have precluded the respondents from removing again, even if the case had been decided against them. Whether it would have been permissible thus to give the go-by to a case granted on some point which might affect the merits, and so bar the respondents from a second removal to the same settlement (Reg. v. Charlbury Walcott, 13 Law. Jour. M. C. 19), is, to say the least of it, extremely doubtful. We incline to think that in such a case the Court would compel the respondents to stand or fall by their first order.

CHARGEABILITY, EVIDENCE OF PRESENT.—In Reg. v. Stockton-on-Tees (5 Law T. 194), the words "is residing and has become chargeable" were held sufficient evidence of present chargeability.

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.—Reg. v. East Rainton (5 Law T. 195).—Wherever a deed is produced before the removing justices, let a copy be sent to the receiving parish together with the examinations; for, to omit it is fatal to the order.

VARIANCE IN EXAMINATION.—Reg. v. Killerbey (5 Law T. 195).—Wherever the ground of appeal merely traverses a settlement in the words of the examination, it is not competent to the appellants to take objection thereunder to a variance of date, no date having been specifically named. In this case it appeared that the examinations set up a settlement by hiring and service with Thomas Booth, and service thereunder for two years, from November, 1819, to November, 1821, and a further settlement in the same parish by hiring and service with John Booth, the son of Thomas Booth, "after the expiration of the said service with Thomas Booth," &c. and service thereunder for a year. The examinations shewed that the pauper had married in March, 1822. One ground of appeal traversed the first settlement; another traversed the second settlement, stating that the pauper did not gain a settlement, &c. by hiring and service "after the expiration of the said service with Thomas Booth," &c. At the trial of the appeal, it appeared that the first service had been from 1817 to 1819, and the first settlement fell to the ground, and the Court held, that they had traversed the specific service, and not the specific year; and, indeed, could not do so by a traverse in the pauper's own words, because he did not give a date to the period of the second service, except by implication. If the appellants meant to rely on the variance, they should have pointed it out. This is an important decision, and certainly increases the nicety with which grounds must be drawn.

ESTATE SETTLEMENT.—Reg. v. Cuddington (5 Law T. 172).—Nothing is worse defined that what constitutes such an occupancy of a tenement by a pauper as amounts to adverse possession, and gives an estate settlement. We shall have occasion shortly to deduce some general rules from the decisions on this vexed question; in the present case it appeared that the pauper having originally built a house on waste land, had paid 2s. 6d. yearly to the lord. It was held, that this did not give a settlement, as the rent was an acknowledgment of tenancy.

SERVICE OF COPY OF ORDERS OF SESSIONS.—Reg. v. Mortlock (5 Law T. 140).—The order of a Court of Sessions is sufficiently served by a copy of it being sent to the party on whom the service is to be made; for the order is, in point of fact, nothing more than an entry in the minute book of the Sessions, which it would be impossible to serve. Where, moreover, the justices order the costs to be ascertained by the clerk of the peace, such costs, when ascertained, form part of the order itself.

ORDERS OF REMOVAL: SIGNATURES.—Reg. v. Worthingbury (5 Law T. 173).—Orders signed by justices with the initials of their Christian names, and their surnames only in full, are good; magistrates will do well to adhere to their usual signature. These objections are a great discredit to those who bring them, and are invariably condemned by the Court.

LEGITIMATE CHILD.—Reg. v. Tolley (5 Law T. 196).—The mere statement that A.B. is the child of C. D. is equivalent to saying that he is the legitimate child; for, says Lord DENMAN, C. J. "the law does not contemplate the relation of illegitimate children at all." Reg. v. Bakewell (5 Law T. 53) his lordship thought quite distinguishable, because the Sessions were the only judges of the facts; here they decided, subject to the objection.

HIGHWAY ACT: NOTICE OF APPEAL.—Reg. v. Derbyshire (5 Law T. 193).—On appeal against an order made by justices upon a surveyor of highways, it is essential that notice of the appeal be given within six days of the making of the order, whether the order has been served or not.

SUBSEQUENT SETTLEMENTS.—Reg. v. St Margaret's, Westminster (5 Law T. 195).—Wherever it appears there is a subsequent settlement to the one relied on, it vitiates an order based on the anterior one. These subsequent settlements must be traced out or not named. (See Rex v. Beverley, 1 B. & Ad. 201; Reg. v. Yelvertoft, 1 Bit. & Sym. M. C. 156; 1 Dav. & Mer. 310.)

JURISDICTION TO MAKE ORDERS.—Reg. v. Stockton-upon-Tees (5 Law T. 194).—Orders of removal must distinctly shew that the complaint of chargeability was made to justices acting within their jurisdiction.

BASTARDY ORDERS.—Reg. v. Justices of Lancashire (5 Law T. 202).—This was only a Bail Court decision. It is to the effect that the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, gives no discretion to the justices as to hearing the complaint of the mother of a bastard child; not even where an order may have been previously obtained by the guardians under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85; this startling decision, however, only goes to the length of compelling the justices to hear the case,—not to grant the order under such circumstances.

SIGNATURE BY GUARDIANS OF NOTICES OF CHARGEABILITY.—Reg. v. St. Mary, Lambeth, and Reg. v. St. Mary, Southampton (5 Law T. 215).—The Poor Law Act requires the notice to be sent "by the overseers or guardians of the parish obtaining such order," &c. In the former case, the parish constituted a union, and there it was of course held, that as the parish and the union were identical, the guardians of one were guardians of the other, and might sign qua guardians of the parish. But in the second case, where three parishes were united in one union, it was held they might not; the guardians of three parishes not being identical with the guardians of one.

EVIDENCE: LOST DOCUMENT.—Reg. v. Kenilworth (5 Law T. 215).—This case contained no point whatever. It was merely a question of whether sufficient search in the likeliest place to find it had been made for an indenture, to let in secondary evidence of it. The Court held there had, and rebuked the Sessions for sending such a case to them at all. It ought to be understood by justices that they are not justified in troubling the Court of Queen's Bench with these trivial matters, involving no point of law. They must decide themselves.

FORMAL DEFECTS IN BASTARDY ORDERS.—To say acting in a division, instead of for a division, is cured by the 8 Vict. c. 10 [the Lumley Act]. (Reg. v. the Justices of Westmoreland (5 Law T. 220.)

NOTICE; DAYS TO BE RECKONED.—Reg. v. Justices of Middlesex (5 Law T. 221).—Where an Act requires so many days' notice "at least" to be given of an appeal, they are to be clear days, exclusive of the days of the service and of the sessions.

PRACTICE OF SESSIONS.—Reg. v. Justices of Montgomeryshire (5 Law T. 220).—The Court of Quarter Sessions are the only judges of their own practice, and the Queen's Bench will not interfere with any of their rules unless they are contrary to reason. Where, therefore, by a rule of the Montgomery Sessions, it was ordered that twenty-eight days' notice should be given of an adjourned appeal, and the sessions refused to hear an appeal because such rule had not been complied with; Held, on motion for a mandamus, that the rule was not so unreasonable as to induce the Court to interfere. Here we must conclude for the present our review of the many magistrates' cases which have poured in upon the two last Terms; some stragglers we reserve for early notice: the material decisions have been given. We cannot conclude this notice without again advising parish officers and country practitioners to make themselves familiar with the working and principles of the law as it is, and not to rest in delusive expectations of a change which is entirely in nubibus. The cases above noticed exhibit a degree of ignorance and incompetency on the subject which it is strange should still exist, after so much has been done, ruled, and written to make known at least the elements of parish law. So, however, it is; and to judge from the length of the last Crown paper, it seems that litigation is fattening upon growing blunders and increasing conflict. J. C. S.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In your "Review of Magistrates' Cases" in the LAW TIMES of last week, under the head of "Secondary Evidence," you observe, "that you are quite at a loss to understand the decision in Reg. v. Orton, as the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 70, expressly enables justices to summon witnesses to appear and give evidence." As I think you appear to be under some misapprehension on this point, perhaps you will be kind enough to permit me to make a remark or two upon the subject. The case of Reg. v. Orton appears to me to have been rightly decided, as it has only decided that secondary evidence of a rate-book cannot be admitted by justices in petty sessions, where an overseer is summoned by a justice of the peace to appear in petty sessions and produce such rate-book. I do not know of any power possessed by justices to summon any party to produce any thing whatever; and indeed the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 70, confers upon them no such power; it only gives justices power to summon parties "to appear and give evidence;" and farther, it only gives them power to summon parties to appear and give evidence "in any proceedings to be had before justices in petty or special sessions, or out of sessions, under the provisions of the said Act, or of any of the Acts required to be construed as one Act therewith." Now the Act required to be construed with it as one Act is the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 57, and this latter Act requires to be construed with it as one Act, the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, and some subsequent Acts, but no prior ones; and as the power of justices to grant orders of removal, and consequently to take examinations, is not conferred by the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, or any subsequent Act, I contend that the power in 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 70, does not at all authorize justices to summon parties to appear and give evidence in petty sessions in cases of applications for orders of removal, much less to summon parties to appear and produce any thing. The power referred to by Lord Denman must be a subpœna duces tecum, which can be had at the Crown Office of the Court of Queen's Bench.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.
THOMAS A. DAVIDSON.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne, June 24, 1845.

REMOVAL OF PAUPERS.—It appears, by a Parliamentary return of the sums paid by counties, boroughs, towns corporate, &c. for the removal of poor persons born in Scotland and Ireland, and charged to parishes in England, under the provisions of the Act 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 40, for three years ending with 1844, that the county of Middlesex paid, in 1842, 2,619l. 9s. [illegible]d.; in 1843, [illegible],119l. 13s. 2d.; in 1844, 2,861l. 14s. 9d. Surrey paid in the same years respectively, 238l. 16s. [illegible]d., 319l. 4s. 10d., 344l. [illegible]s. The county of Lancaster paid 1,308l. 9s. 1d., 1,169l. 14s. [illegible]d., [illegible]l. 9s. [illegible]d. But accounts relative to Lancashire were not made up later than Midsummer 1844.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE crowd of judgments that occupy our columns this week compels the exclusion of almost all other intelligence. Many more are already given, and a further array is promised, so that for some time to come this novel feature of the LAW TIMES will carry to the Profession some months before they can procure them elsewhere, the very words of the Judges in their written decisions upon all the important questions they had reserved for mature deliberation. Whether the length and number of these will compel more double numbers we cannot say, but we shall of course avoid them, if possible, as each is attended with a loss to us of nearly 20l. But rather than that our readers shall not be put in possession of these written judgments at the earliest possible moment, the sacrifice shall be made.

THE CIRCUITS COMMISSION.—REPORT.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

Your Majesty having been pleased to issue a commission under the great seal, dated the 14th of February, 1845, directed to Sir James Parke, knight, one of the barons of your Majesty's Exchequer; Sir Edward Hall Alderson, knight, one other of the said barons; Sir John Taylor Coleridge, knight, one of the justices of your Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench; the Hon. James Stuart Wortley; Fitzroy Kelly, and William Whateley, and John Greenwood, esqrs. and Sir William Heathcote, bart.; and Edmund Denison and Thomas Grimstone Bucknall Estcourt, esqrs.; whereby, after reciting that it had been humbly represented unto your Majesty that the circuits of the judges in England and Wales are very unequal, as well in extent as with respect to the number of causes tried upon such circuits respectively, and that the intervals between the period of holding the same in each year are also very unequal; and that it had been considered that some alteration in these particulars might be conducive to the public good, your Majesty was graciously pleased to appoint the said several persons, or any five or more of them, to be your Majesty's commissioners for inquiring and considering whether it would be expedient, with a view to the more convenient and better administration of justice, that any and what alterations should be made in the division of England and Wales into circuits for judicial business, and in the periods for holding such circuits, and whether it would be necessary or proper that any change should be made in the law Terms for the purpose of such alterations, and also for considering in what manner such alterations may be best effected.

We, the commissioners, whose hands and seals are hereunto set, have carefully examined into the questions referred to us, and humbly report to your Majesty the result of our inquiries.

We first proceeded to consider whether the inconveniences arising from the unequal division of the year into two circuits are such as to require a change, and how such change may best be effected. At present the interval between the summer and spring circuits is nearly eight months, whilst that between the spring and summer circuits does not exceed four; and the former interval includes the whole winter, with its long nights, and its increased suffering amongst the poorer classes. It cannot, therefore, be wondered at, if, from the longer interval alone at the spring circuit, the civil business should more than equal, and still less if, from the combined effort of both causes, the criminal business should very greatly exceed, that of the summer circuit; and thus the burden upon the jurymen at the two assizes is disproportioned, and the prisoners committed soon after the summer assizes are necessarily imprisoned for a much longer period than those committed after the Lent assizes.

This has led to the special commissions for delivering the gaols, issued for the last two years, under which sittings have been held in the larger counties in the months of December and January. These have supplied a remedy for the particular evils against which they were directed, but are themselves liable to the most serious objections. The sittings have been held to the great inconvenience and expense of jurors, sheriffs, and others, whose duties require their attendance at the assizes, and who were called from their homes once oftener in the year than heretofore. They have been unattended by the same full bar which the union of criminal and civil business attracts to the ordinary assizes, which is not only an important benefit to the accused, but a great security for the due administration of justice; and they have been presided over by a single judge, a course by no means so satisfactory as where two judges travel the same circuit and have the opportunity for mutual advice and assistance.

It appears to us that the necessity for a third circuit for criminal cases, with its attending advantages, may be obviated, and the benefit of a more speedy trial of offenders obtained, by a permanent arrangement, whereby the circuits may occur at equal intervals of time, and the business be equally distributed between the winter and summer assizes.

And this can only be done by an alteration in the time of holding the spring circuit; for to alter the summer circuit, and to fix it during the months of September and October, would, we are convinced, be inexpedient. It would take from the bar and the judges, and indeed the whole legal Profession, that wholesome vacation which alone, by its annual recurrence, brings them back with minds refreshed by leisure and varied study to their important duties, and it would be to devote a period of the year to the assizes at which the gentlemen and farmers of the country, who in general have to act as jurymen, are otherwise much engaged.

In order, therefore, to divide the year equally, the spring assizes must begin early in January; we think about the 11th January would be found most convenient, as being immediately after the Christmas quarter sessions, when the gaols will have been delivered of the smaller offences by the local magistracy.

In order to accomplish this, Hilary Term must be changed; and we at one time supposed that the postponement of Hilary Term till the beginning of March would be the best arrangement. But we have thought, on fuller consideration, that it is desirable to have two terms following each circuit, in order that there may be an opportunity of hearing and of disposing of the motions for new trials arising therefrom, and of enabling the parties, where new trials are granted, to proceed to try their causes at the following assizes, as at present is or ought to be the case.

We therefore have come to the conclusion, that it will be on the whole more expedient to provide that in the interval before Christmas there should be two terms, and that, as now between Easter and Trinity Terms, there should be only a short vacation between them.

We propose, then, to leave Michaelmas Term untouched, to make a vacation of a week between it and a new term, still to be called Hilary Term, which should end on the 23rd of December, and to leave Easter and Trinity Terms, and the vacations after each, untouched. The legal year would then stand thus:—November the 2nd to November the 25th, Michaelmas Term; November the 25th to the 2nd of December, vacation; the 2nd of December to the 23rd of December, Hilary Term; December the 23rd to April the 15th, vacation; and the rest of the year as at present. The vacation between Hilary and Easter Terms would suffice for the assizes and sittings; and the deficiency of three weeks lost to the sittings by the short vacation between Michaelmas and Hilary Terms may then be supplied at the discretion of the respective chief judges of each court. We would limit that discretion only by forbidding sittings after the 11th of January, and before the 1st of March. In order to accomplish this object, the aid of the Legislature will be required.

If this plan be adopted, we would suggest further, that the Secretary of State for the Home Department should recommend the justices of the peace, in their respective counties, to make some permanent arrangements for the more completely lighting the courts of justice, both as to the parts occupied by the spectators, and those devoted to the transaction of business, so that order may be more easily preserved. This we mention because the assizes will, under this proposed

It may be as well also to observe, that unless your Majesty shall be pleased to make some alteration in the time for the next appointment of sheriffs, the existing officers will, in many cases, be obliged to serve at three assizes.

We have next proceeded to inquire whether the present inequality of the circuits requires to be corrected, and the circuits more conveniently arranged for the despatch of business by the fifteen judges, and in what way this can best be effected.

The length of time occupied on the respective circuits, which are travelled by two judges each, is at present nearly as follows:—On the Norfolk circuit rather more than three weeks; on the home and the Midland, each, rather more than a month; on the Oxford and western circuits, each, about six weeks; the northern circuit, about eight weeks, and this allowing only a fortnight for York, for which, however, three weeks ought to be allowed, in order to avoid the danger of remanets, and to insure the disposal of the criminal business there by the judges alone, without the aid of other commissioners.

The number of causes forms the best criterion of the weight of business on each circuit; that of the prisoners is less accurate, for on all the circuits, except the northern, persons charged with small offences are generally committed for trial at the assizes, if they occur before the quarter sessions. On the northern the great offences only, for the most part, are sent to the assizes, which circumstance diminishes the apparent relative quantity of criminal business on that circuit, as stated in the official returns. Assuming, therefore, the number of causes as the proper criterion, and taking an average of the last ten years, we find the business of the northern circuit to be five times as great as the Norfolk or Welsh circuits, nearly three times as great as the Midland, more than twice as great as the Oxford or western, and nearly twice as great as the home circuit. We all agree that though some inequality on the circuits is desirable, both for the judges and the bar, yet that which now exists in this instance is too great; and the only question is, how best it can be remedied.

We are satisfied that the business of the chambers in London during the circuits is fully sufficient to occupy the undivided attention of the fifteenth judge, who must remain in town, and that his labours certainly equal, and probably exceed, those of any judge travelling the circuit.

It follows, therefore, that only fourteen judges can be spared for the circuits. On this supposition we have succeeded; and here a difference of opinion has arisen amongst the members of the commission.

All are agreed that the northern circuit is at present inconveniently long, and that the business of some of the smaller circuits might, without improperly pressing on the judges, be increased, and the northern circuit divided; but the only effective division which is practicable with the present number of judges would clearly involve the annexation either of Yorkshire or Lancashire, or of some part of one of those counties, to the duty of two judges other than those travelling the northern circuit.

Under these circumstances, three of our body, Mr. Baron Parke, Mr. Justice Coleridge, and Mr. Beckett Denison, are of opinion that the convenience of the country requires that some one of these divisions should be adopted; whilst, on the other hand, six of our body, viz. Mr. Baron Alderson, Mr. Fitzroy Kelly, Mr. Stuart Wortley, Mr. Whateley, Mr. Greenwood, and Mr. Estcourt, think that no such change should, for the present at least, be adopted. With the exception of Mr. Baron Alderson, they are of opinion that no efficient and permanent alteration can be made without increasing the present number of judges; and he concurs with them in thinking, that as the changes already suggested in the Terms, and the time of holding the spring assizes, will allow sufficient space for the despatch of the business of the northern circuit, as at present constituted, before the Easter Term, though probably not before the commencement of the sittings, the practical effect of the changes agreed by all to be recommended should be tried before any other be made.

Upon the supposition, however, that your Majesty may possibly think it proper to act upon the former opinion, we have proceeded to inquire which of the suggested divisions would be preferable, and in what manner it should be effected. And here we have all agreed, with the exception of Mr. Stuart Wortley, who forbears to give any such contingent opinion, that to separate Yorkshire from the rest of the northern districts would be the most convenient arrangement. We do not, however, propose to annex Yorkshire to any other circuit, but to form it, as it were, into a new circuit of itself. The question then arises, by whom as judges are the duties of this new circuit to be performed; and we think that the additional labour will most conveniently be imposed on those whose present duties are the lightest, viz. the judges travelling the Norfolk circuit, and that both their convenience and that of the bar of the northern circuit concur in the arrangement, that it should be travelled, in addition to their own circuit, by these judges after their ordinary labours shall have terminated. The usual duration of the Norfolk circuit needs not much to exceed three weeks, and this additional duty would probably double it. This would only make a six weeks' circuit, and we think that, in comparison with several of the other circuits, this would not be found to be inconveniently long. Probably the learned judges would think it advisable to begin the Norfolk circuit in Norfolk and Suffolk, and end it in Buckinghamshire. By so doing they would at the end of their first circuit, be within a few hours' distance from York, the scene of their additional labours; much nearer in point of time, and not further in point of distance, than the judge travelling the South Wales circuit is, at the end of that circuit, from his duties at Chester.

We have no doubt that an efficient bar from the northern and Norfolk circuits would attend the new circuit; and we recommend that the learned judges who travel the northern circuit should make Liverpool the last place, and that the commission days for York and Liverpool should, for the present at least, be on the same day.

This plan, it will be seen, provides for the reduction of the northern circuit, without disturbing any other circuit, or rendering it necessary to provide any new arrangement of clerks of assize; and if at any future time the number of the judges should be increased, and more general changes introduced, the additional labour now proposed to be thrown upon the judges travelling the Norfolk circuit may, without inconvenience, be withdrawn.

One trifling alteration would be necessary, if this plan should be adopted, in the appointment of the revising barristers; it would be proper, by the aid of Parliament, to assign a definite number of them to Yorkshire, subtracting it from the number now assigned to the northern circuit and to give the appointment to the senior judge in the commission for Yorkshire.

We humbly take leave further to state to your Majesty our opinion, that whether a change shall be made in the northern circuit or not, we think we are not called on to recommend a change in the arrangement of any other circuit. It certainly appears very desirable in itself that the Welsh circuit should be remodelled, so that the assizes may be held before two judges, the number of assize towns being diminished, the disadvantage of a circuit being travelled by a single judge being serious and sensibly felt; but this cannot be accomplished without a considerable expense in the erection of new courts, the enlargement of gaols, and the preparation of additional lodgings for the judges; and unless it should be thought proper to provide for these in the first instance, at the general expense of the whole kingdom, they will throw a heavy burden on the counties in the principality. We know that the and other obstacles prevented the plan recommended by the Commissioners for the Amendment of the Law, appointed by his late Majesty King George IV. in 1828, from taking place, and we have therefore abstained from entering into an inquiry with respect to any change in the Welsh circuit. We have also abstained from offering any opinion upon several other changes suggested to us on the part of the inhabitants of Bristol and other places; such as the propriety of holding two assizes within the year, instead of one at Bristol; of holding assizes at other places than those at which they are now held in various counties, and of limiting the assize held at Coventry to the city of Coventry alone. We do not undervalue the importance of some of these, nor look upon them unfavourably; but they appear to us not to fall within the scope of our commission.

All which we humbly submit.

NEW RULE OF THE COMMON LAW COURTS.

Judges' Orders for Signing Judgment.

By order of Mr. Baron Parke, Mr. Justice Wightman, and Mr. Justice Erle.

"We have considered the means best calculated to prevent parties from fraudulently obtaining judge's orders for signing judgment, and recommend that the following precautions be adopted:—

That all written consents upon which such orders are obtained shall be preserved in the chambers of the respective courts.

That in actions where the defendant has appeared by attorney, no such order be made unless the consent of the defendant be given by his attorney or agent.

That where the defendant has not appeared, or has appeared in person, no such order be made, unless the defendant attends the judge and gives his consent in person, or unless his written consent be attested by an attorney acting on his behalf; but we think that these precautions are unnecessary where the defendant is a barrister, conveyancer, special pleader, or attorney."

"We think that Sunday ought to be counted as one of the four days between the delivery of paper books and the day of argument, except it is the last, when it is to be omitted according to the general rule."

GENERAL ORDERS AND RULES OF THE HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY.

Pro confesso—Hearing—Decree.

XC. In cases where a decree is not absolute under Order LXXXIII. the Court may order the same to be made absolute on the motion of the plaintiff, made,

1. After the expiration of three weeks from the service of a copy of the decree on the defendant, where the decree has been served within the jurisdiction.
2. After the expiration of the time limited by the notice provided for by Order LXXXVI. where the decree has been served without the jurisdiction.
3. After the expiration of three years from the date of the decree, where a defendant has not been served with a copy thereof.

And such order may be made either on the first hearing of such motion, or on the expiration of any further time which the Court may on the hearing of such motion allow to the defendant for presenting a petition for leave to answer the bill.

XCI. Where the decree is not absolute under Order LXXXIII. and has not been made absolute under Order XC. and a defendant has a case upon merits not appearing in the bill, he may apply to the Court by petition stating such case, and submitting to such terms with respect to costs and otherwise as the Court may think reasonable, for leave to answer the bill; and the Court, being satisfied that such case is proper to be submitted to the judgment of the Court, may, if it thinks fit, and upon such terms as seem just, vacate the inrolment (if any) of the decree, and permit such defendant to answer the bill; and if permission be given to such defendant to answer the bill, leave may be given to file a separate replication to such answer, and issue may be joined, and witnesses examined, and such proceedings had as if the decree had not been made, and no proceedings against such defendant had been had in the cause.

XCII. The rights and liabilities of any plaintiff or defendant under a decree made upon a bill taken pro confesso extend to the representatives of any deceased plaintiff or defendant, and to any persons or person claiming under any person who was plaintiff or defendant at the time when the decree was pronounced; and with reference to the altered state of parties and any new interests acquired, the Court may, upon motion or petition served in such manner and supported by such evidence as under the circumstances of the case the Court deems sufficient, permit any party or the representative of any party, to file such bill or bills, or adopt such proceedings as the nature and circumstances of the case require, for the purpose of having the decree (if absolute) duly executed, or for the purpose of having the matter of the decree (if not absolute) duly considered, and the rights of the parties duly ascertained and determined.

Joining Issue.

XCIII. No subpœna to rejoin is hereafter to be issued; and only one replication is to be filed in each cause, unless the Court otherwise orders; and the replication is to be in the form set forth at the foot of this Order, or as near thereto as circumstances admit and require; and upon the filing of such replication the cause is to be deemed to be completely at issue; and each defendant may, without any rule or order, proceed to examine his witnesses, and the plaintiff may in like manner proceed to examine his witnesses so soon as notice of the replication being filed has been duly served on all the defendants who have filed an answer or plea, or against whom a traversing note has been filed.

Form of Replication.

"Between A. B. - - - Plaintiff.
"and
"C. D., E. F., G. H., &c. - Defendants.

"The plaintiff in this cause hereby joins issue with the defendant C. D." [all the defendants who have answered or pleaded, or against whom a traversing note has been filed], "and will hear the cause on bill and answer against the defendant E. F." [all the defendants against whom the cause is to be heard on bill and answer], "and on the order to take the bill as confessed against the defendant G. H." [as the case may be].

Commission to examine witnesses.

XCIV. Commissions to examine witnesses within the jurisdiction of the Court are to be directed to two commissioners only, and, unless the Court otherwise orders, are to be made returnable without delay; and the commissioners are to be either barristers or solicitors not concerned in the cause, and each one of such two commissioners is to have all such power and authority to examine witnesses as have heretofore been vested in the acting commissioners named in the commissions to examine witnesses which have heretofore been issued; but the commissioner first named in the commissions to be hereafter issued is alone to act in the execution of any commission, unless he is, by illness or other sufficient cause, incapacitated from acting therein, in which case the commissioner secondly named is alone to act in the execution of such commission.

XCV. Immediately after the replication is filed, the plaintiff, if he thinks fit, may give notice to all other parties entitled to examine witnesses in the cause of his intention to sue out a commission for that purpose; and the plaintiff, if he gives such notice within two days after the filing of the replication, or before any defendant has given notice of his intention to sue out a commission, is to have the carriage of the commission.

XCVI. After the expiration of two days from the filing of the replication, if the plaintiff has not previously given notice to all other parties entitled to examine witnesses in the cause of his intention to sue out a commission for that purpose, any defendant may give notice to all the other parties entitled to examine witnesses in the same cause of such defendant's intention to sue out a commission for that purpose; and any defendant so giving such notice is to have the carriage of the commission, unless such notice be given by more than one defendant, in which case the defendant who first gave such notice is to have the carriage of the commission.

XCVII. Where the parties entitled to examine witnesses in the cause agree to the nomination of persons to be commissioners, and to the order in which such commissioners are to be named, the record and writ clerk, upon being applied to for the purpose, is to cause a commission directed to such persons to be sealed and delivered to the person entitled to have the carriage thereof.

XCVIII. If all the parties entitled to examine witnesses in the cause have not, within four days after the filing of the replication, agreed to the nomination of persons to be commissioners, any party entitled to examine witnesses in the cause may apply to the Master to whom any former reference in the cause has been made, or to the Master in rotation in case no former reference has been made, for a warrant returnable in two days requiring the other parties to attend for the purpose of having commissioners named, and such Master is to grant such warrant; and the same being duly served, all parties, on the return thereof, are to propose commissioners; and if among the persons so proposed there are two or more to whom no just objection is made, the Master is to select or nominate and certify to be commissioners such two of the proposed persons as appear to him most proper to perform the duty; but if it appears that no one or only one of such proposed persons is free from just objection, the Master, as the case may be, is to nominate and certify two proper persons, or to nominate one proper person and certify him and the person free from objection to be the commissioners.

XCIX. If any question arises as to the commissioner who is to be first named, or as to the party who is to have the carriage of the commission, the Master is to determine such question, and to name the party who is to have the carriage of the commission.

C. If any party entitled to examine witnesses in a cause shall desire to have any additional commission or commissions, application is to be made to the Master for leave to sue out such additional commission or commissions; and upon the Master's certificate that such additional commission or commissions is or are proper to be issued the same may be sued out in the same manner as a first or only commission; and in case the parties do not agree, any question respecting the commissioners to be named or the order in which they are to be named in the commission, or any question respecting the carriage of any such additional commission, is to be settled by the Master as in the case of a first or only commission.

CI. The Master is to deliver his certificate of the nomination of the commissioners to the solicitor of the party who is to have the carriage of the commission; and such solicitor is on the same day, or at the latest on the day next following the date of the Master's certificate, to file the same, and is, within two days from the date thereof, to take an office copy thereof to the record and writ clerk, who is, on the same day, or at the latest on the day next following his receipt of such office copy, to seal a commission directed to the persons named in the certificate, and to deliver such commission to the solicitor from whom he received the certificate; and such solicitor having received the commission is, within one week after the teste thereof, to deliver the same to the commissioner therein first-named, if he be at the time able to act in the execution of the commission, but if not, then to the commissioner secondly named.

CII. If any solicitor having the carriage of a commission does not, within six days after the date of the Master's certificate, obtain the commission, and duly deliver the same to the commissioner by whom the same is to be executed, any other party entitled to examine witnesses may apply to the Master for leave to take out a new commission directed to the same commissioners, and to have the carriage of such commission; and the costs of such application are to be paid by the party in default, whether the application succeeds or not.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

BIRMINGHAM DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

Thursday, June 12.

(Before Mr. Commissioner DANIEL.)

Re CHARLES STANLEY, of Newport, Shropshire, Solicitor.

This was the first examination. The insolvent was supported by Smith, and opposed by Motteram (who was instructed by Messrs. Price, Denkin, and Dent, solicitors, Wolverhampton), on behalf of the executors of Mrs. Thomas, deceased, and by T. S. James, on behalf of other creditors.

The insolvent, on his examination, admitted that he had advised the executors to sell out a portion of Three per Cent. Stock left by Mrs. Thomas, for the purpose of paying legacy-duty under her will, amounting to 22*l.* 9s. and to Mr. Norris, one of the executors, 40*l.* which he had advanced out of his own money, in 1840, to pay Mr. Stanley's bill for proving the will. The insolvent further admitted that he sold out 100*l.* of the stock, which realized 98*l.* 15s. in May, 1844, through the medium of his agent, Mr. Holmes, of London, and that out of the produce he had paid Mr. Norris 30*l.* 5s.; that the legacy duty was to have been paid in May, 1844, with a portion of the balance, and that the remainder, subject to the insolvent's charges in respect to the sale of stock, should have then been handed over to the executors. The insolvent admitted also that he never paid the legacy-duty, or any further sum to the executors, notwithstanding that the stamp-office threatened the latter with process for non-payment of duty, and notwithstanding urgent application by the executors to the insolvent, and personal solicitation by one of them, Mr. Norris, who (as stated by Motteram) walked from Birmingham to Newport and back (a distance of sixty miles) three times during 1844, to endeavour to bring the insolvent to a settlement. Sixteen letters from the insolvent to Mr. Norris were produced; they contained frivolous reasons for the delay, and positive promises to pay the duty and settle the matter. The insolvent further admitted, that when Messrs. Price and Co. in March, 1845, had obtained, on behalf of the executors, an order by the Master of the Rolls for the insolvent to deliver his bill, &c. within a limited time, he had failed to do so, but subsequently delivered a bill for selling out the stock and preparing residuary accounts, which he had never passed, amounting to 6*l.* 1s. 6d. which was taxed by one of the Masters of the Court of Chancery, and reduced to 11*l.* 2s. 9d.; that he (the insolvent) was subsequently ordered to pay to the executors the balance, 66*l.* 17s. 6d. found due from him, the order being made on the Saturday before he had filed his present petition. The insolvent also admitted that the executors might have been put to about 30*l.* expense in obtaining the order.

Motteram said the expenses were in reality about 38*l.*

The insolvent also stated that he was a bankrupt in September, 1842, and that no dividend had been paid to his creditors.

James was about to examine the insolvent on behalf of his clients, when

Smith said, that after what had taken place he did not think he should be justified in taking up the time of the Court, but would consent to the dismissal of the insolvent's petition, as he was aware that, in addition to what had been brought before the Court, the insolvent had become surety for Mr. Garbett, solicitor, Wellington, Salop, without the means of fulfilling his engagements.

His HONOUR told Mr. Smith that he had exercised a sound discretion, as it was clear that the insolvent had committed a breach of trust, and after animadverting in very severe terms upon the conduct of the insolvent, as proved by the facts elicited in the examination. Petition dismissed.

The annual dinner of the members of the United Law Debating Society took place on Tuesday last at the Trafalgar Hotel, Greenwich. Alfred Fry, esq. in the chair. A peculiar interest attached to the occasion from the presentation to the secretary, Charles H. Grove, esq. of an elegant clock which had been purchased for him by a general subscription among the members. After the usual toasts had been disposed of, the chairman, in the name of the society, presented the clock to the secretary as an enduring testimonial to him of the sense entertained by his fellow-members of his valuable services for the last five years, in which he has uninterruptedly and most efficiently discharged the duties of his office, necessarily so important to the interests of such a society. Mr. Grove expressed his pleasure in finding that his discharge of his duties had given satisfaction to his learned friends, and thanked them for the handsome memorial which they had given him of their regard. The company separated, after the enjoyment of a very pleasant evening.

POOR LAW COMMISSION.—From a bulky return just published, it appears that Mr. Commissioner Nicholls attended at his office 276 days in 1843, and 260 days in 1844; that Mr. G. C. Lewis attended 242 days in 1843, and 241 days in 1844; and that Sir E. Head attended 276 days in 1843, and 273 days in 1844.

We have been favoured with the sight of a private letter received this morning from Jersey, which states that C. C. Wilson, esq. was unconditionally released from prison on Wednesday last, after a consultation by the states. He was met and escorted from prison by a large multitude, who hailed him with enthusiastic plaudits.—Globe.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SMALL DEBTS BILL.

SIR,—Your able analysis in the LAW TIMES of Saturday last of Lord Brougham's Amended Act for the Recovery of Debts under 20*l.* has made it an easy task to give my opinion thereon. I perfectly coincide with your views on the subject. The 2nd clause, giving forty days as the maximum term of imprisonment, I think unsatisfactory, seeing that the 1st & 2nd Vic. cap. 110, gives the Insolvent Debtors Court the power to imprison for individual offences for one, two, and three years, and which has been found to act with good effect.

The 4th clause is open to great objections. The Bankruptcy Court will be constantly crowded with the lowest set; consisting of discharged attorneys' clerks, now become accountants, who will seek professional business under this clause by advertisment, &c.; also a set of men known as agents (but practising under the name of some attorney), who have infested the Insolvent Debtors Court in Portugal-street for years, and whom the commissioners have in vain attempted to remove. And here I may mention that when the (Insolvent) Court was first established, the law recognized agents for the purpose of conducting the business of debtors to save expence, but it was soon discovered that these men being irresponsible (they not being attorneys), the most infamous practices sprang up, and every description of fraud prevailed. The legislature was at length appealed to, and a statute passed prohibiting such persons from being in any way connected with the conduct of insolvent cases, and that attorneys alone should be suffered to practise in the Court. It may, therefore, be easily imagined to what a condition the Court of Bankruptcy will be brought, as it will most surely be made the arena for every description of extortion, fraud, perjury, and subornation of perjury, most injurious to the unfortunate debtor, and disastrous to his estate, by the admission of men to conduct its business, who, having no responsibility, can have no fear of consequences. There appears to be a most important clause wanting to meet an evil of daily occurrence, namely, on the sheriff making a levy the landlord ought to make something more than a mere claim of rent due; what objection can there be to his making an affidavit of such fact? This unobjectionable preliminary would afford a check against that collusion that frequently exists between landlord and tenant, to the prejudice of an execution creditor. Should you think these remarks of any utility, and you have space in your columns for their insertion, further suggestions of more value may be produced from others. I am, Sir, yours, &c.,

W. R. Buchanan.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

X. offers the following suggestions on the Small Debts Bill:—

Perhaps some of the hints herein may be new, and expecting this I forward them.

Summons may be obtained from the commissioner of bankrupts for the district "or from any Court of Requests, Court of Commissioners, or other court for the recovery of small debts, having a chairman or other presiding officer who shall be either a barrister-at-law, or attorney, or solicitor."

1st. Supposing there is a Court of Requests more immediate than the district court (which may be ninety-nine miles distant), and the creditor prefers the investigation to be conducted in the latter court, and summons his debtor accordingly, would the debtor be liable to attachment for non-attendance; and would poverty or inability to pay the expenses of the journey be a sufficient excuse?

2nd. There are several charter or borough courts where debts to any amount are recoverable;—would these answer the description of "other court for the recovery of small debts?"

3rd. In some courts the "attorney or solicitor," being the "presiding officer," having power to commit, may be—and in one instance, known to the writer, is—a brother attorney of the town in which the court is—a solicitor in full practice: a moment's reflection will be enough to perceive the injurious consequences which may proceed from this.

"And the debtor being called before such commissioner or court, at the time to be named in such summons, shall be examined by the said commissioner or court, and shall be interrogated before such commissioner or court by the creditor summoning him."

1st. Here is an obligation ("shall") not a power imposed on the "commissioner or court" and the creditor to examine and interrogate. This, of course, will exclude all other persons (attorneys, &c.) from examination and interrogation. Sec. 4, however, which contemplates the existence of this power, is a waste of type; it need not have been inserted.

1st. There is no power to summon any other person besides the debtor. Does the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, affect this? How often is there a conspiracy between the debtor and others (bills of sale)! A summons for other persons would be useful; as also in cases of wages, how are they to be ascertained but from the master, manager, &c.?

2nd. Some places, although within the "district," are ninety-nine miles distant from Basinghall-street. If creditor summons debtor, what expense to creditor! and if the debtor cannot afford that, may be a sufficient excuse for his non-attendance, he may be referred to the Court of Requests, &c. Ask the Profession what is thought of them.

3rd. If property of debtor should be afterwards discovered, or evidence of fraud or perjury, &c. creditor should be able to go to court for redress, and to proceed against debtor, notwithstanding previous proceedings.

4th. Would it not be as well for the order, &c. for wages to reach the master to operate as a distringas? The refusal to pay wages according to order subjects the disobedient to imprisonment, "provided always, that no such order for imprisonment nor any order for imprisonment shall be made for any longer time than forty days."

This, it is supposed, intends each order; there may be several orders, each giving forty days.

Is the examination to be on oath?

"A. C." thus notices a complaint made by Mr. Gay three weeks since:—

The perusal of Mr. Gay's letter, in your last week's paper, brought to my recollection a case in which the hardship complained of was got rid of in a very simple manner. In the case alluded to, which took place at the Birmingham District Court, the solicitor attending on behalf of the bankrupt to oppose the Commissioner's adjudication took notes of the proceedings on the back of his brief, and upon being applied to to give them up, he appealed to the commissioner (Mr. Daniell), who decided that he was at liberty to retain them, as it was not to be expected that he should part with his brief, which was the only alternative.

CIRCUIT COMMISSIONERS' REPORT.

This document has made its appearance somewhat earlier than was anticipated. It will be found set out at length in another part of this day's Law Times.

It has been the evil fate of this Report to receive from the newspapers, almost without exception, ridicule instead of respect; its language has been laughed at, its propositions have been abused; but really, after reading it with care, we can find no just cause for the treatment it has received. The Commissioners appear to have performed the limited duty assigned to them with zeal and assiduity. They have not decided without anxious inquiry, full discussion, and long deliberation, and the conclusions at which they have arrived may boast this presumption in their favour, that of their many assailants, not one has ventured to suggest better plans.

It is easy enough to find fault with any proposition on any subject, and for this reason, that no human schemes can be perfect, and those the most wisely framed have a mixture of evil. Therefore, while a prudent man will always listen to objections with a view to obviate them if he can, he will not much respect an opposition which does not accompany its fault-finding with propositions shewing how the same end might be obtained more surely by other means. If its critics do not this, it may be presumed that they cannot, and that the hostility is the result not so much of superior wisdom which constructs, as of that shabby substitute for wisdom which delights in the more easy task of proving what nobody will deny, that a scheme is not perfect.

Such is the nature of the hostility experienced by the Report of the Circuit Commissioners. Its impugners have succeeded in proving that it is not perfect—that is all. They have utterly failed to shew that its propositions are not the best practicable under the circumstances, for they have not produced aught more practicable.

It seems to have been forgotten that the Commissioners had to deal with existing arrangements, and that their duty was limited to the improvement of these; to construct an entirely new judicial system was no part of their instructions. Doubtless, if they had been set to frame an entirely fresh scheme for the transaction of the legal business of the land, they might and they would have produced something far more complete than that which they have suggested. But being restricted to the improvement of existing arrangements, they have looked no further; and within the scope of their inquiry they have, as it appears, come to the wisest conclusions the case would permit.

The Commissioners laboured under another disadvantage, for which due allowance has not been made. The question whether the present strength of the judicial corps was sufficient for the due discharge of the legal business of the country, was intimately interwoven with that of the arrangements of the Terms and Circuits. The latter would materially depend upon the former, and to withdraw this question from consideration was to take away the foundation upon which the superstructure was to be erected. As the Commissioners were appointed only to inquire and advise, not to act, we cannot understand the asserted scruples of the Home Office towards the prerogatives of the Crown. But the mischief is done, and we must take the Report with a fair allowance for the disadvantages under which it was prepared, and, so viewing it, we cannot share the dissatisfaction expressed by our contemporaries;—why, we purpose to set forth next week, our contracted limits forbidding an investigation of each suggestion in the Report amid such a crowd of judgments claiming a place as of more immediate practical importance to our readers than any other legal topics.

THE SMALL DEBTS BILL.

This Bill was suddenly withdrawn from the Commons in consequence of the insertion of a penalty in one of the clauses, which infringed the privilege of the Commons as to the inception of money bills. The offensive matter has been expunged, and the Bill has again galloped through the Lords, and is sent down to the Commons, but, we are sorry to say, with all its other imperfections on its head, more especially that huge blot, the clause permitting other than counsel and attorneys to practise in the courts of insolvency and bankruptcy. Again we urge—we entreat the Law Societies to set their representatives upon this most dangerous and obnoxious clause, which, if passed, will, we venture to say, in ten years do more to degrade the Profession and plague the country with the pest of sham lawyers, than the combined efforts of the attorneys and the laws passed for their protection and respectability have sufficed to advance it. This clause is a virtual repeal of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The 2nd number of Registration Cases, comprising those of Michaelmas Term last; the 8th number of Practice Cases, completing the second part; and the 9th and 10th numbers of Magistrates' Cases, comprising those of Easter Term, have been issued during the last week.

The 7th number of Criminal Law Cases will be ready on Tuesday, and will contain the commencement of an Appendix of Precedents, which will, we trust, be found of great practical utility to the Profession.

The 8th number of Criminal Cases is in the press, completing Part II. which will be issued in time for the ensuing circuits.

The 11th and 12th numbers of Magistrates' Cases, the 9th of Practice Cases, and the 3rd of Registration Appeals are in the press.

Mr. Allnutt's edition of the new Orders in Chancery, for office use, was published on Saturday last. The price has been fixed at 3s. only, in boards. Members of the Verulam Society will of course obtain it at the usual reduction.

As being most immediately in request, the past week has been devoted to the preparation of the Registration Forms, of which the following are ready:—

Notice of Claim (Counties) . . price 4d. per dozen
Notice of Objection to Overseers (Counties) . . . . do.
Do. to parties (Counties) do.

The forms for boroughs will be ready in a few days.

In Conveyancing the following forms have been added to the list:—

Country Certificate of acknowledgment of a Married Woman (on parchment) each 1s.
Affidavit for do. where no provision is made (parchment) . . . . . . 1s.
Town Certificate, ditto . . . . . 1s.
Town Affidavit, ditto . . . . . . 1s.
Copies on paper, to be used as drafts of each of the above, price 1s. 6d. per doz.

In Insolvency there is now ready the entire series of twelve forms prescribed by the Debtors and Creditors Act, price 2s. per set, or 2s. per dozen of either form.

A complete list of the publications and forms of the Society is in the press, and will be sent to any applicant.

It should be observed that any quantity of the forms, from a dozen upwards, may be obtained by any solicitor in the country by order of any bookseller, provided he specify the number and name as stated in the advertisement; or if he send an order to the value of 2*l.* the parcel will be transmitted to him, carriage paid.

THE VERULAM REPORTS.

A correspondent referring to the proofs last week adduced of the advantages in direct pecuniary saving obtained by the members of the Society, alleges that the Reports were not cheaper than those of the Law Journal. This complaint has induced us to make a close calculation, and the following is the result:—

The price of the Law Journal is 3*l.* 4s. per annum; for this the purchasers obtain a volume averaging about 1,300 pages, each page consisting of 715 words upon the average.

By division it will be found that this gives 19 pages of 715 words for a shilling.

But the Verulam Reports give for a shilling 28 pages of 798 words in each, or just 12 pages in the whole more than the Law Journal, being considerably above one-half more in quantity of printed matter. In other words, the Verulam Reports supply for four shillings as much report as the Law Journal charges six shillings and sixpence for.

And there is this great advantage in the Verulam Reports, that any one series the practitioner wants may be obtained without the burden of purchasing all those he may not want. The country practitioner needs very few indeed of the Equity Reports. In the Verulam he can procure just those he requires—the Practice and the Conveyancing Cases, without being compelled to burden himself with the purchase of all the other cases that are to him entirely useless.

We trust these plain figures, which he may readily test, will remove the doubts of our correspondent, and of any who may have entertained a similar feeling.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

CONDITIONS OF SALE.

CONDITIONS REMEDIAL—COMPENSATORY.

FROM THE LAW REVIEW.

By this class of conditions it is usually stipulated, that where any error is discovered in the description or quantity of the estate, or in the vendor's interest therein, the contract shall not be vacated or avoided, but the purchaser shall accept a compensation, or be allowed an abatement in his purchase money.

Courts of Equity, acting on general principles, enforce the partial performance of contracts, even in the absence of special conditions of this nature, in cases where the subject of sale can be substantially conveyed to the purchaser: and the general doctrines on this subject will be found discussed at large in Sir Edward Sugden's Treatise on Vendors and Purchasers. But the principle of compensation is one of exceedingly difficult application, as will be seen by the various decisions relating to it. "There is no standard," says Sir Thomas Plumer, M. R. "by which to ascertain what is essential to a purchaser. The motives for purchasing real property are very different in different persons. Tastes, opinions, ages, create different views. Some particularity, some whim may have induced him to purchase. What is desirable to one is not so to another. One wants a wood for game, another desires it only as a beautiful object; one looks only to agriculture, another dislikes tithes. It therefore seems a little arbitrary to insist on a party taking compensation." (1 Madd. 167.) But where the contract of sale itself introduces the principle of compensation, its application, if practicable, becomes unavoidable: and in regard to the language of conditions of sale, one or two points are deserving of notice, as being not always within the contemplation of the persons by whom such conditions are usually framed.

(1.) In order to admit the principle of compensation, the errors contained in the particulars of sale must not be intentional.

This was decided by Lord Ellenborough, C. J. in the case of the Duke of Norfolk v. Worthy (2 Campb. 337. Abridged in Sugd. V. & P.), where the estate was described in the particulars as about one mile from Horsham. It turned out that the estate was between three and four miles from that place. Upon an action brought by the purchaser for recovery of the deposit, it was insisted that the effect of the misdescription was saved by the condition, which provided that no error or misstatement should vitiate the sale. But Lord Ellenborough said that, in cases of this sort, he should always require an ample and substantial performance of the particulars of sale, unless they were specifically qualified. Here there was a clause inserted, providing that an error in the description of the premises should not vitiate the sale, but an allowance should be made for it. This, he conceived, was meant to guard against unintentional errors, not to compel the purchaser to complete the contract if he had been designedly misled. His lordship, therefore, left it to the jury, whether this was merely an erroneous statement, or the misdescription was wilfully introduced to make the land appear more valuable from being in the neighbourhood of a borough town. In the former case the contract remained in force; but, in the latter case, the plaintiff was to be relieved from it, and was entitled to recover back his deposit. The plaintiff had a verdict, so that the jury, says Sir Edward Sugden, must have thought the misdescription fraudulent. Lord Tenterden, in a subsequent case, expressed his opinion that where the misrepresentation was of the essence of the subject of sale, it is immaterial whether the variance be wilful or not. (Sherwood v. Robins, 1 Mood. & Malk. 194.)

(2.) Misdescriptions in constituting the essence of the subject of sale will vitiate the contract, and exclude the principle of compensation.

In Flight v. Booth (1 Scott, 190; 1 Scott's N. C. 370), the Lord Chief Justice Tindal thus adverted to the state of the law relative to compensation for misdescriptions:—"It is extremely difficult to lay down from the decided cases any certain definite rule, which shall determine what misstatement or misdescription in the particulars shall justify a rescinding of the contract, and what shall be a ground of compensation only. All the cases concur in this, that, where the misstatement is wilful or designed, it amounts to fraud; and such fraud, upon general principles of law, avoids the contract altogether. But with respect to misstatements which stand clear of fraud, it is impossible to reconcile all the cases: some of them laying it down that no misstatements which originate in carelessness, however gross, shall avoid the contract, but shall form the subject of compensation only: (Duke of Norfolk v. Worthy, 1 Campb. 337; Wright v. Wilson, 1 M. & Rob. 207); whilst other cases lay down the rule, that a misdescription in a material point, although occasioned by negligence only, not by fraud, will vitiate the contract of sale. (Jones v. Edney, 3 Campb. 285; Waring v. Hoggart, Ry. & Mo. 40; Stewart v. Elliston, 1 Mer. 27.) In this state of discrepancy between the decided cases, we think it is at all events a safe rule to adopt, that where the misdescription, although not proceeding from fraud, is in a material and substantial point, so far affecting the subject matter of the contract, that it may reasonably be supposed that, but for such misdescription, the purchaser might never have entered into the contract at all, in such case the contract is avoided altogether, and the purchaser is not bound to resort to the clause of compensation. Under such a state of facts the purchaser may be considered as not having purchased the thing which was really the subject of sale."

(3.) Where a misdescription is not, from the nature of it, capable of pecuniary estimation, the principle of compensation cannot operate, and the contract will fail.

The case of the Duke of Norfolk v. Worthy (1 Campb. 337), already cited, is an example of this rule with respect to the quality of an estate,—the difference in value between a distance of one mile and another of four miles from a borough-town, being wholly incapable of estimation.

In Sherwood v. Robins (1 Mood. & Malk. 194), also, where there was a stipulation for compensation to the purchaser, in case of misdescription, the principle was found inapplicable. The plaintiff brought his action to recover from an auctioneer the deposit paid on a purchase at an auction of property described as "the reversion of 2,000*l.* after the death of a person aged 66," subject to a contingency defeating the reversion in case the party on whose death the reversion was expectant should leave children. It was proved that the party in question was only of the age of 64, and not of 66; and the jury having found that this misrepresentation was wilful, the plaintiff obtained a verdict. Lord Tenterden, C. J. then said that he thought the wilfulness of the misrepresentation immaterial, and proceeded thus—"In the case of a reversion, simply expectant on the death of an individual, if a mistake be made in his age, a compensation may be made under the condition, for the difference of value may be computed; but where there is an additional contingency, such as that of the birth of future children, in this case, the difference of age alters the likelihood of that contingency; and in such a case, therefore, no estimate can possibly be made of the difference of value between the thing described and the thing sold, and the contract itself must be vacated."

In Flight v. Booth (1 Scott, 190; 1 Scott's N. C. 370) the particulars of sale described a house in the Piazza of Covent-garden as calculated for an extensive business in the carpet, haberdashery, drapery, paper, floorcloth, upholstery, grocery, tea-trade, &c.; and stated that there was a clause in the lease prohibiting any offensive trades to be carried on upon the premises, and that "they cannot be let to a coffee-house-keeper or working hatter." On the production of the lease it was found that the prohibition extended to the trades of a "brewer, baker, sugar-baker, vintner, victualler, butcher, tripe-seller, poulterer, fishmonger, cheesemonger, fruiterer, herb-seller, coffee-house-keeper, distiller, dyer, brazier, smith, tinman, farrier, dealer in old iron, pipe-burner, tallow-chandler, soap-boiler, working hatter," or suffering the premises to be used as a shop or place for the sale of coals, potatoes, or any provisions whatsoever." There was also a clause prohibiting assignment of the premises during the last seven years of the term, without the consent, in writing, of the superior landlord. Upon these facts, the Court of Common Pleas held that the misdescription was so material, and the difference of value so uncertain and arbitrary, that recourse could not be had to the compensation clause, and consequently that the purchaser was entitled to rescind the contract and recover back his deposit.

In Dykes v. Blake (6 Scott. 320), the thirteenth lot was described in the particulars as "a first-rate building plot of freehold ground," having a frontage of eighty-six feet to the grove and ninety feet to the carriage sweep." The existence, however, of a right of way across the ground was suppressed; and the Court of Common Pleas held that the principle of compensation did not apply. "The purchaser," the Court said, "might fairly conclude, as the seller intended him to conclude, that he might purchase the whole lot for the purpose of building. But the direction of the way claimed would render the close altogether useless for the very purpose for which it was known to be purchased."

In White v. Cuddon (8 Cl. & Fin. 766) certain manors were described as manors in which the fines were arbitrary, while the annual amount of such fines

It appeared that the fines were ar[bitrary on] alienation; and the House of Lords held that the purchaser could not enforce specific [performance] with compensation, because there were [no] data by which the amount of it could be [ascertain]ed, for arbitrary fines are necessarily incapable of valuation.

A partial defect in the title to the estate is also not a subject of compensation. Thus in Wheatley v. Slade (4 Sim. 126); see also Dalby v. Pullen (3 Sim. 29), where a vendor entitled to nine-sixteenths of the fee-simple agreed to sell the entirety, the Vice-Chancellor of England refused to decree a specific performance with an abatement of the purchase money.

So also in Roffey v. Smallcross (4 Madd. 227), where under a decree a person purchased two-sevenths of an estate in one lot, and a good title was made to only one seventh, the purchaser was allowed to rescind the contract as to the whole of the lot.

Again, the difference between a freehold and a copyhold estate is incapable of estimation; and a purchaser cannot be compelled to accept a copyhold estate in lieu of a freehold (Twining v. Morrice, 3 Bro. C. C. 326, 331); though a vendor will perhaps be allowed time to procure an enfranchisement.

(4.) Where conditions of sale extend, as they sometimes do, to provide compensation, not only for the [vendor], but also for the purchaser, in case of misdirection or error, the effect of such conditions is particularly oppressive on the purchaser, as he may thus be rendered liable to the payment of a sum of money far beyond the limit of his own resources.

We are not aware of any case of this kind having come before the courts for decision upon the vendor's claim for compensation. But as an error in the particulars of sale necessarily originates with the vendor, we apprehend that he would have great difficulty in substantiating a claim of this nature in any case where the means of obtaining accuracy were within his command previously to the sale. In Tomkins v. White (3 Smith, 439), Lord Ellenborough said, "A little more fairness on the part of auctioneers in the framing of their particulars would avoid all these inconveniences. There is always a suppression of a fair description of the premises, or there is something stated which does not belong to them; and in favour of justice, considering how little knowledge the parties have of the thing sold, much more particularity and fairness might be expected of them. The particulars are in truth like the description in a policy of insurance, and the buyer knows nothing but what the party communicates."

III. Conditions Posterior.—Conditions of this class usually make provision for satisfaction to the vendor in case of the purchaser's non-fulfilment of his contract. It is generally stipulated that if the purchaser shall fail to comply with the conditions, the deposit shall be forfeited, and the proprietors be at liberty to resell the estate; and the deficiency, if any, by such sale, together with all charges attending the same, shall be made good by the defaulter; and Sir Edward Sugden advises that this condition should never be omitted. It forms a lien on the estate for the purchase money, &c. and if the purchaser do not comply with the conditions, the vendor may, by virtue of this stipulation, resell the estate, and recover the deficiency and charges from the purchaser. And if the money produced by the second sale exceed the original purchase money, the purchaser who has violated the agreement will not be entitled to the surplus, but the vendor himself will be entitled to retain it. (Sug. V. & P. 34, 7th edit.) Conditions posterior sometimes, however, go on to provide for stipulated damages to be mutually payable by either party making default in fulfilling the contract. But the construction of such a clause in the conditions seems to be attended with some doubt. In Reilly v. Jones (1 Bing. 302), on the sale of the lease of a public-house, there was a condition that law expenses, &c. should be paid by the parties in equal moieties, and that, either of them not fulfilling all and every part of the agreement, the party not fulfilling should pay unto the other the sum of 500*l.* "settled and fixed as liquidated damages;" and it was held by the Court of Common Pleas that the sum thus fixed was not a mere penalty to cover the actual damage, but was itself the measure of damages to be recovered on any breach of the agreement. In Randal v. Everest (1 Mood. & Malk. 41), however, Lord Tenterden took a different view of such condition. The agreement in that case contained the following clause: "If either of the parties shall neglect or refuse to comply with his part of the agreement, the party so refusing or neglecting shall pay to the other of them, on demand, the sum of 100*l.* hereby mutually agreed upon to be the damages ascertained and fixed on breach thereof." And his lordship, in summing up, said: "A great deal has been said about the different import of the terms penalty and stipulated damages; but I am of opinion, and shall always hold so until compelled by a higher authority to say otherwise, that whether the term penalty or liquidated damages be used in the agreement, a party who claims compensation for a default shall only be allowed to recover what damage he has really sustained. Whatever language the parties may choose to use, I am of opinion, in point of law, that a jury cannot be called upon to give more damage than the party has really sustained. I confine my opinion to contracts not under seal; instruments in that form may perhaps receive a different construction." The subject was again discussed in Crisdee v. Bolton (3 Carr. & P. 240, 243), before the Court of Common Pleas, when Best, C. J. said he could not subscribe to the doctrine of Lord Tenterden in Randal v. Everest. Sir Edward Sugden has noticed this diversity of judicial opinion; and remarks that whichever may be the correct opinion, a jury may, without proof of damage, give the whole sum named in the conditions. His observation applies also to a stipulation that the deposit shall be forfeited and belong to the seller as stipulated damages: and he adds, that, where the expenses of the resale, &c. are stipulated for, the measure of damages would be those expenses, &c. (1 V. & P. 66, 10th ed.)
